neys, Roberts filled in the blanks of the note over the name of Whitney for $3,000. Roberts was clearly acting as the agent of Whitney and in violation of his trust in filling in the note, but so long as it remained in his possession no one was injured by his action. When the note was filled in by Roberts the legal position of the parties was exactly the same as if Whitney himself, on July 14, 1915, had taken or sent to the bank a completely filled and signed note in the words of the instrument in suit. If on that day Whitney had handed the note to Roberts with instructions to charge the same to his personal account and to credit the proceeds to the Salt Company account, and Roberts had charged the note to the personal account and had abstracted $3,000 of the bank's funds, there could be no question as to the loss falling upon the appellant. With the $3,000 note in his possession as the agent of Whitney, Roberts did what neither Whitney himself, nor his agent, could have done. By virtue of his position as cashier of the bank, he placed the note in the bank's files and caused it to be charged to Whitney's personal account. It is claimed by the appellant that this act on the part of Roberts constituted a delivery of the note from Whitney to the bank. It is true that there was manual tradition of the note from Roberts as Whitney's agent to the bank's papers in violation of Roberts' duty to Whitney. If Roberts' activities had terminated at that point, however, there could be no doubt that the bank could not have recovered on the note, because there was no consideration at that time passing to Whitney or suffered by the bank. All further dealings with the note and with the bank's accounts must have been had by some employé or agent of the bank. The note being in possession of the bank, and the control of it having passed entirely from Whitney and his agent, Roberts, or some other employé of the bank, abstracted $3,000 of the bank's cash; the note being charged to the personal account of Whitney to hide the speculation. It was the bank's money which was stolen, and not Whitney's. The bank could not have recovered on the note in its possession before the theft, and it cannot recover on the note because of the theft of its own funds by its own officer or employé. If a merchant sends his bookkeeper to his bank with a check for $3,000 to be deposited, and the bookkeeper delivers the check to the bank's teller with instructions to deposit the proceeds to his employer's account, and the teller destroys the deposit slip and treats the check as a cash transaction, abstracting the money and not crediting the deposit account of the merchant, the loss, of course, would fall on the bank. The principles of law applicable to this transaction are so clear that citation of authority seems unnecessary. The judgment of the lower court was in accordance with these principles. The only questions open are whether or not the contentions of the appellant in its attack upon the findings are convincing.

[4, 5] The lower court found that the note in suit was never made, executed or delivered to the plaintiff by the defendant. On behalf of the appellant it is said there is no evidence to contradict the facts: (1) That the defendant signed the note; (2) that he left it with Roberts; (3) that on the date of the note and before its maturity Roberts placed the note in the possession and in the files of the plaintiff; (4) that the employés of the bank entered the note on the day of its date in regular course of business on the books of the bank; (5) that the note remained in the possession of the plaintiff until the trial. These facts correspond in detail with the statement above made. When Roberts placed the note in the files of the bank, there was manual tradition, but there was no delivery in legal effect. Roberts, as the cashier of the bank, when he placed the note in the bank's files, had no intention of giving either Whitney or the Salt Company credit for it. Manual tradition was not accepted by the bank in the ordinary course of business, and the delivery, without such acceptance was not effectual at law. 8 Corpus Juris, p. 210, § 340; 1 Daniels on Negotiable Instruments, § 63. If a customer manually delivers his note to a bank, there is no delivery within the meaning of the law until the bank, or some one acting for it, takes affirmative action, which may be a mere oral consent to advance the money represented by the note, the entry of the note in the books of the bank, and the transfer of proper credit, or perhaps some other act; but, until the affirmative act is taken, there is no acceptance of delivery by the bank. If conditions prescribed by the maker of the note are fraudulently disregarded by the bank, or its agent, there is no delivery binding the maker, for the reason that there is no meeting of minds. In this case it is contended that when Roberts, or some one acting under his direction for the bank, charged the note against the account of Whitney, that act constituted an affirmative act necessary to complete delivery; but the record shows that, while a charge was made against Whitney, credit was not given either to Whitney or to the Salt Company. Without such credit the delivery was neither complete nor binding.

[6] It is next contended that under section 1605 of the Civil Code the bank suffered a prejudice by reason of the note, in that Roberts, the bank's cashier, obtained $3,000 of the bank's funds on the strength of the note, and therefore that the second finding that the note was without consideration is not supported by the evidence. Manifestly the prejudice suffered by the bank was by reason of the theft, and not by reason of the note. If another customer of the bank whose account was overdrawn had called at the bank on July 14, 1915, and handed the cashier, Roberts, his note for $3,000, with instructions to charge him with the note and credit the proceeds to his commercial account, and Mr. Roberts had placed the note in the files of the bank, charged it to its maker, but instead of giving the customer credit, had himself abstracted the money, it could not be claimed that the maker of the note was liable thereon. This case presents the same situation.

[7] The appellant relies upon the presumption of consideration because the note was written, and cites cases to the effect that the burden of showing a want of consideration rests upon the party seeking to avoid it. The presumption cannot overcome the direct evidence in this case that neither Whitney nor the Salt Company received any benefit from the note. Williams v. Hasshagen, 166 Cal. 386, 137 Pac. 9.

[8] It is contended that, since Roberts was the agent of Whitney until the note passed into the possession of the bank, and since Roberts had access to the bank's cash, from which he abstracted $3,000, the agent of Whitney received the proceeds of the note. The evident answer to this contention is that Roberts was not the agent of Whitney in abstracting the money from the bank nor in receiving it as a thief. The large number of cases cited by the appellant simply establish the rule that, where one trusts another with commercial paper, either signed or unsigned, and the person trusted misapplies the funds received for such commercial paper, the loss falls on the trustor, because the wrongdoer was at all times his agent. Where the agent subsequently gets possession of the money of another principal, as Roberts did in this case, the cases relied upon by the appellant do not apply. For instance, the appellant cites Demarest v. Holdeman, 34 Ind. App. 685, 73 N. E. 714, as an illuminating case. The bank in question was located at the town of Elkhart, and one Kerstetter was its cashier. Finn, a depositor from the town of Goshen, handed Kerstetter $2,900 to be by him deposited in the bank to Finn's credit. Kerstetter did not deposit the money. It was sought to hold the bank for Kerstetter's defalcation. The court very properly decided that Finn did not intrust the money to Kerstetter as cashier, and that Kerstetter never received it as cashier, and therefore the bank never received it. In this case the facts are similar up to the point where Roberts placed the note in the bank's files, and thereafter, solely as the bank's cashier, caused the entries to be made in the bank's books and took from the bank's cash the money to which, as Whitney's agent, he could have had no access.

[9-11] The third finding was that no part of the principal or interest of the note had been paid, and "that no part of the principal sum or the interest on said promissory note is due or owing." On behalf of the appellant it is maintained that the last clause of the finding is a conclusion of law. This contention is correct, but, as there was no delivery of, nor consideration for, the note, the appellant is not prejudiced by the addition of a clause which is but surplusage. The findings must be construed together to uphold the judgment entered upon them. Flora v. Bimini Water Co., 161 Cal. 495, 119 Pac. 661.

It is further claimed that the blanket findings of the truth of the allegations of the defendant's separate defense in the cross-complaint were not supported by the evidence. The argument is based on the contention that the cashier of the bank as such had no power to make the original agreement with Whitney in regard to filling in the note and carrying it to the credit of the Salt Company when instructed by Whitney or his brother to do so, for the reason that express authority had never been given him by the bank to that end. Whitney testified that he had had similar transactions, where he had left signed blank notes with Roberts as cashier of the bank, and the bank had carried through the transactions as agreed upon between him and Roberts. This evidence was sufficient to support findings 4 and 5.

[12] It is sought to apply the rule that, where one of two innocent parties must suffer by the act of a third, the loss must fall upon the first negligent actor. The analysis of the facts of this case shows that the rule has no application here. As above stated, if Whitney himself had handed his filled in and signed note to Roberts in the bank with the instruction that Roberts should charge it to his personal account and give the credit to the Salt Company, it would have been an ordinary banking transaction, and would have implied no suggestion of negligence on the part of any one. This was exactly the position on July 14th, when Roberts put into the bank's files the fully filled in and signed note. His subsequent appropriation of $3,000 was not because of any negligence of Whitney, but by virtue of his connection with the bank.

[13] Many cases are cited to support the proposition that, where an agent receives notice, it is not imputed to the principal if the agent is engaged in committing an independent fraudulent act upon his own account. The contention is that the bank was not chargeable with any notice of the limited purpose to which the proceeds of the note could rightfully be applied, for the reason that the knowledge of its cashier, Roberts, on that matter was acquired by him in furtherance of his own fraudulent plan to rob the bank. The rule contended for is subject to this well-established exception: Where the agent is the sole representative of the principal in the transaction, and does not deal with the principal, or with any other agent acting for him, the general law of agency is still applicable, and the knowledge of the agent is imputed to the principal. In such a case it makes no difference that the agent has an opposing personal interest, or is engaged in a personal fraud against his principal. This exception to the rule is clearly recognized in the cases of McKenney v. Ellsworth, 165 Cal. 326, 329, 132 Pac. 75, L. R. A. 1916D, 127, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 261, and Williams v. Hasshagen, 166 Cal. 386, 393, 137 Pac. 9. The cases from other jurisdictions are collated, and the two rules contended for by the opposing parties to this action are distinguished in a note in 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 993. See, also, Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) § 1825.

[14] The facts of the instant case bring it within the exception to the rule above referred to. Roberts alone acted for the bank throughout the entire transaction. In furthering his own fraudulent designs, he dealt with no representative of the bank other than himself as its cashier. Here his knowledge as such must be imputed to the bank.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the note was not signed in the ordinary course of business. This, too, may be conceded. The method of signing and filling in the note has nothing to do with the case. It was signed by Whitney, it was filled in by his agent, and it was not until the note passed into the files of the bank that the bank had any interest in it.

[15, 16] The last contention of the appellant is that the finding that the defendant had done no acts and was guilty of no omission or conduct to estop him from denying the making, execution, and delivery of the note and alleging its want of consideration is a conclusion of law, since an estoppel is always a deduction or conclusion, and cases are cited to this effect. Cases are also cited to the proposition that it is the duty of the court to find upon all the material issues. Facts were set up in the answer to the cross-complaint from which it was claimed the defendant was estopped. The facts set up in the answer to the cross-complaint, however, were simply a detailed statement of the facts set up in the cross-complaint itself. "It is well settled that a judgment will not be reversed for failure to find upon an affirmative defense, if the record does not show that evidence was introduced in support thereof, and the same rule must obtain where the evidence introduced was not sufficient to support a finding in favor thereof if such finding had been made." Estate of Barclay, 152 Cal. 753, 758, 93 Pac. 1012, 1014. If finding 6 is not a sufficient finding of fact from the evidence, the court could only have enlarged upon the statement that the defendant had done no acts upon which the claim of estoppel could be based.

[17] The court found that the note was never delivered and that it "was and is entirely without and unsupported by consideration." Those findings control the judgment. Others are immaterial. It is incumbent upon the appellant to show not alone error, but injury from error. Sewell v. Price, 164 Cal. 265, 125 Pac. 407.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re PALOMARES' ESTATE. (L. A. 5722.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 20, 1918.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 20, 1918.)

1. BASTARDS ⇨6 — ILLEGITIMATE CHILD —
EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held insufficient to establish the essential element of adoption of illegitimate child by its father under Civ. Code, § 230, or under statutes in force prior to its enactment.

2. BASTARDS ⇨13 — ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF CHILD—STATUTE—RETROACTIVE EFFECT.

Civ. Code, § 230, as to adoption of illegitimate child by its father, does not apply to acts of adoption which occurred before its enactment.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨843(2)—REVIEW—
MATTERS NOT NECESSARY TO DECISION.

Where finding that appellant, petitioning for letters of administration, was not a child of deceased, and therefore has no interest in estate, must stand, it is unnecessary to consider other issues, appellant not being interested in condition of estate or amount of property subject to administration.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of Francisco Palomares, deceased. From an order denying petitions for letters of administration, Francisca Palomares de Alvarado appeals. Affirmed.

Willedd Andrews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert A. Todd, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Appellant, Francisca Palomares de Alvarado, petitioned for letters of administration in the estate of Francisco Palomares, deceased, alleging that he had died in 1882, leaving estate in the county of Los Angeles, and that she was an illegitimate child of said Francisco Palomares, adopted by him in compliance with the provisions of section 230 of the Civil Code. The petition was dated March 9, 1917. Porfirio R. Palomares, a son of Francisco, filed opposition to the appointment of petitioner, denying the averments regarding her paternity and adoption, and alleging that by probate proceedings instituted shortly after his father's death all of the property of the estate, amounting to less than $1,500, had been assigned to the minor children, whose right to it had been unquestioned for many years. There was also a request from certain persons, as heirs of Francisco Palomares, deceased, that Porfirio Palomares be appointed administrator of the estate. All of the matters of dispute between the contesting claimants were duly tried, and the court found that Francisca Palomares de Alvarado was not a child of Francisco Palomares, and not a party in interest; that Porfirio was a child and a party in interest; but that there was no property in the estate. Accordingly both petitions for letters of administration were denied. From that order Francisca Palomares de Alvarado has appealed.

Mrs. Alvarado testified that she was born in 1862 in San Jose, now known as Pomona. She introduced in evidence a certified copy of an entry in the baptismal register of the Catholic church at San Bernardino reciting that on the 7th day of January, 1862, Francisca, daughter of Francisco Palomares and Tonsoja Valdez, had been baptized, and that Luis Palomares and Josefa Palomares were the sponsors. She further stated that she did not remember meeting Francisco Palomares until she was eight or nine years old. She said that she knew of Mr. Palomares sending money on several occasions to aid in her education; that he had given her various small sums and had called her "daughter." At that time Mr. Palomares had married, and the mother of Francisca had become the wife of Mr. Ruiz. Mrs. Alvarado testified that she never visited the house of the Palomares family after the marriage of Mr. Palomares, and that she had no recollection of ever being at the home of his parents, where, as shown by the testimony of other witnesses, he lived prior to his marriage. She stated that she had always been known by the name of Francisca Palomares until she married Mr. Alvarado. During the years when she was attending school she lived with her mother and her stepfather. She also told of an occasion when Mr. Palomares introduced her as his daughter to a Mr. Soto.

Jesus Rivera testified that Francisco Palomares acknowledged Francisca as his daughter, and on several occasions sent small sums of money for her by Rivera, who was then a boy. An old man, named Pasqual Rubidoux, testified substantially to the same effect.

A. Rubidoux, a brother of the other witness, stated on the witness stand that Francisco Palomares acknowledged Francisca as his daughter, and that in 1864 or 1865, when Francisco was unmarried and living with his parents, he used to send witness to get the little girl and bring her to the ranch where he lived. On such occasions the child would sometimes be kept overnight.

Felicidad de Ruiz, mother of Mrs. Alvarado, testified that Francisco Palomares was the father of the child Francisca; that witness had caused the little one to be baptized as Francisca Palomares (the putative father not being present at the ceremony); that Mr. Palomares had sent various small sums of money for the use of the little girl while she was at school; that Francisco Palomares had often acknowledged the girl as his child; and that before his marriage he used to send for the child to be brought to the home of his parents, where he lived. Asked how many times Francisca was there, she said "probably two or three times," and regarding the length of the visits she testified that the little girl sometimes stayed all day and sometimes she would remain overnight.

[1, 2] The foregoing was substantially all the showing in favor of acknowledgment and adoption, and in contradiction thereof there was counter testimony that when the child registered at the public school under the name of Palomares, the reputed father, on being informed of such registry, denied that she was his child. It was in testimony that on other occasions he made similar denials, and neighbors and intimate friends testified that they never knew of the little girl being at the home of Francisco Palomares' parents. But even without this testimony in contradiction of that offered on behalf of Mrs. Alvarado there was a failure to establish the essential element of adoption in accordance with section 230 of the Civil Code, even if that statute were applicable; but the Code section has absolutely no force or effect in this belated proceeding, for the reason that substantially all of the supposed acts of adoption occurred before there was a section 230 of the Civil Code, or, indeed, any code at all. All of the alleged occasions of receiving the child into the family of Francisco Palomares were before the year 1870, and section 230, Civil Code, went into effect in 1873. That section is not retroactive. Estate of Pico, 52 Cal. 84. The history of the section was reviewed in Estate of Jessup, 81 Cal. 408-420, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594. In that opinion the previous statutes were also cited, and the court indicated the facts that prior to March 31, 1870, the adoption of an illegitimate child could only be accomplished by the acknowledgment of the child before a witness by a written instrument; and that from March 31, 1870, to January 1, 1873, such adoption might be by a writing or by receiving, treating, or publicly acknowledging such child as the offspring of the adopting parent. The acts of Palomares before 1873 utterly failed to measure up to the terms of either of the statutes in effect prior to that year. It follows that the court properly held that there was no adoption of the child Francisca by Mr. Palomares.

[3] Since the finding that Mrs. Alvarado was not a party in interest, because never adopted by Francisco Palomares, must stand, it is not necessary for this court to review the testimony offered upon the other issues. Not being an heir, she is not interested in the condition of the estate nor the amount of property, if any, subject to administration.

The order is affirmed.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Oscar W. Roberts against Curtis C. Colyear. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Appeal from order dismissed and judgment affirmed.

Edwin A. Meserve and Shirley E. Meserve, both of Los Angeles (J. D. Taggart, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Goodrich & Martinson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. [1] Judgment went for the plaintiff in this action, which was brought to recover the possession of real property in the city of Los Angeles, with damages for the withholding. The defendant appeals from the judgment. An appeal attempted to be taken from the order denying his motion for a new trial must be dismissed; notice having been filed after the amendment of 1915 to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Title to the land was originally in Frank and Anna Reiter, who had erected thereon an apartment house. The plaintiff claimed to have succeeded to the title of the Reiters by virtue of a sale made under a trust deed executed by them to secure a loan. The defendant asserted a right of possession based on a written contract between the Reiters and himself, executed and recorded before the making of the deed of trust.

This contract, after reciting that the Reiters are the owners of the apartment house then being constructed, and that the defendant is engaged in the furniture business, states the undertakings and agreements of the parties as follows: That the defendant shall supply the furniture, carpets, draperies, and other furnishings required; that, after the building is finished and ready for occupancy, the defendant "shall install a competent and reliable manager in said building for the purpose of running and operating said apartment house or hotel until said property can be leased or sold and said furniture and furnishings can be sold upon terms and conditions satisfactory to the parties hereto." There is a provision for fixing the "invoice price that the second party [Colyear] is to get for the furniture and furnishings." Then follows a clause stating that Colyear is to have the absolute control and management of the lodging house during the continuance of the agreement, but is to receive no compensation for operating the building; that the Reiters shall receive no rent, but the net receipts from the rentals of the rooms in the building shall be divided equally between the parties during the life of the agreement. If such rentals are insufficient to pay the expenses of the building, the loss is to be borne equally between the parties. Either party shall have the right to secure a tenant to purchase the furniture and to lease the building, the price to be received for the furniture to be at least equal to the "invoice price," and if any greater price is obtained, the surplus is to be equally divided between the parties. The Reiters are given the option to purchase the furniture at the invoice price at any time during the life of the agreement. It is declared that the contract shall continue in force and effect until the property is leased and the furniture sold, or the furniture purchased by the Reiters. The writing states that the agreement shall not be construed to constitute a partnership between the parties, it being their intention to make a contract for the sale of the furniture and the leasing of the real property. Finally, there is a clause to the effect that neither party shall have the right to assign the contract without the written consent of the other.

[2] Pursuant to this agreement, the defendant installed the furniture when the building was completed, and proceeded to operate the house through a manager of his selection. The trustee under the deed of trust sold the property, and the plaintiff became the purchaser at the sale. The trust deed contained the provision, common in such instruments, that recitals in the trustee's deed of default, publication of notice of sale, sale, and receipt of the purchase money shall be conclusive proof of the facts recited, as against the grantors, their heirs, and assigns, and all other persons. In proof of his allegation of ownership, the plaintiff offered in evidence a deed from the trustee containing such recitals. The defendant objected to the admission of this instrument, in the absence of independent proof that the debtors were, in fact, in default. The court overruled the objection. The ruling was correct. The trustee's deed was competent and sufficient evidence to show that the title of the Reiters had passed to the plaintiff. This was the only purpose of its introduction. It was not offered to cut off any prior rights of the defendant, if any he had. It is, no doubt, true that the provision of the trust deed declaring the effect of recitals, or the recitals when made, could not operate to affect the pre-existing interest of a third party claiming adversely to the trustors. Long v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 218; Galland v. Jackman, 26 Cal. 79, 85 Am. Dec. 172. The trustee's deed did not, by virtue of its recitals, carry to the grantee any better right or title than the trustors had when they executed the deed of trust. But the respondent does not claim any greater effect for it. The recitals are relied upon as binding the interest of the trustors. To this extent, at least, they are effective. Savings & Loan Soc. v. Deering, 66 Cal. 281, 5 Pac. 353; Caréy v. Brown, 62 Cal. 373; Mersfelder v. Spring, 139 Cal. 593, 73 Pac. 452. The deed containing them is admissible in an action of ejectment, as against the grantor or other person in possession, and no further evidence is necessary to show that the plaintiff has succeeded to such title and right of possession as the trustor had when he made his deed of trust. 3 Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) § 1830.

[3] The real question, then, is whether the contract between Colyear and the Reiters gave the former any estate or interest in the property itself. If he had no estate or right of possession as against the Reiters, he has no right to question the trustee's deed.

We think it clear that the contract vested in Colyear no estate or interest in the property. Certainly it did not by its terms purport to grant the premises or any interest therein. Nor did the agreement constitute a lease of the land and building. No rent is reserved, nor is any fixed or ascertainable term specified. There is not even an express stipulation that the defendant shall have possession of the premises. He is to have control and management of the house during the continuance of the agreement, but this control and management are to be exercised for the purposes contemplated by the parties, to wit, the operation, in their joint interest, of the furnished lodging house until such time as the Reiters can make a lease of the property and Colyear can make a satisfactory sale of his furniture. Until such sale and lease should be effected, the agreement of the parties was to run the apartment house on shares. They declare that it is not their intention to effect a partnership. But they were, at any rate, engaged in a joint venture. The arrangement for division of the gains and losses of operation did not make Colyear a tenant of the Reiters. Bernal v. Hovious, 17 Cal. 541, 79 Am. Dec. 147; Schneider v. Brown, 85 Cal. 205, 24 Pac. 715.

By the agreement Colyear was authorized to place his furniture in the house, and to leave it there until a sale should be effected. This was a mere personal covenant between the parties. It was not contemplated that, by giving to Colyear the privilege of placing his personal property in their building the Reiters were granting him an interest or estate, unlimited in duration, in their land. Colyear had no property right in the house, and no interest in the proceeds of any lease that might be made. His interest was simply in the furniture. The purpose of the contract, as declared by its own terms, was to enable the Reiters to dispose of their house, and Colyear to sell his furniture. Neither party acquired thereby any interest in the property of the other. The case is in no way analogous to those in which it has been held that one who has made expenditures on the faith of a license affecting the land of another may thereby acquire an irrevocable right. Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516, 83 Pac. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301, 7 Ann. Cas. 704; Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., 154 Cal. 785, 99 Pac. 179. In those cases the right claimed was in the nature of an easement, an interest in real property. Nothing of the kind appears in this case. The arrange here made was based on personal confidence, rather than any grant or exchange of interests in property. Each party relied on the promises of the other, and the remedy for any breach was to be sought in an action for damages. The court below held rightly that the appellant had shown no right of possession.

The appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an action to recover damages for alleged fraudulent acts and misrepresentations in connection with the sale of the Hershey Arms Hotel and its equipment in Los Angeles by the defendant to the plaintiff. The complaint is in two counts, which, while in the main identical, present somewhat different phases of the same transaction. The answer denies specifically all of the allegations of the complaint which refer to any fraudulent acts or misrepresentations on the part of the defendant. The case was tried before a jury, occupying several weeks, at the conclusion of which the jury rendered its verdict in the plaintiff's favor for the sum of $22,000 damages, for which judgment was accordingly entered by the court. The defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, whereupon she has taken and presents this appeal.

The transaction out of which this action arose may be briefly stated as follows: On May 6, 1913, the defendant gave to the plaintiff a written option to purchase all of the right, title, and interest of the defendant in the lease of the premises occupied by the Hershey Arms Hotel, together with the good will of its business and all of the furniture and equipment located in said hotel, except sundry articles belonging to guests of the hotel and also certain pieces of furniture, bric-a-brac, etc., which were to be enumerated on a list to be attached to said option, for the purchase price of $75,000, of which the sum of $25,000 was to be paid in cash at the time of the exercise of the option, $5,000 within 90 days thereafter, and the balance in three equal yearly payments. The list of furniture, etc., to be excepted from the terms of the option, was not attached thereto, as stated therein, but was furnished by the defendant within a few days after the option had been signed. The option was to be exercised on or before May 14, 1913, but this time was extended through delays on the part of the defendant in procuring the consent of the owner of the premises to a transfer of the lease, and through various other causes, until July 17, 1913, when the transaction was consummated in accordance with the terms of said option, and the plaintiff entered into possession of the premises. Within a short time thereafter, according to the averments of the plaintiff's complaint, she discovered that the defendant had, between the dates of the giving of said option and of its exercise, and without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent, removed large and valuable portions of the furniture and equipment of said hotel other than the articles specified in the option as excepted from its terms and had replaced some of such abstracted furniture and equipment with other articles of a cheaper and inferior grade, thereby causing a diminution in the value of the furniture and equipment in said hotel at the time of the plaintiff's exercise of her option and purchase thereof, of $26,893.89. The plaintiff also alleged that between the time of the giving of said option and its exercise the defendant had assured said plaintiff that none of the furniture or equipment of said hotel had been or would be removed or changed in any way during said time, with the exception of the said listed articles, which assurances the plaintiff had believed and relied upon in consummating the transaction, all of which representations the plaintiff alleged to have been false and made knowingly with intent to deceive and defraud. All of these averments the defendant denied.

Upon the trial of the cause a large amount of evidence was presented on both sides in relation to these averments and denials. The transcript on appeal, consisting of two large volumes, is in the main made up of this evidence, and the extended briefs of counsel are practically wholly devoted to recitals of this evidence and to discussions pro and con as to its weight, sufficiency, and effect. It would serve no useful purpose to attempt to review or discuss with anything of detail this mass of evidence or the comments of counsel thereon. It will be sufficient to say that we have examined the record with considerable care, and that from such examination we are satisfied that there is ample evidence to sustain the plaintiff's contention that between the date of the giving of the option in question and the consummation of the sale the defendant caused to be surreptitiously removed from the premises large amounts of rare and valuable furniture and bric-a-brac other than the articles specifically excepted from the terms of the option, and that in many cases other and cheaper articles were substituted for those so removed, with intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiff, and also that the defendant made the misrepresentations and indulged in the concealments to which the plaintiff and her witnesses testified, and that there is also ample evidence to justify the finding of the jury that by these acts and concealments the plaintiff was damaged to the extent of their verdict.

[1, 2] As to the defendant's contention that the parties were dealing at arm's length in the transaction, and that it was the plaintiff's duty to have informed herself at the time of the consummation of the transaction as to the identity and value of the furniture and equipment of the premises as compared with that existing when the option was given, we think the evidence abundantly shows that this would have been impossible, or at least extremely difficult, considering the vast variety and peculiar quality as to their sources and value of the furniture, equipment, and bric-a-brac in this large hotel, collected, as these had been, by the defendant from various quarters of the world and from all sorts of dealers in such rare and artistic articles as in the main constituted the most unique and valuable portion of the furniture and fittings of the ultra fashionable and exclusive hotel; and that therefore, in view of the defendant's intimate and in a sense exclusive information and knowledge as to the sources and value of this vast and varied assortment of articles constituting the furnishing and equipment of her hotel, and also in view of the very limited opportunity, and it may be said purposely limited opportunity, afforded the plaintiff to make such an investigation as would have led to a discovery of the truth respecting these matters, she was entitled to rely upon the defendant's representations and assurances as to the identity and value of the property she was about to purchase. There are other phases of the transaction which are discussed in the briefs, but we do not deem it necessary to refer to them further than to say that they arise out of conflicts in the evidence and of the divergent views of counsel as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence, all of which matters it was the province of the jury to determine. The appellant, in addition to her discussion of the evidence in the case, asserts that the court erred in giving or refusing certain instructions cited in her briefs. We have examined each of these instructions in the light of the whole body of the instructions, and we are satisfied that upon the whole the court instructed the jury fairly and fully as to the various legal phases of the case, and that no material prejudice was suffered by the defendant through any action of the court in relation to the instructions which she criticizes. We have also examined the record as to the alleged errors of the court in its rulings upon the admission or rejection of evidence. The defendant supports her criticism of these rulings with little argument and no authority. We do not discover in any of them any substantial or sufficient error to warrant a reversal of the case.

Finding no reversible error in this record, the judgment and order are affirmed.

WAITE v. WAITE. (L. A. 5992.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 17, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1161—CONFESSION OF ERROR—REVERSAL.

Where respondent confesses error and asks that judgment appealed from be reversed, and the point made for reversal in appellant's brief appears to be well based and to require reversal, judgment will be reversed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Action by Johnnie Waite against Thomas Waite. From the judgment rendered, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Marshall Stimson and Noel C. Edwards, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chas. S. Darden, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The respondent herein confesses error, and asks that the interlocutory judgment appealed from be reversed for the reason set forth in appellant's opening brief.

The point made for reversal in the appellant's opening brief appears to be well based and requires a reversal. The plaintiff should be allowed to amend her complaint in the lower court.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

RANDALL v. ALLEN et al. (Sac. 2588.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 2, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨233—RIGHTS OF SECOND PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE—RECORDATION OF DEED.

By statute, where the owner of land executes two conflicting instruments of conveyance, both for valuable consideration, the right of the second purchaser for value whose instrument is first recorded is superior, unless the second purchaser had notice of the existence of the rights of the first.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨244—POSSESSION AS NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit to foreclose by the mortgagee of a purchaser of land from a company which already had contracted to sell to others, who failed to record the contract, evidence held not to sustain finding that the mortgagee had no constructive notice of the first purchasers' claim through their possession.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨232(8)—SUCCESSIVE SALES—POSSESSION AS NOTICE.

Not every kind of possession in the first purchaser of land will constitute notice of his claim as against a second purchaser; for instance, if the land is part of a larger tract, all uninclosed, and one not the owner enters the particular piece under color of title and cultivates in the same manner as the adjoining portions of the tract, there is a possession adverse to the owner which will ripen into title in time, but will not constitute, in relation to a prospective purchaser, notice of latent equities or of rights under an unrecorded instrument.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨768—REVIEW—STATEMENTS IN BRIEFS.

The Supreme Court cannot consider statements of fact in the briefs not sustained by the record in reaching its decision.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨232(8)—SUCCESSIVE SALES—POSSESSION AS NOTICE.

Possession of land by a purchaser who has not recorded his conveyance, in order to establish notice of equities as against a second purchaser, must be open, notorious, exclusive, and visible, and not consistent with the record title.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Suit by Frances E. Randall against E. E. Allen and I. N. Allen, and another. From decree for plaintiff, defendants Allen appeal. Reversed.

T. E. Clark, of Visalia, for appellants.

Stahl & Sagles, of Los Angeles, and Williams & Rutan and A. W. Rutan, all of Santa Ana, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. On January 14, 1911, a corporation, by name the Eucalyptus Timber Company, being the owner of a certain quarter section of land in Kings county, contracted in writing to sell the south half of it to the appellants, I. N. and E. E. Allen. The purchase price was $4,800, of which $1,600 was paid at the time, $1,600 was to be paid November 1, 1912, and the remaining $1,600 November 1, 1913. The contract provided that the purchaser might take immediate possession.

The Allens neglected to record their contract, and by deed dated July 21, 1911, the Eucalyptus Timber Company conveyed the entire quarter section to one John S. Cornell, who in turn, and practically at the same time, mortgaged the property to the respondent Frances E. Randall for $4,000 to secure a loan for that amount made by her to Cornell. There is no reference in the mortgage, and, so far as appears, no reference in the deed by the Eucalyptus Company to Cornell to the prior contract of sale to the Allens of a part of the land.

Cornell was the assistant secretary of the Eucalyptus Timber Company, and as such had executed on its behalf the contract of sale to the Allens. He must have known of its existence. There is no clear explanation in the record of his conduct and that of the Eucalyptus Company in conveying and mortgaging the property without reference to the outstanding contract of sale. For the purposes of this appeal, however, we may take the view most favorable to the appellants and assume that the Eucalyptus Company and Cornell were guilty of the gross fraud of attempting to realize twice on the same piece of property. There is, however, no evidence that the respondent Mrs. Randall was a party to this fraud or that she did not make the loan on the property in the utmost innocence.

[1] The mortgage to Mrs. Randall is dated July 21, 1911. Its execution is acknowledged August 12, 1911, and it was recorded August 14, 1911, at which last date the contract of sale to the Allens was still unrecorded. The deed by the Eucalyptus Company to Cornell was also recorded either then or immediately prior. So far we have the simple and familiar case of the owner of real property executing two conflicting instruments affecting it, both for a valuable consideration and in favor of an innocent party, the latter of which instruments in date of execution is recorded before the former. The statutory rule in such cases is that the right of the second purchaser for value, whose instrument is first recorded, is superior, unless the second purchaser had notice of the existence of the rights of the first purchaser.

The mortgage debt was not paid when it became due, and Mrs. Randall brought this suit to foreclose her lien, making the Allens parties defendant. They answered, claiming their contract to be superior to the mortgage, and in particular alleging that immediately upon the making of the contract they had gone into the possession and occupation of the land and had continued in such possession and occupation ever since. The cause went to trial, and a decree of foreclosure against the Allens followed; the lower court finding that Mrs. Randall had neither actual nor constructive notice of the rights of the Allens at the time she took her mortgage. From this decree the Allens appeal.

It is apparent from the foregoing facts that the all-important and controlling point in the case was that of the possession of the Allens. There is nothing to substantiate a claim that Mrs. Randall had any knowledge of their unrecorded contract or any notice other than constructive notice by reason of their alleged possession. If they had such possession as would constitute or be presumptive evidence of constructive notice, their contract would be superior to the mortgage; otherwise it would not. Although this question as to the possession of the Allens was the controlling issue, yet we have the rather remarkable situation that the only evidence on the point in a transcript of 134 pages is the following two bits of testimony, the first by E. E. Allen, and the second by I. N. Allen:

"Q. How long was it after that that you took possession of that land? A. Why, right away.

"Q. Right away? A. Right away.

"Q. And have you been in possession of the land ever since? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Occupying and cultivating it?

"Mr. Williams: Well, let him—

"A. Yes, sir.

"The Court: Yes; he had better state what he has been doing with it; that's the better way.

"Mr. Clark: Q. You are in possession of the land at the present time and living on it? A. Yes, sir."

Again:

"Q. Well, with reference to the time when the contract of the Eucalyptus Timber Company was made with you selling you the land, when did you enter into possession of that land? A. Right away afterwards; within a few days; in the same month.

"Q. Been in possession of it ever since? A. Had possession of it ever since."

The trial court found, as we have stated, that Mrs. Randall did not have notice, and the foregoing being the only evidence on this point, the ultimate question for our decision is whether or not that finding can be sustained in view of this evidence.

[2] With considerable hesitation we have reached the conclusion that the finding cannot be sustained. It is not every kind of possession that is sufficient to constitute or establish notice. The testimony is very meager and unsatisfactory. Yet it would seem, standing by itself as it does, uncontradicted and unmodified, to have in it enough to show a possession of the requisite character. Epitomizing it, it is to the effect that the Allens, upon receiving their contract of purchase, took possession of the land, cultivated it, and have occupied and possessed it ever since. The statement that they were living on the property "at the present time" is immaterial. The critical time is not the present, but the time when Mrs. Randall took her mortgage. But the statement that the Allens were "occupying" the property, giving to that word its usual meaning, and we can hardly presume that it was used in any other sense in the testimony would seem to be sufficient to characterize the possession, particularly when coupled with the statement as to cultivation. Actual occupancy of the land, possessio pedis, has always been held, in the absence of qualifying circumstances, to be possession of a character sufficient to constitute or establish notice. We conclude, therefore, that the finding in question is not justified in the face of this evidence as the only evidence on the point, and that the judgment must be reversed. We are the more willing to reach this conclusion because it will give the parties an opportunity to put the facts fully before the court on a new trial so that a decision may be reached with some certainty that it accords with the actual facts of the case—something that is not possible in the present state of the record.

[3] It may be well for the guidance of the parties and court on a new trial to say something further as to the character of the possession that must be shown in order to subordinate Mrs. Randall's mortgage to the unrecorded contract of the Allens. As we have said, it is not every kind of possession that will constitute or establish notice. Possession which, if adverse to the owner, would ripen into title by virtue of the statute of limitations, may not be at all sufficient to constitute notice to the purchaser of the record title for value. If, for instance, the land is part of a larger tract, all of which is uninclosed, and one not the owner enters upon the particular piece under color of title and cultivates it in the same manner as the adjoining portions of the tract, there is a possession adverse to the real owner which if continued for the statutory period will ripen into title. But such possession will not constitute notice to a prospective purchaser of latent equities or of rights claimed under some unrecorded instrument. The reason for the difference lies in the difference of situation. The owner of the land, seeing the land cultivated, knows or should know whether or not he cultivated it, and, knowing that he did not, should be at once aware that some one is using and enjoying his property adversely. But to a prospective purchaser from the record owner of the whole tract there is nothing to indicate any difference in the possession of the particular piece from that of the balance of the tract.

[4] We have used the foregoing illustration because Mrs. Randall's counsel contend in their briefs that the foregoing are the facts in this case. We, of course, cannot consider statements of fact in the briefs, not sustained by the record, in arriving at a decision. We can consider them, however, to point the discussion.

A case presenting almost exactly the above facts, except that the strong factor in favor of the record purchaser that the land was part of the larger uninclosed tract was not present, is Cox v. Devinney, 65 N. J. Law, 389, 47 Atl. 569, wherein it was held the record purchaser was not charged with notice by a possession of the character indicated. The court states the reasons for the decision as follows:

"While the general rule is that possession of land is notice to a purchaser of the possessor's right therein, nevertheless such possession, to be effectual, as notice, must be not only exclusive and uninterrupted; it must also be open, notorious, and visible; i. e., it must indicate the occupant. The fact that lands are under cultivation does not, of itself, suggest that any one other than the reputed owner of the premises is in possession of them. In order to charge a purchaser with notice, the occupation must be of a character which would put a prudent person upon inquiry; it must indicate that someone other than he who appears by the record to be the owner has rights in the premises. Coleman v. Barklew, 3 Dutcher [27 N. J. Law] 357."

With the general principle of Cox v. Devinney (putting upon the statement that the possession "must indicate the occupant" the meaning which was undoubtedly intended, that it must indicate an occupant other than the record owner, not that it must indicate who such occupant is), the decisions of this state are in accord. Havens v. Dale, 18 Cal. 359; Fair v. Stevenot, 29 Cal. 486; Smith v. Yule, 31 Cal. 180, 89 Am. Dec. 167, supra; Taylor v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 67 Cal. 620; Dreyfus v. Hirt, 82 Cal. 621, 23 Pac. 193, supra; Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 471, 27 Pac. 356; Schumacker v. Truman, 134 Cal. 432, 66 Pac. 591.

[5] They may be summed up as holding that possession in order to be sufficient to establish notice must be open, notorious, exclusive, and visible, and not consistent with the record title. This is likewise the general rule in this country upon the point. 1 Jones on Mort. §§ 591, 593. Underlying these requirements is the idea that the circumstances relied on to establish constructive notice, whether they be possession or something else, must be such that a prudent man would be put upon inquiry.

Judgment reversed.

FERNALD v. EATON & SMITH.
(Civ. 2579.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 29, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐809(1)—INJURIES IN STREET FROM EXCAVATION—NEGLIGENCE.

It was the duty of one laying a conduit line under permit issued by board of public works to take such precautions with respect to the excavation as to avoid danger to users of the street, and where no substantial barrier was maintained around the excavation, as required by Ordinance of the City of San Francisco No. 860, approved June 26, 1903, the excavator was negligent.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐800(1)—INJURIES ON STREET FROM EXCAVATION—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Negligence of excavator of street to lay conduit line under permit issued by the board of public works of the city held the proximate cause of injury to a boy who fell into the excavation in crossing the street while going to meet his father.

3. TRIAL ⇐260(8)—INSTRUCTIONS—DUE CARE OF CHILD.

In an action for injuries to a boy when he fell into an excavation in the street, instructions held to cover sufficiently the subject of the boy's due care, rendering it unnecessary to instruct the jury in the particular terms proposed by defendant.

4. DAMAGES ⇐96—PERSONAL INJURIES.

In an action for injuries to a boy from falling into an excavation in a city street made by defendant in laying a conduit under permit, there is no definite measure of damages prescribed by law, but the amount is left to the sound discretion of the jury, considering all the circumstances.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by John Fernald, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, against Eaton & Smith, a copartnership. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

M. E. Van Dine, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Theodore A. Bell, of San Francisco (R. H. Morrow, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by defendant from an adverse judgment in an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff, a boy eight years of age, by falling into an excavation made by the defendant in Buchanan street, between Union and Green streets, in San Francisco; its motion for a new trial having been denied.

From the evidence introduced by the plaintiff it appears that just before the accident the plaintiff had been playing in the street near his home; that at about 6:30 o'clock he ran down the west side of Buchanan street to meet his father, returning home from work, and that upon reaching a point about the middle of the block he deflected his course and proceeded to cross the street, and while doing so fell into an unguarded excavation, sustaining the injuries complained of. The excavation had that day been made by the employes of the defendant in the digging of a trench for the purpose of laying a conduit line under a permit issued by the board of public works of the municipality.

[1] From a careful review of the record, it clearly appears that the evidence supports the verdict of the jury that the defendant was chargeable with negligence. In the first place, this negligence may be predicated upon its remissness in observing the terms of an ordinance of the city providing that—

"Every person, firm or corporation by whom, or under whose immediate direction or authority, either as principal, contractor or employer, any portion of any public street may be made dangerous, must erect, and so long as the danger may continue, maintain around that portion of such street so made dangerous, a good and substantial barrier and cause to be maintained at both ends of such barrier, during every night, from sunset to daylight, a lighted lantern." Ordinance No. 868, approved June 26, 1903.

Moreover, without regard to this ordinance, the plaintiff's evidence established negligence on the part of the defendant in disturbing the normal condition of the street and leaving it in a condition unsafe for persons using it. Upon digging the trench, it was the plain duty of the defendant to take such precautions with respect to the excavation made as to avoid danger to users of the street, but the evidence shows that it failed to maintain a substantial barrier around at least that part of the excavation into which the plaintiff fell, which omission of itself under the law established negligence on the part of the defendant.

[2] It is equally apparent, it seems to us, that this negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.

[3] In its instructions to the jury the court gave the following, among others:

"The question as to whether or not the plaintiff himself was guilty of negligence is one of fact to be determined by the jury from all the evidence in the case, taking into consideration the age and capacity of the plaintiff and all the other facts and circumstances appearing in the evidence. * * * You are further instructed that the law requires of a child suing for personal injury care and prudence equal to its capacity, and if you find from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff was a boy of ordinary intelligence and understanding for one of his years, and was aware that it was dangerous to play around an excavation of the character described by the testimony in this case, and knowing that fact and the hazards and dangers thereof, if any [and] in consequence, and did so continue to play, and was injured as a result, then your verdict will be for the defendant."

These instructions sufficiently covered this particular subject, rendering it unnecessary to instruct the jury thereon in the particular terms proposed by the defendant.

[4] Neither do we think that the damages assessed by the jury were excessive. The law prescribes no definite measure in such a case, but leaves the amount of damages to the sound discretion of the jury, taking into consideration all the circumstances attending the occurrence of the injury. In the present case such injury was quite severe, and we think the amount awarded to the plaintiff was not unreasonable.

The court fairly and fully instructed the jury on every phase of the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

MARTINEZ v. YANCEY. (Civ. 2471.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT  22(4)—QUANTUM MERUIT—BREACH OF PROMISE TO LEASE.

Where plaintiff, pursuant to oral offer made by defendant to lease him a tract of land for five years at a rental of one-half of the crop, entered upon and continued in possession until October of the first year, when defendant refused to execute a lease, but stated that plaintiff could take one-half of the crop as compensation, plaintiff's remedy, if any, was not an action in quantum meruit for work done, but for breach of promise to make lease, in which case the measure of damages under Civ. Code, § 3300, would be the amount which would compensate plaintiff for detriment proximately caused, or which would likely result from breach.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by Atanacio Martinez against M. D. Yancey. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Allan B. Campbell, Henry R. Holsinger, and Campbell & Holsinger, all of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Edward F. Brittan, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action in quantum meruit for work and labor alleged to have been performed by plaintiff for defendant at his special instance and request.

Judgment, from which plaintiff appeals, followed the granting of defendant's motion for nonsuit made at the close of plaintiff's evidence, which evidence tended to prove that in January, 1915, plaintiff, upon an oral offer made by defendant to lease to him a tract of land for a term of five years at a rental of one-half the crops produced thereon, entered upon and continued in possession thereof until October 12, 1915, at which time defendant refused to execute a written lease of the property. Thereupon plaintiff demanded payment for the work performed during the time he was in possession, to which defendant replied that as compensation he was entitled to and could take one-half of the crops produced during the year.

Appellant insists upon a reversal under the well-recognized rule that where one engaged in the performance of services under a contract is, by the wrongful act of the other party thereto, prevented from completing the work called for, he may treat the contract as at an end, and recover in quantum meruit for such part performance. Hart v. Buckley, 164 Cal. 160, 128 Pac. 29. As stated by Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 2, § 104, one may avail himself of an action upon quantum meruit, "where the contract, though partly performed, has been either abandoned by mutual consent, or rescinded and extinct by some act on the part of the defendant." It thus appears the rule is predicated upon the existence of a contract pursuant to the terms of which and prior to the extinguishment thereof the work has been done. In the instant case, however, plaintiff was not in possession of the property under and by virtue of a lease for five years or any lease other than for one year, as to which there was no repudiation or interference with his rights by defendant. Since concededly defendant never made a contract leasing the property to plaintiff for five years, there could be nothing done thereunder by plaintiff pursuant to its terms.

The wrong done plaintiff was in the refusal on the part of defendant to execute the lease in accordance with his oral promise, in rellance upon which plaintiff entered upon the property and farmed it for one season. Plaintiff's remedy (if any existed), was not an action in quantum meruit for work done thereunder, since, as we have seen, there was no contract under which he could have performed any work, but for a breach of the oral promise made by defendant to make the lease, in which case the measure of damages, as provided by section 5300 of the Civil Code, is the amount which would compensate him for the detriment proximately caused by such breach, or which would be likely to result therefrom. This was the theory upon which the trial court granted the motion for nonsuit, and, in doing so it did not err.

The judgment is affirmed.

IMPERIAL GAS ENGINE CO. v. AUTERI.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 24, 1919.)

1. SALES ⇨179(4)—SALE OF MACHINERY FOR PARTICULAR PURPOSE—DEFENSE TO ACTION FOR PRICE—FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

Where machinery is bought for a particular purpose, and proves by trial not to be adapted, but the purchaser retains it, an action for the price cannot be defeated on the plea of failure of consideration unless the evidence shows the machinery was valueless for any purpose.

2. SALES ⇨359(2)—DEFECT IN ENGINE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action for the price of a gasoline marine engine sold to a fisherman, evidence held sufficient to sustain the trial court's finding that the engine was so defective as to be wholly valueless for any purpose.

3. SALES ⇨168½(8)—ACTION FOR PRICE—DEFENSE OF FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

Where the seller of a gasoline marine engine to a fisherman never furnished and installed equipment as required by the contract, and the buyer's efforts in retaining the engine and using it were directed merely toward enforcing the proper fulfillment of the agreement, he was not precluded from defending an action for the price on the ground of total failure of consideration.

Action by the Imperial Gas Engine Company against Joe Auteri. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

I. F. Chapman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Leon E. Prescott, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff brought suit against defendant to recover the sum of $335 alleged to be due as the final payment for one eight horse power gasoline engine which plaintiff had installed in defendant's boat. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals.

Defendant, who is a fisherman by trade, desired to purchase a gasoline engine for a boat used in his business. He negotiated with plaintiff, and a contract was made for the sale by plaintiff and purchase by defendant of "One 8 H. P. (actual brake test) Imperial S/C gasoline engine," together with certain equipment. By the terms of the contract the engine was "guaranteed against defective material and workmanship for the period of one year." The terms of the sale were: $25 on placing of the order; $200 within three days from date of the contract; and the balance of $335 "on successful trial trip." Defendant made the first two payments as required by the contract, and the engine was installed by plaintiff in the boat.

During the negotiation leading to the making of the contract, the question arose concerning a suitable magneto as part of the equipment and its cost. The written contract merely specified a "magneto," without further description.

After the engine was installed in the boat it was given a trial trip lasting one hour and a half. It had been previously tested in the shops of the plaintiff. Defendant did not make the final payment due under the contract. After various offers looking to a settlement of the matter, including a proposal on the part of defendant to pay a sum of money, less than the balance due, and to allow plaintiff to take back the engine and all of its parts, defendant, in writing, rescinded the contract and offered to return to plaintiff company all the property delivered by it to defendant, and demanded return to him of the $225 paid on account of the contract. Plaintiff brought this action.

Defendant first set up in his answer failure of consideration of the contract, by reason of plaintiff's not having delivered a magneto of the value of $65. He alleged that the magneto actually installed with the engine was secondhand and of the value of about $3.50 and no more. Before the trial he amended his answer, setting out that the engine, pump, and other accessories were defectively and improperly made, and of defective and inferior material, and that they were not usable, were of no value, and that thereby he was damaged in a sum in excess of the amount claimed by plaintiff.

Plaintiff's witnesses testified that the trial trip was satisfactory, and that defendant was pleased with it and did not make any objection; that the engine was properly installed, and, "so far as they knew, the engine was in first-class running order and condition."

Defendant testified that on the day the boat was launched he informed plaintiff that the engine was defective. It stopped running the next day. After two or three days the pump leaked, water was thrown all over the engine and on the igniter, which caused the engine to frequently stop, leaving defendant on one occasion in a perilous position at sea. Defendant also testified that he made many and almost continuous complaints to plaintiff about the condition of the engine.

There is a conflict of testimony concerning the nature of these complaints. Plaintiff's witnesses testified that the contention between the parties was concerning the installation of the magneto as part of the equipment, and not over the improper installation of, workmanship, or materials in the engine. The president of the plaintiff company, however, testified, when asked if there ever had been any demand made by defendant on the firm to repair the engine, that he "thought something of that kind occurred." The vice president and secretary of the plaintiff company testified that he had "not seen the engine since it left the shop, but we have had lots of complaints from Mr. Auteri in the last six months or so." Correspondence passing between the attorneys of the respective parties does indicate that the question of the magneto entered largely into the complaints; it appearing that the one installed was a secondhand magneto, apparently taken from an automobile, whereas defendant claimed that he was to have been furnished a new one. It sufficiently appears, however, from all the testimony, including the correspondence, that from the first trial of the engine in the boat defendant informed plaintiff that it was defective and not suitable for any purpose.

A number of experts and several fishermen, who were familiar with gasoline engines and the use which defendant made of his boat testified, as a result of their examination and knowledge, concerning the defects of the engine installed therein. The substance of their testimony was that the pump on the engine was set out of line. The material in it was defective, which caused the bearings to wear, resulting in the leak hereinbefore referred to. Water fell on the flywheel and was thrown on the engine in the crank pit. It was liable to get on the igniter and cause the engine to stop. The pump knocked. The reverse gear handle was loose. The babbits were loose in the main bearing on the crank shaft. The mechanical experts testified that these defects would not manifest themselves in the time consumed by the so-called trial trip, but would show as soon as the parts commenced to wear. The experts also testified that these defects made it impossible and dangerous to use the engine for the purpose required by defendant, and that it was not a workable or usable engine.

The court found that the engine pump and accessories were defective in make, materials, and workmanship, and would not work, and that defendant was thereby prevented from using his boat for fishing and was damaged as alleged in the answer.

Plaintiff's principal contention upon this appeal is that defendant could not retain the engine after a knowledge of the defects and defeat the action for the purchase price upon the plea of failure of consideration, and in support thereof cites the following:

"Where machinery is bought for a certain purpose, and after its reception it proves, upon trial, not to be adapted to the purpose, but the purchaser nevertheless retains it, an action for the price cannot be defeated upon a plea of total failure of consideration, unless the evidence shows that the machinery was wholly valueless for any purpose." Hardee v. Carter, 94 Ga. 482, 19 S. E. 715.

[1, 2] This is, no doubt, a correct statement of the law, but we think the testimony was sufficient to support the finding of the trial court, the substance of which was that the engine was so defective as to be wholly valueless for any purpose. Appellant contends that there was an unreasonable delay on the part of defendant in the premises; that his use of the engine for a period of more than two months, during which period he knew of its defects, operated as an election to accept the engine and precluded him from claiming that it was not of the character provided in the contract.

"The rule is elementary as to the respective rights of the parties under an executory contract for the sale of personal property. As to the purchaser he is bound to accept the property, provided it conforms to the terms of the contract, or, if not according to the contract, he may reject or refuse to accept it. Although the property may not be of the quality or description contracted for, he may nevertheless, if he so elect, waive the defect, and acceptance of the property offered constitutes such a waiver. When personal property is tendered or delivered to a purchaser in fulfillment of a contract for the purchase thereof, the duty devolves upon him to make an examination of the property tendered or delivered for the purpose of determining whether it fills the contract, and if from such examination he finds it does not, he must promptly reject it. The duty of inspection for the purpose of determining whether the property complies with the contract must be exercised within a reasonable time, and what is a reasonable time depends upon the circumstances of each particular case." Jackson v. Porter Land & Water Co., 151 Cal. 39, 90 Pac. 125.

[3] From the record in this case it clearly appears that plaintiff never furnished and installed an engine and equipment as required by the contract with defendant, and that defendant's efforts were directed toward enforcing the proper fulfillment of the agreement. Without again referring to the testimony in the case at bar, we are of the opinion that every point made by appellant in support of its appeal must be decided adversely to it, on the authority of Sherman v. Ayers, 20 Cal. App. 733, 130 Pac. 163, which was in many ways identical with the case presented here.

The judgment is affirmed.

CRYSTAL PIER CO. v. SCHNEIDER et al.
(Civ. 2087.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⚡619 — FORFEITURE OF CHARTER—POWERS AND DUTIES OF DIRECTORS.

Under St. 1907, p. 746, § 10a, providing that on forfeiture of a corporate charter the directors then in office "are deemed to be trustees of the corporation and stockholders, * * * and have full powers to settle the affairs of the corporation," the title to all property that formerly belonged to the dead corporation is vested in those who were its stockholders at the time of its demise, the directors having power in trust, with right of possession of the property, to deal with and dispose of the property and settle the affairs of the corporation.

2. TRUSTS ⚡134, 191(1)—TITLE OF TRUSTEE—"POWERS IN TRUST"—DISTINGUISHED FROM "TRUST."

In every true trust legal title vests in the trustee, while powers in trust differ in that the legal title is vested, not in the trustee, but in a third person; but the donee of power in trust can convey the title and dispose of the property to or for the beneficiary.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Trust; Power in Trust.]

3. CORPORATIONS ⚡619 — FORFEITURE OF CHARTER—POWERS OF DIRECTORS.

Under St. 1907, p. 746, § 10a, the directors of a corporation which has forfeited its charter may execute the power of settling the affairs of the corporation without the interposition of any court.

4. CORPORATIONS ⚡619 — FORFEITURE OF CHARTER—POWERS OF DIRECTORS.

Under St. 1907, p. 746, § 10a, the directors of a corporation which has forfeited its charter have the power to sell the corporate assets under the power "to settle the affairs of the corporation."

5. CORPORATIONS ⚡619 — FORFEITURE OF CHARTER—SALES OF ASSETS BY DIRECTORS.

Under St. 1907, p. 746, § 10a, in the absence of fraud or collusion, the courts will not interfere with a sale by the directors of the assets of a corporation which has forfeited its charter, the directors having latitudinous discretion.

6. POWERS ⚡35 — POWERS OF SALE — CONFIRMATION BY COURT.

In the absence of fraud, collusion, or abuse of discretion, the donee of a power of sale under an instrument executed by a private person may exercise it without the interposition of any court whatever, confirmation by the court being unnecessary.

7. CORPORATIONS ⚡619 — FORFEITURE OF CHARTER—SALES OF ASSETS BY DIRECTORS.

Under St. 1907, p. 746, § 10a, directors of a corporation, which has forfeited its charter, have power to sell a lease and to transfer the right to all moneys unpaid thereon, thereby vesting in the purchaser the right to sue for the recovery of all rents due and unpaid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by the Crystal Pier Company, a corporation, against William Schneider and Jacob Fieber. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Swanwick and Swanwick & Donnelly, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Davis & Rush, of Los Angeles, for respondent Schneider.

J. T. Jones and Jones & Weller, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Fieber.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an appeal from the judgment following an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. The action was to recover rents alleged to be due from defendants as lessees under a written lease executed to them by one McDonald, as lessor.

The case as made by the complaint, in so far as is necessary to an understanding of the question presented, is as follows: McDonald, the original lessor, transferred the lease and the property therein described to the Hollister Avenue Pier Company, a California corporation. Thereafter the Hollister Avenue Pier Company forfeited its charter for nonpayment of the state license tax. Thereafter the persons who, at the date of the forfeiture, were the directors in office of the defunct corporation, as trustees of the corporation and its stockholders, "for the purpose of settling the affairs of said corporation, and for the benefit of the creditors and stockholders thereof, granted, conveyed and assigned to plaintiff * * * all interest in or to the lease hereinbefore set forth and the moneys unpaid thereon."

No brief has been filed on behalf of respondents. We are informed, however, by appellant's brief that the demurrer was sustained upon the theory that the assignment to plaintiff by the trustees of the defunct corporation transferred no right that plaintiff can assert in this action.

[1] The amendment of 1907 to the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 493; Stats. 1907, p. 746, § 10a) provides that upon the forfeiture of a corporate charter the directors then in office "are deemed to be trustees of the corporation and stockholders, * * * and have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation."

The title to property owned by a corporation at the date of its demise does not pass to the directors who become trustees to settle its affairs. The corporation having ceased to exist, it no longer is capable of holding title or possession. The property formerly owned by it belongs to the persons who were its stockholders at the time it ceased to be a corporation. The directors who, upon the dissolution, become trustees for the corporation and stockholders, receive by the forfeiture only what the statute gives them, and that is a power over the property, not the title, and the right of possession, for without the right of possession they could not settle the corporate affairs. Rossi v. Caire, 174 Cal. 74, 161 Pac. 1161. After forfeiture of the charter the situation, then, is this: The title to all property that formerly belonged to the dead corporation is vested in those who were its stockholders at the time of its demise; the trustees to settle the affairs of the corporation have in their possession property belonging to those who were stockholders at the date of the dissolution; they are bound to settle the affairs of the former owner, the defunct corporation; they have all the power to deal with and dispose of the property that is necessary to accomplish that object.

[2, 3] The "trustees," as the directors in office at the date of the forfeiture are designated by the statute, are the donees of a power in trust. Though the statute refers to the directors in office as "trustees," they are not trustees of a "trust," in any true sense of the term. In every true trust the legal title is vested in the trustee. Powers in trust differ from trusts in this, that in the case of such powers the legal title is vested, not in the trustee, but in a third person, but the donee of the power in trust can convey the title and dispose of the property to or for the beneficiaries. Pom. Eq. vol. 3, § 1002. The statute makes the persons whom it refers to as "trustees of the corporation and stockholders" the donees of a power "to settle the affairs of the corporation." They are trustees only in the sense that the donees of a power to be executed for the benefit of another, though they have no title, legal or equitable, hold the power in trust to be executed in the interest of the beneficiaries. For reasons presently to be stated, they may, as donees of such power in trust, execute the power without the interposition of any court.

[4, 5] Since the "affairs" of a defunct corporation, frequently exceedingly complex and multifarious, can seldom be settled without a sale or other disposition of at least some of the corporate assets, a power of sale necessarily is implied in the legislative grant of the power "to settle the affairs of the corporation." This power of sale should be exercised whenever necessary to serve the interests of the stockholders or creditors, though, as donees of such power, the persons referred to by the statute as "trustees" are vested with latitudinous discretion in determining whether a sale or other disposition of the corporate assets should be made—a discretion with which, in the absence of fraud or collusion, the courts will not interfere.

[6] The general rule is that, in the absence of fraud, collusion, or abuse of discretion, the donee of a power of sale under an instrument executed by a private person, as, for example, an executor to whom his testator has donated such a power, may exercise it without the interposition of any court whatever. No license or authority from, nor, in the absence of statutory requirement, confirmation by, any court is necessary. The hand of the donee of a power of sale under an instrument executed by a private individual may be arrested by the courts only when he fraudulently intends to sell in breach of his trust. 31 Cyc. 1183; Matthews v. Capshaw, 109 Tenn. 480, 72 S. W. 964, 97 Am. St. Rep. 854; Feaster v. Fagan, 135 Iowa, 633, 113 N. W. 479; Rice v. Coleman, 87 S. C. 342, 69 S. E. 516, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1016; Sharp v. Loupe, 120 Cal. 89, 52 Pac. 134, 586.

Subject to the universally recognized rule of construction that, in interpreting legislative grants, it should be held that nothing passes but what is granted, expressly or by necessary implication, in clear and explicit terms, we know of no reason why a legislative grant of a power of sale for the benefit of the stockholders and creditors of a dead corporation, any more than the donation of a power of sale by a private individual, should be subject to supervision by the courts, in the absence of some statute expressly providing therefor. As the court said in Rossi v. Caire, supra, speaking of the act that makes the directors in office trustees to settle the affairs of the dead corporation: "The obvious purpose of this statute * * * is, as was said in the Havemeyer Case [84 Cal. 362, 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192], above cited, 'to leave the whole matter of liquidation and distribution to the exclusive control of the directors of the corporation in office at the time of dissolution' [84 Cal. 365, 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192], and to render it unnecessary and improper for a court to intervene in their proceedings, or to supervise the sale in any particular, unless they are guilty of 'neglect of duty or abuse of power' [84 Cal. 367, 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192]."

[7] For these reasons we hold that the "trustees" for the defunct Hollister Avenue Pier Company had the power to sell the lease and to transfer the right to all moneys unpaid thereon—the transfer of a chose in action—thereby vesting in appellant the right to sue for the recovery of all rents due and unpaid.

Judgment reversed.

CAVASSO v. DOWNEY. (Civ. 2646.)

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM — 41 — CROSS-COMPLAINT — BREACH OF CONTRACT WITH ONE OTHER THAN DEFENDANT.

Where the partnership between plaintiff and defendant ceased when they organized a corporation to carry on their business, and the transaction whereby plaintiff got entirely out of the business was one for the purchase by defendant of plaintiff's interest in the company as represented by his stock, plaintiff's violation of the clause of the agreement whereby he bound himself not to compete with the company was a matter which could not be made the subject of a cross-complaint by defendant when sued by plaintiff on the notes given for his stock.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by I. L. Cavasso against J. C. Downey. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward R. Eliassen, of Oakland, for appellant.

M. J. Rutherford, of Oakland, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,000, with interest and costs of suit, in an action to recover upon a promissory note executed by the defendant to the plaintiff for said sum. The defendant in his answer admitted the execution of the note, but denied that the same had not been paid. He further averred that the consideration of the note had failed. He then proceeded to aver that the said plaintiff and himself had for some time prior to the making of said note been engaged in business as partners under the firm name of Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company, doing business in the city of Oakland; that on or about October 31, 1914, the plaintiff had sold all of his right, title, and interest in said business and the good will thereof to the defendant upon the express understanding and agreement that the said plaintiff would not engage in any business in competition with the said defendant within the city of Oakland for the period of five years; that the making of such agreement was part consideration for the purchase by the defendant of the plaintiff's interest in said firm and for the execution of said promissory note as a portion of the purchase price thereof; that in violation of said agreement the said plaintiff did engage in the same kind of business within said city of Oakland in competition with the said defendant, which acts on his part were fraudulent, and worked a failure of consideration for the note sued upon in this action. The defendant also presents the same facts in a cross-complaint, wherein he prays for an injunction preventing the plaintiff from continuing in business in competition with the cross-complainant, and for a decree requiring said plaintiff to deliver up said note for cancellation. The defendant has also a so-called cross-complaint for the recovery from plaintiff of the sum of $603.98 upon an assigned claim.

Upon the trial of the cause evidence was presented before the court showing that for some time prior to the 13th day of January, 1913, the plaintiff and the defendant had been copartners conducting a glass and paint business in the city of Oakland under the firm name of Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company, but that on or about the last-named date a corporation had been formed by them with the same name, and to which corporation they proceeded to transfer their and each of their interest in said business and in all of the properties thereof, each receiving therefor 380 shares of the capital stock of said corporation; that said corporation took over said business, and from time to time during the next year and a half or more held occasional directors' meetings in respect to the affairs of the business; that in the month of October, 1914, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written agreement by the terms of which it was recited that the parties thereto were stockholders in the aforesaid corporation, and that defendant was desirous of buying and the plaintiff of selling all of the latter's interest in the business thereof. It was therefore agreed that the defendant was to pay the sum of $6,000 for all of the interest of the plaintiff in the said corporation and business, "the said interest being represented by 380 shares of the capital stock of said corporation," which the plaintiff agreed for said consideration to transfer to the defendant. The note in question was a part of said consideration. The closing clause in said agreement reads as follows:

"It is further agreed by and between the parties hereto that the said party of the second part (plaintiff herein) will not engage in any business in competition with the Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company for a period of five years from the date hereof."

It further appeared upon the trial that a short time after the execution of said agreement the plaintiff did engage in business in the city of Oakland and in direct competition with said Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company. The trial court decided upon the whole evidence presented that the copartnership which had previously existed between the parties had been merged in the corporation formed in the month of January, 1913, and that the relation of copartners in respect to the business then taken over by such corporation did not continue thereafter, and that the transaction between the parties in October, 1914, was one in which the defendant purchased the stock of the plaintiff in said corporation, giving, among other things, the note in question as a part of the consideration therefor. We are satisfied from a reading of the record that the evidence fully justifies the findings of the court in this regard. The court further found that the plaintiff did embark in business in the city of Oakland in competition with the said corporation, but not in competition with the defendant, who since the organization of said corporation had not been engaged in such business on his own account. The court also upon sufficient evidence found against the defendant on his cross-complaint, and accordingly rendered judgment in the plaintiff's favor.

We find no error in the court's conclusions with respect to these matters. The evidence, as we have seen, justified the finding of the trial court that the partnership between the parties hereto ceased when the corporation was organized, and also justifies the finding that the transaction between the parties was one for the purchase by the defendant of the plaintiff's interest in said corporation as represented by the 380 shares of stock held by him therein. If these findings be upheld, it follows necessarily that the plaintiff's violation of the clause in said agreement by which he bound himself not to engage in business in competition with the Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company, a corporation, was a matter which could not be made the subject of a cross-complaint by the defendant in this action. This conclusion assumes the validity of the clause in question as an agreement in restraint of trade. It is urged by the respondent that this part of the agreement, not being by its terms limited as to the territory embraced in its operation, is void as contrary to the provisions of sections 1673 and 1674 of the Civil Code, citing Callahan v. Donnelly, 45 Cal. 152, 13 Am. Rep. 172, as authority for such contention. We do not, however, deem it necessary to dispose of this contention in view of our conclusions upon the other phases of the case.

Judgment affirmed.

Under Vrooman Act, § 12, as amended by St. 1913, pp. 408, 409, § 4, the time within which a summons must be returned in street assessment lien cases is governed by the Codes and laws of the state.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; W. A. Beasley, Judge.

Action by the Ransome-Crummey Company against Louis E. Wood and others. From an order dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fry & Jenkins, of San Jose, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff appeals from an order dismissing the action.

On the 10th day of June, 1914, plaintiff commenced an action against defendants by filing in the superior court of Santa Clara county its verified complaint to foreclose a certain street assessment lien. Summons was duly issued on the same day. No further proceedings were had in the cause until on June 8, 1917, when an amended complaint was filed. Thereafter, on the 26th day of June, 1917, the summons was filed in the action, together with an affidavit showing service thereof upon the defendant Louis E. Wood "on the ——— day of June, 1917."

On the same day, June 26th, there was filed on behalf of said defendant Louis E. Wood a notice of motion for an order dismissing the cause upon the ground that the summons in the action was not served or return thereon made within three years after the commencement thereof. The motion was noticed to be heard on the 29th day of June, at 10 a. m. of said day, or as soon as counsel could be heard (three days after its filing), and time of notice was shortened to one day by order of the judge of the court. On the same day the motion was filed, June 26th, the notice of motion and order shortening time were served on the attorney for plaintiff by deposit in the post office in San Jose; the office of plaintiff's attorney being in San Francisco.

The motion to dismiss was based on the affidavit of the defendant and the records in the case. According to the former, the defendant was not served with the summons until on the 25th day of June, 1917, and at no other time was any pleading or paper in the action ever served on him.

On the day, and at the time noticed, June 29th, the motion was regularly on the calendar of department one of the superior court of Santa Clara county, and was transferred to department three of said court, where, after due hearing, the court granted the motion and dismissed the action upon the grounds specified in the notice. Notice of the court's action was given to plaintiff by mail. It took no steps to have the order dismissing the action set aside, but contents itself with an appeal therefrom.

On the appeal it is contended that due notice of the motion to dismiss the action was not given appellant (plaintiff) in the court below; that the place where the motion was heard (department 3 of the said superior court) was not the place specified in the notice of motion; and that the time within which a summons must be returned in street assessment lien cases is governed by the provisions of the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147), which is incorporated as part and parcel of the freeholders' charter of the city of San Jose, and not by the provisions of the general law.

[1] We see nothing of merit in any of the points made. The failure of the plaintiff to cause the summons, with proof of service thereof, to be returned within three years after the commencement of the action, deprived the court of jurisdiction to take any other action than to dismiss the case. Section 581a, Code Civ. Proc.; Sharpstein v. Eells, 132 Cal. 507, 64 Pac. 1080; Modoc Land, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. 255, 60 Pac. 848; Davis v. Hart, 123 Cal. 384, 55 Pac. 1060; Bellingham Bay L. Co. v. Western A. Co., 35 Cal. App. 517-519, 170 Pac. 632. Such action "must be dismissed by the court * * * on its own motion." Section 581a, supra. The court can take such action without notice to either of the parties. On the record plaintiff was not entitled to notice.

[2] There is no merit in appellant's point as to the transfer of the case from one department of the trial court to another. The judges of the superior court in a particular county, for the more convenient dispatch of business or for any reason they may deem necessary, may make, assign, or transfer cases for trial to any one or more of the several departments of such court. Bell v. Peck, 104 Cal. 38, 37 Pac. 766. Appellant refers to no rule of court providing for any notice of such transfer, and none is required by the statute. Bell v. Peck, supra; Dusy v. Prudom, 95 Cal. 646, 30 Pac. 798; Eltzroth v. Ryan, 91 Cal. 587, 27 Pac. 932.

[3] Appellant fails to point out wherein the Vrooman Act conflicts with or creates any procedure governing the service of summons or the disposition of suits thereunder different from that provided by the Codes of the state. The act itself provides to the contrary. The right to institute suit to recover any assessment remaining unpaid, and to have a lien therefor adjudged against the premises assessed and the land sold thereunder, is given by section 12 of that act. It provides, in part:

"Suit may be brought in the superior court within whose jurisdiction the city is in which said work has been done, and in case any of the assessments are made against lots, portions of lots, or lands the owners of which cannot, with due diligence, be found, the service of summons in each of such actions may be had in such manner as is prescribed in the Codes and laws of this state. * * * In all suits now pending, or hereafter brought to recover street assessments, the proceedings therein shall be governed and regulated by the provisions of this act; and also, when not in conflict herewith, by the Codes of this state." Stats. 1913, pp. 408, 409, § 4.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

2. ACCOUNT STATED $\S$ 11—OMITTED ITEMS—ACTION.

An action in assumpsit will lie to recover for items of indebtedness omitted by mistake on a settlement of an account, if there is no other objection.

3. ACCOUNT STATED $\S$ 8—ITEMS NOT IN CONTEMPLATION OF PARTIES.

An account stated does not bar a recovery for items not within the contemplation of the parties when settlement was made, nor for such as were left open for further considerations.

4. ACCOUNT STATED $\S$ 11—MISTAKE.

Where an account has been adjusted by the parties, if any mistake is subsequently discovered, the whole account need not be opened and readjusted, but the mistake may be corrected, and the rights of the parties readjusted as to such mistake.

5. ACCOUNT STATED $\S$ 19(2) — ACTION ON OMITTED ITEMS—EVIDENCE.

In an action in assumpsit on an item of an account which was omitted by mistake in an accounting, admission in evidence of the details of the accounting was proper.

6. ASSIGNMENTS $\S$ 24(3) — CAUSES OF ACTION.

A cause of action on an item omitted by mistake on settlement of an account is not unassignable as action for fraud, but assignable under Civ. Code, § 954.

7. PAYMENT $\S$ 65(6)—ACTION FOR PRICE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for the price of goods, wares, or merchandise, the burden of proving payment is on the defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by H. R. White against E. O. Thompson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Everts & Ewing, of Fresno, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment of nonsuit and dismissal.

From the bill of exceptions the following facts appear:

The defendants, copartners, on or about June 20, 1915, ordered from the Santa Cruz Portland Cement Company a carload of cement of the value of $820.70, which is the subject-matter of the action, and agreed to pay for the same within a reasonable time after it was delivered to them. The cement company shipped the cement to the defendants at Visalia, as the consignees. On the 28th of June of the same year defendants wrote to the cement company, stating that they had delivered the cement to W. H. Worswick, Jr., and requested the cement company to give the defendants credit for the sale price of the cement, and forward the invoice covering it to said Worswick at Visalia. Believing that an arrangement had been made between Worswick and the defendants whereby Worswick had agreed to pay for the cement, and induced by this belief, the cement company gave Thompson Bros. credit for the cement, and the charge was then made by it against Worswick for the amount, which appears to have been his initial account with the company.

Some months later the defendants and the cement company had an accounting with each other, from which it appeared that there was a balance due to the defendants from the cement company in the sum of $412.57. At the request of defendants this credit balance on the books of the company was transferred to the credit of other parties, and the account was considered settled. Shortly thereafter the cement company learned for the first time that the defendants had merely loaned the cement in question to Worswick, and that it had all been returned by him to the defendants, and that there had never been any agreement between defendants and Worswick for the payment by him to the company.

Immediately upon ascertaining these facts, the cement company canceled the credit theretofore entered on its books in favor of defendants, likewise canceled the charge it had entered against Worswick, and re-entered the amount of $820.70 on its account against the defendant. After attempting to collect the amount, which defendants refused to pay, the cement company assigned and set over to the plaintiff the account, and plaintiff instituted this action. The complaint is in five counts, the first four being common counts, and the fifth setting out the facts substantially as they appear from the evidence. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, from which the foregoing facts appeared, the court granted defendants' motion for a nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. The action of the trial court in sustaining defendants' motion for a nonsuit is the sole assignment of error on appeal.

The action of the trial court in granting the nonsuit appears to have been based upon the contention of the defendants at the trial, the respondents here, that the evidence showed an account stated between the cement company and defendants existing on and after October 20, 1915, that, said account having been based on cross-items and settled by payment, it could be reopened and corrected only by an equitable action to surcharge, falsify, or correct, the account, and on the further ground that any claim based upon such an account stated was not assignable. It appears to us that the action at bar is merely a legal action in assumpsit to recover an item of indebtedness owing from defendants, to plaintiff's assignor, which was entirely omitted in the negotiation leading to the account stated.

[1] "While a suit to open, surcharge, or falsify an account is one proper for equitable jurisdiction, yet the rule seems to be established that a stated account need not be impeached by a direct suit brought for that purpose. It may be impeached for fraud or mistake either at law or in equity whenever it is brought forward as a defense or cause of action." 1 Corpus Juris, 715.

[2-4] An action in assumpsit will lie to recover for items of indebtedness omitted by mistake on a settlement of an account, if there is no other objection. Sage v. Hawley, 16 Conn. 106, 41 Am. Dec. 128; Perkins v. Hart, 11 Wheat. 237, 6 L. Ed. 463; Harman & Crockett v. Maddy Bros., 57 W. Va. 66, 49 S. E. 1009.

An account stated does not bar a recovery for items not within the contemplation of the parties when the settlement was made (Clarke v. Kelsey, 41 Neb. 766, 60 N. W. 138; Lawler v. Jennings, 18 Utah, 35, 55 Pac. 60), nor for those omitted by mistake, nor for such as were left open for further consideration (Waldron v. Evans, 1 Dak. 11, 46 N. W. 607). Parties to an account stated, signed by them, are not concluded by the presumption that it was a final settlement of all valid debts, debits, and credits, as to matters which were not contemplated by them, or which were not included in the settlement, though they existed at the time. Treacy v. Powers, 112 Minn. 226, 127 N. W. 936. Where an account has been adjusted by the parties, if any mistake is subsequently discovered, the whole account need not be opened and readjusted, but the mistake may be corrected and the rights of the parties readjusted as to such mistake. Carpenter v. Kent, 101 N. Y. 591, 5 N. E. 787.

[5] The action of the trial court in admitting evidence of the details of the transaction between the cement company and defendants was proper. In such actions the court may allow evidence of omissions and errors therein and find in accordance with the developed facts. Adams v. Gerig, 25 Cal. App. 638, 145 Pac. 106; and cases cited. See, also, McLelland v. East San Mateo Land Co., 166 Cal. 736, 137 Pac. 1145.

[6] Respondent takes the ground that the case at bar is a suit to surcharge, falsify, and correct an account stated, and that a cause of action for fraud is not assignable. As we view the action, it is rather one in assumpsit to recover on an existing obligation, which was omitted from the negotiations of the parties leading to the settlement of the account, and which remained an existing legal obligation, upon which the parties had an assignable cause of action.

The assignment by the cement company to plaintiff was of its account with, and claim and cause of action in the sum of $820.70 against, defendants. The claim of the cement company against the defendants was the legal right to collect, and reduce to possession, its claim for $820.70. This was a property right which had an existing value. By reason of the assignment, therefore, plaintiff acquired a substantial thing in action arising out of the obligation resting on the defendants to pay the cement company the amount due thereon, and one capable of being transferred by the owner. Section 954, Civ. Code.

[7] Respondent makes the point on appeal that it does not appear from the evidence that the amount sued for was not paid to the assignee; the only proof being the testimony of the auditor of the cement company:

"Our books show that there is still due, owing and unpaid by Thompson Bros. the sum of $820.70 on the two cars referred to."

The plaintiff was not required to prove negative allegations. The burden of proof of payment was on the defendants. Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 514, 62 Pac. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127.

The defendants' motion for nonsuit and dismissal should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed.

THROOP et al. v. WEAVER. (L. A. 4887.)

1. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 248 — VARIANCE FROM PLEADING—ACTION ON NOTE.

Where a cross-complaint does not mention by name the payee or payees described in the note, which plaintiffs are seeking to cancel, and which defendant is cross-complaining to recover on, there is no variance between such cross-complaint and the judgment, which describes payees of the note as "defendant W. C. W. and M. B. W.," whereas there is only one defendant.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 934(2)—PRESUMPTION—FINDING OF COURT BELOW—IDENTITY OF NOTE.

The appellate court must assume, in favor of the regularity of the judgment, that the note therein described is the one in regard to which the parties litigated.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 194(4)—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—WAIVER OF OBJECTION.

Where plaintiffs joined issue on the cross-complaint, and went to trial without demurrer or objection, they cannot raise the point that the cross-complaint does not state a cause of action, in that the cause of action pleaded is not a proper matter for a cross-complaint.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1154—JUDGMENT AGAINST ONE NOT A PARTY—MODIFICATION.

Where a plaintiff was not made a party to the cross-complaint, but judgment thereon was entered against her, trial court will be directed to modify the judgment by eliminating her from its effect.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by Mary E. Throop and others against W. C. Weaver. From judgment for defendant on his cross-complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Amended and affirmed.

Fleming, Graham & Graham, John L. Fleming, and W. S. Knott, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Sheldon Borden and George H. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Appeal by plaintiffs from the judgment.

Plaintiffs sued in equity to cancel a certain note which they alleged in their complaint they executed and delivered to the defendant on or about the 21st day of April, 1915. They averred that the principal amount was $1,060, bearing interest at 7 per cent. per annum, and becoming due on or before July 1, 1916. They alleged that the note was in negotiable form and, upon information and belief, averred that at the time of beginning of the action it was still in the possession and under the control of defendant. They also averred that said note and interest had been paid in full by plaintiffs; that defendant refused to surrender possession thereof; and they prayed for judgment that the note be canceled and surrendered to them.

Defendant answered, admitting the execution and delivery of the note, but denying that any part of it had been paid. Defendant also set up by way of cross-complaint a claim against the plaintiffs for a certain merchandise alleged to have been converted by them, and prayed judgment against the plaintiffs for $600. Plaintiffs did not demur to the cross-complaint, but answered, putting in issue the allegations thereof, and the cause was thereupon tried.

The court found that the promissory note described in paragraph 1 of the complaint, and not denied by the defendant, had not been paid in full or otherwise by the plaintiffs or any other person, and that no part of the interest had been paid. Upon the cross-complaint judgment was given in favor of the cross-complainant for the sum of $64, with interest thereon at the legal rate, and the equitable relief demanded in plaintiffs' bill was denied.

[1, 2] In the judgment the description of the note agrees in every particular with that given in the complaint, except that the payees are described as defendant, W. C. Weaver and Mary B. Weaver. Upon this supposed variance appellants argue that the promissory note described in the judgment is not the one referred to in any of the pleadings or in the findings of the court. This is an unworthy and frivolous contention. In the first place the complaint does not mention by name the payee or payees described in the note. Therefore, there is no necessary variance between the pleading and the judgment. Secondly, none of the testimony appears in the transcript, and it is elementary that this court must assume in favor of the regularity of the judgment that the note therein described is the one in regard to which the parties litigated.

[3] Appellants also make the point that the cross-complaint does not state a cause of action; their criticism really being that the cause of action pleaded is not a proper matter for cross-complaint. Conceding this to be true, they cannot here raise the point as they joined issue upon said cross-complaint and went to trial without demurrer or objection.

[4] Appellants also assert that the findings are outside of the issues in this respect, that while Mary E. Throop was not made a party to the cross-complaint, judgment thereon was entered against her. This contention is correct, but the objection to the judgment may be obviated by adding the words "except Mary E. Throop" after the word "plaintiffs," in the fourth line from the end of the said judgment, and by inserting the words "against plaintiffs" after the word "taxed," in the second line from the end of said judgment. The trial court is therefore directed to amend the judgment so that the closing paragraph will be as follows:

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said plaintiffs take nothing from the defendant, W. C. Weaver, and that the defendant, W. C. Weaver, have and recover of and from said plaintiffs, except Mary E. Throop, the sum of $68.73, together with said defendant's costs of suit herein incurred and expended, hereby taxed against plaintiffs at the sum of $44."

As so amended, the judgment is affirmed, with the costs of this appeal taxed against the plaintiffs Charles B. Throop and Richard A. Throop.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 761—SPECIFICATION OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

In the absence of a more specific argument, in the brief than that the rulings of the court assigned as error at law, commencing with folio 930, are clearly erroneous, but, as exceptions are numerous and testimony of witnesses must necessarily be read, further discussion will be refrained from, the court on appeal will not pass upon appellant's contention.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1032(1)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—WHO MUST SHOW.

The burden is upon appellant to show prejudicial error.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Emma G. Baker against the Smith-Booth-Usher Company. Judgment for defendants on their cross-complaint, and plaintiff, who was denied all relief, appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Coil, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hiatt & Selby and Edward M. Selby, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff purchased a pump from the defendant for $2,865, and paid $500 on account of the purchase price. The pump was installed by the defendant in a well dug by the plaintiff. Plaintiff claims that the pump failed to comply with both express and implied warranties, and brought this suit to recover from the defendant the amount of $500 theretofore paid by her on account of the purchase price and $700 expended by her in connection with the installation of the pump. The defendant, after denying the breach of warranty and by way of cross-complaint, sought to recover the balance of the purchase price of the pump. Judgment was rendered for the defendant for the balance of the purchase price and certain additional sums expended by the defendant in connection with the erection of the pump, and plaintiff was denied all relief. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

[1] The main question in the case is whether the pump failed because of imperfections in the well and in the water supply or in the pump. It was expressly agreed in the written contract for the purchase and installation of the pump:

That the respondent should not "be held liable for damage or any trouble caused by reason of well not being straight, caving in, giving up sand, gravel, chips or any substance other than clear water, or should the purchaser fail to develop from the well or wells the quantity of water required by the above-specified plant within suction distance from the location of the pump."

The trial court found as a fact:

That the well furnished by the plaintiff "did not give or furnish any supply of clear water whatever; that said well furnished by plaintiff did supply and give up large and excessive quantities of sand, gravel, clay, and substances other than clear water; that all damage to said machinery and trouble with or in the operation of said machinery was due to the large and extensive quantities of sand, gravel, clay, and substances other than clear water furnished and given up by said well; * * * that said defendant did replace all parts of said machinery claimed by said plaintiff to be defective and which were returned to defendant; that it is not true that any trouble in the operation of said plant was due to any fault in said machinery."

Appellant apparently contends that there was no substantial evidence to support this finding. There was a great deal of testimony as to the amount of sand in the water, and one of the respondent's witnesses testified that, while the load which the pump was designed to carry was 8,924 pounds, the actual load imposed upon it because of the presence of sand in large quantities in the water was 24,669 pounds. There was ample evidence to support this finding. There was also a finding that part of the trouble resulted from the fact that the well furnished by the plaintiff was not straight. This is supported by evidence that the couplings of the pump rod were worn almost through on one side and that a light lowered into the well disappeared after passing a point about 70 feet from the surface. It is claimed, however, that by reason of the fact that the respondent tested the well for straightness by lowering the three joints of pipe into said well before the machinery and pump was installed respondent waived the requirement that the well should be straight. Even if this be true, in view of the evidence and the finding of the court upon the issue concerning sand in the well and the finding that the difficulty with the pump arose from such facts, such waiver would be without avail to the appellant.

[2] Appellant stated in her brief:

"We feel that the several rulings of the court assigned as errors at law complained of, commencing with folio 930, are clearly erroneous, in view of the testimony offered in connection therewith. But, as these objections are numerous and cannot well be specifically pointed out without repeating at too great length the testimony of the several witnesses, which, as we have said before, must necessarily be carefully read, we have refrained from further discussion, but insist upon the consideration of same. Particular attention is directed to errors of the court in sustaining objections to questions asked of plaintiff's witness W. H. Robinson, who qualified as an expert."

[3] These specifications relate to rulings of the court upon the introduction of testimony. In the absence of more specific argument in the brief, we are not called upon to pass upon the appellant's contention. The burden is upon appellant to show prejudicial error. Kyle v. Craig, 125 Cal. 107, 57 Pac. 791; Gavin v. Gavin, 92 Cal. 292, 28 Pac. 567; Thomas v. Hacker, 178 Pac. 855.

COSTS $260(4)—APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN FOR MINORS—FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

Where a father, divorced from his deceased wife on the ground of extreme cruelty toward her and his children, was denied guardianship of such children after his wife's decease on the ground of his unfitness, the brother of the children's deceased mother being appointed

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Hauser, Judge.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of Joseph Youngblood, Eileen Lomonaco, and Francis Lomonaco, minors. From an order appointing J. A. Suraco, a brother of the deceased mother of the children, their guardian, and denying a petition by Frank Lomonaco, father of Eileen and Francis, for letters of guardianship, he appeals. Affirmed.

Fred W. Morrison and W. W. Butler, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ingall W. Bull and Harold Larson, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal by Frank Lomonaco, the father of Eileen Lomonaco and Francis Lomonaco, from an order appointing J. A. Suraco, a brother of the deceased mother of said children, their guardian, and denying appellant's petition for letters of guardianship. It appears from the evidence that Frank Lomonaco and the mother of said children were divorced by final decree June 20, 1913, upon the ground of extreme cruelty of the appellant toward his wife and toward his children. It was therein adjudicated that the appellant was not a fit and proper person to have the custody of his children. Their custody was awarded to the wife, with the privilege on the part of the appellant to visit his children once a week on Sunday; he being ordered to pay $25 a month for the support of said children. Appellant only visited his children once, and, although able so to do, failed and refused to pay the $25 a month for their support, paying altogether only $117 for their support. The mother of the children married Joseph Youngblood, and in March, 1917, died leaving an estate which, under the terms of the will, goes to Eileen and Francis Lomonaco and Joseph A. Youngblood, a child born to her by her second husband. In said will she appointed Joseph Youngblood, her second husband, guardian of her children.

Upon the trial of the guardianship proceedings, at which time the petition of the father appellant herein, and also of the stepfather, Joseph Youngblood, were considered, the court orally announced its conclusion that the father was not a fit and proper person to have the custody of his children, and announced that letters of guardianship would issue to the uncle, Joseph Suraco, who had not formally applied for such letters. The court thereupon adjourned, and immediately upon the judge leaving the courtroom appellant made an assault upon Joseph Suraco with a fruit knife; one cut extending almost the entire length of the left side of Suraco's face, another cut across his forehead, and another through the right side of his nose. He also attempted to stab Mrs. Suraco, the wife of Joseph Suraco, in the back. The court thereupon reopened the case and took testimony showing the nature and character of this assault.

We are at a loss to understand why the appellant seeks to have this court reverse the finding of the trial court that he is not a fit and proper custodian of his children, when he has himself so amply confirmed that decision by his own conduct immediately after the conclusion of the court had been announced. There is no merit in the appeal. The effect of this appeal has been to cause the guardian to become unnecessarily liable for attorney's fees.

The judgment is affirmed; respondent to have judgment for $100 for frivolous appeal.

1. WILLS ⚡865(4)—CONSTRUCTION—DISPOSITION OF RESIDUE.

Under will specifying that when all devisees and legatees were fully paid, residue should be divided among certain nephews and nieces, and if there were not enough assets to pay bequests, payment should be pro rata, the next clause declaring that all nephews and nieces were worthy, and that testator was mindful of all, where there was an excess of the estate over amounts bequeathed, the nephews and nieces mentioned by name did not take the whole of the residuary estate, which went to heirs at law, in view of testator's intention to divide equally.

3. WILLS ⚡384—PROBATE—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Petition to probate the will of A. J. Seay by James A. Marsh and another, wherein Ralph M. Seay and Ida Thurman objected to a judgment of partial distribution, and appeal. Affirmed.

Neighbours, Hoag & Burke, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. The controversy in this case arises upon partial distribution and involves a determination of the meaning of the following clause in the will, dated November 28, 1902:

"When all the devisees and legatees are fully paid what has been bequeathed to them the residue of my estate, if any, shall be divided as follows: To Ida Dowler $2,500.00, to Nannie Marsh, Jas. A. Marsh, $2,000.00, five hundred of which to be used to pay for dress, expenses and dues to the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the U. S. Mo. Commandery. To Maud Woodruff if married $100, if single $500—Minnie Carhart $100 (one hundred dollars); Sue E. Sanders $1,000.00 G. E. Marsh, $500.00 Ralph M. Seay upon the sole condition that he has entirely quit drinking for at least one year, $2,500.00, otherwise nothing except what has heretofore been given. Earl Seay if married $2,000, if single $1,000—W. J. Sigler if he shall be married $1,000, Lulu V. Sigler $2,500.00. If there are not enough assets to pay the above bequests, and yield funds to carry out and pay the trusts herein created, then they shall be paid pro rata."

Appellants claim that by this clause of the will it was intended to dispose of the remainder of the estate, and that inasmuch as the estate is worth $300,000 more than is otherwise disposed of by the will, this excess amount should be distributed among those mentioned in the above clause in proportion to the respective amounts they were to receive by said clause. The testator declared in the next clauses in his will:

"I will make my gifts without regard to the disposition of my property here made, which shall not be considered as advancements. I expect also to make some charitable and public donations which will consume more or less of my estate. I intend to do something for poor children in the way of an industrial school or orphans' home, and to contribute to a public library. But the town and the public must take hold and contribute."

The opening clause of the will contains the following recital:

"Having seventeen nieces and nephews all of whom are worthy—all of whom have heretofore received financial help from me in proportion to their needs the prodigal and unfortunate receiving more than the rest, and many of them being more or less needy. In making the following disposition of my property I am yet mindful of what I have done for them and they for me, and of their present and prospective needs."

[1] The trial court held that the remainder of the estate, after paying all legacies specified in the will, consisted of $300,000, and that as to such excess the will made no disposition, and distributed said amount equally to the 16 surviving nieces and nephews of the deceased. Any other construction would lead to a vast disproportion in the amounts received by the nieces and nephews, although the deceased declared that "all of whom are worthy." The construction contended for by appellants would increase the total legacies mentioned to the nieces and nephews in the clause under consideration from $11,700 to $311,700, while the remaining nieces and nephews get amounts ranging from $1,000 to $2,500. Two facts are patent from the will: First, the intention of the testator during his lifetime to dispose of all property, not devised or bequeathed in the will by gift and advancements; second, that the testator regarded his nephews and nieces with equal affection, and considered them equally entitled to his bounty, but not equally needy. There is no indication that these nieces and nephews in the clause under consideration were to be specially favored. On the contrary the amounts bequeathed them were to be abated pro rata if the estate was insufficient to pay the same in full, while the other legacies were to be paid in full. It is plain that the testator failed to make any provision for the contingency of there being an excess over the amounts therein bequeathed, and that such excess must be distributed to the heirs at law.

[2, 3] It is claimed that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence a so-called rough draft of a will which was found in the same envelope with the will that was offered for probate and some oral evidence in connection therewith. This will was received over the objections of appellants, but with the understanding that the court would reconsider its admissibility on a motion to strike out, the court expressing a doubt as to its admissibility. Subsequently all the oral evidence was stricken out. It does not appear from the briefs whether or not a motion was made to strike out this draft of a will. However that may be, the interpretation of the will is a matter of law, to be determined from the language used in the will, and the facts and circumstances in proof in the case, and upon the record we can determine the proper interpretation without reference to such rough draft of a will. Hence the error in admitting the rough draft was harmless. The judgment is affirmed.

STRONG v. SULLIVAN. (L. A. 4903.)

1. NUISANCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 80—OBSTRUCTION IN FRONT OF PROPERTY—INJUNCTION—LICENSING BY CITY.

The owner of premises leased to a restaurant keeper was entitled to injunctive relief against defendant, who, at night, under license from the city, maintained a portable lunch wagon directly in front of the owner's premises so as to obstruct and interfere with ingress and egress; such wagon despite the license by the city constituted a public nuisance which might be enjoined.

2. NUISANCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 73—ENJOINING—LACHES—CONTINUING CHARACTER OF NUISANCE.

Where the proprietor of a portable lunch wagon under license from the city obstructed at night the street in front of leased restaurant premises for more than four years, thus committing a public nuisance, the owner of the premises was not barred from injunctive relief either by the statute of limitations or by laches; the nuisance having been continuing and committed daily, and no right arising from prescription.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Frank R. Strong against J. Sullivan. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Francis P. Harrington, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment whereby he was denied injunctive relief against defendant, who each night between the hours of 6 p. m. and 2 a. m. (approximately) maintains and transacts a restaurant business upon a public street of the city of Los Angeles, in the vicinity of plaintiff's building.

The findings clearly disclose the facts, while the findings, conclusions of law, and judgment set forth the theory upon which the learned chancellor acted. Plaintiff has owned for many years the property at the southwest corner of Seventh street and Central avenue, two public streets of the city of Los Angeles. Upon this property is a two-story building occupied by tenants, the upper floors being devoted to hotel purposes and the lower to business pursuits of various kinds. One of the tenants on the ground floor, occupying a room facing on Seventh street, conducts a restaurant.

Among the findings are the following:

"That for a period of more than 4 years last past, defendant, J. Sullivan, and his predecessors sor, have on every evening, at about the hour of 6 o'clock p. m., brought a portable lunch wagon and lunch counter to that portion of Seventh street directly in front of the premises of the plaintiff, and a few feet east of that portion of the building occupied by a restaurant and café; that said defendant has kept and maintained said portable lunch wagon and lunch counter at said point until about the hour of 2 o'clock a. m. the next morning; * * * that it is true that said lunch counter and lunch wagon obstructs the free use of the public street in front of the plaintiff's premises; that it is true that it interferes with the right of ingress and egress of plaintiff and of his tenants to and from his premises; that it is true that said lunch wagon and lunch counter occupies a portion of the public street, and it occupies the same under a license from the city of Los Angeles held by defendant J. Sullivan; that it is true that it does not pay any rent for the space so occupied; that it is true that said lunch wagon and lunch counter does enter into direct competition with a tenant of the plaintiff engaged in the restaurant business, who is compelled to pay rent to the plaintiff."

At the trial the defendant introduced in evidence a certain license of the city of Los Angeles granting him permission to transact "the business of Lunch Wagon" in conformity with the provisions of ordinance No. 20000 (New Series). He also presented a permit issued by the health commissioner of the city to conduct a lunch wagon at No. 1244 East Seventh street. This purports to be under the provisions of "Ordinance No. 25035 (New Series)"; but, as the terms of that by-law are not set forth in the record, we shall assume that the permit merely indicates that the place described and the manner of conducting the business are not dangerous to public health.

Ordinance No. 20000 (New Series) is a license ordinance of the usual type providing for licensing, regulating, and carrying on certain professions, trades, callings, and occupations. Section 76 of said ordinance fixes the amount of license which must be paid by those engaged in the business of selling certain enumerated articles "or edibles of any description from wagons, hand carts, stands, trays or baskets, upon the public streets."

[1] Obviously, the court refused relief to plaintiff under the belief that a license under the ordinance above cited was a permission from the city to defendant to establish a nightly "stand" or place of business in any public street without regard to the surrounding conditions. This view was erroneous, and we are of the opinion that the ordinance and the license introduced in evidence failed to sustain the finding that the business was conducted at that place under license and the conclusion that plaintiff was therefore not entitled to the relief for which he prayed. The finding that defendant's wagon obstructed the ingress and egress of plaintiff and his tenants to and from his property and interfered with the free use of the public street in front of his building was equivalent to a holding that defendant was maintaining a public nuisance which was especially injurious to plaintiff and which, therefore, might be enjoined at his suit, because any injury to the use of the street which impairs plaintiff's private easements in the street in front of and adjacent to his lot amounts to an injury giving plaintiff, as an abutting owner, the right to maintain an action for damages or for an injunction. The rights of such an owner and his remedies are learnedly discussed by Mr. Justice Shaw in the opinion in Williams v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 592, 89 Pac. 330. It is true that in the case cited it was held that the refusal to grant an injunction pendente lite must be upheld, because the court was charged with discretion to determine preliminarily whether or not the detriment to plaintiff came within the rule de minimis. In the case at bar, however, there was no holding of negligible damage, but the court's action was based entirely upon the supposed efficacy of the license from the city. Therefore the Williams Case is authority which sustains plaintiff's theory. Essentially the same doctrine is declared in McLean v. Llewellyn Iron Works, 2 Cal. App. 346, 83 Pac. 1082, 1085; 28 Cyc. 902; 20 Ruling Case Law, 460 (Nuisances, § 77).

The power of municipalities to grant privileges for the use of streets is discussed in 28 Cyc. at page 870 et seq. After discussing the general rule, the text contains illustrations, some of which are stated on pages 872, 873, as follows:

"And a municipality has no power to grant to an abutting owner the right to so construct this building as to encroach on the street, nor to use the streets for stands or booths for business purposes, nor to use a street for the erection of private scales; nor has the municipality the power to grant the right to use a part of a street for hack stands, or to authorize awnings obstructing the public use of the way."

It is clear that upon the principles announced above the plaintiff was entitled to the relief demanded.

[2] Nor does the finding that the street in front of plaintiff's property had been used every night by defendant and his predecessor for more than four years amount either to a finding of laches or of the operation of the statute of limitations against plaintiff. This nuisance was not of a permanent character, but was a continuing one. It involved no permanent structure, but was committed daily by the bringing of defendant's ambulatory café in front of plaintiff's building. No lapse of time can legalize a public nuisance and a prescriptive right cannot be maintained against a public nuisance where the action is brought by a citizen who has suffered special injury in consequence thereof. Bowen v. Wendt, 103 Cal. 236, 37 Pac. 149. No right by prescription may be acquired to obstruct a sidewalk. Ex parte Taylor, 87 Cal. 91, 25 Pac. 258. Nor to maintain any other sort of nuisance. Cloverdale v. Smith, 128 Cal. 230, 60 Pac. 851. In 29 Cyc. p. 1261, the rule with reference to an action for damages for nuisance is thus correctly stated:

"Where the nuisance is of a permanent character, the period runs from the time when the injury was done or the structure complained of erected; but, where the nuisance is a continuing one, an action for injuries from the continuance may be brought after the lapse of more than the statutory period since the creation of the nuisance."

We are convinced that plaintiff was not prevented, either by the statute of limitations or by laches, under the probative facts found, from maintaining his action.

The judgment is reversed.

KELLNER v. TRAVELERS' INS. CO.,
HARTFORD, CONN. (L. A. 4953.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1056(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on an accident policy, plaintiff claiming death was caused by fall from tripping over a rug, a ruling of the court denying formal admission of the rug and a place on the files of the court could not have been prejudicial, where the whole theory of the defense was that the fall was a fact, but that other causes existing at the time contributed to the death.

2. TRIAL ⇨232(4) — ARGUMENT — INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action on an accident policy for death, where doctor testified, "They said he stumbled over a rug," court did not err in instructing the jury to pay no attention to plaintiff's counsel's understanding that members of deceased's family had said to the doctor in the presence of the deceased that the latter had stumbled over a rug, where there was no other evidence to show that the statement made to the doctor was in the presence of deceased.

3. INSURANCE ⇨665(5) — ACCIDENT INSURANCE—CAUSE OF DEATH—EVIDENCE.

In an action on an accident policy for death, evidence held to warrant a finding that death resulted wholly or partly from pathological condition of deceased.

4. INSURANCE ⇨454—ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

In an action on an accident policy, under which insurer was not responsible for the result of injuries resulting wholly or partly from disease in any form, the court properly refused to instruct that, if the jury believed a fall was the "sole and only direct cause" of death, they must find for plaintiff, notwithstanding a further belief that deceased had a hernia, provided they should further find that deceased "would not have died at the time, under the circumstances, and in the manner he did die had it not been for said accident and fall," as under such a policy it is not true that every accident, which shortens an insured's life may be the basis for recovery.

5. INSURANCE ⇨646(6) — ACCIDENT INSURANCE—CAUSE OF DEATH—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action on an accident policy under which insurer was not responsible for the result of injuries resulting wholly or partly from disease in any form, the absence of disease contributing to death was as much a part of the plaintiff's case as an affirmative showing of the occurrence of an accident producing injury and of death following such injury, although insurer alleged in its answer that deceased was at the time of the accident in a diseased condition, and that disease proximately contributed to his death.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Mary W. Kellner against the Travelers' Insurance Company, Hartford, Conn. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Hindman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, and Walter K. Tuller, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued to recover for the death of her husband under a policy of accident insurance issued by defendant. Trial by jury resulted in a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals therefrom.

The policy contained a provision that defendant would pay $10,000 for death of the assured "resulting from bodily injuries, effected directly and independently of all other causes, through external, violent, and accidental means." There was a further stipulation that, if any loss should be caused by hernia, the company would pay one-half of the amount. There was another provision in the policy as follows:

"This insurance shall not cover injuries, fatal or nonfatal, resulting wholly or partly from * * * disease in any form."

The complaint contained an averment that on a specified day Mr. Kellner's feet accidentally slipped from under him, causing him to fall violently to the floor of a room in his home, and that the accident and fall, "independent of all other causes," produced the death of Ernest F. Kellner.

Regarding the fall, Mrs. Kellner testified, in part, as follows:

"I was writing letters that Mr. Kellner dictated to me, and he said he wanted to do a little writing for himself, and he took the ink bottle and writing materials and went into another room, where the light was better for him, to do some writing for himself, and as he went in there he fell, stumbled on the rug and fell. I was in the room that he left, but when I heard the fall I started; when I got into the other room he was just getting up. I found the things on the floor, and the ink on the floor, and of course I first wanted to see his clothes, and wipe the ink from his clothes, but there was none on his clothes, but it was all over the floor and on the rug."

[1] The rug was offered in evidence and refused a place on the files of the court, but counsel was permitted to exhibit it to the jury and to ask Mrs. Kellner questions about it. As respondent offered no testimony regarding the fall, we cannot say that the ruling of the court denying formal admission of the rug was prejudicially erroneous. The whole theory of the defense was that the fall was a fact, but that other causes existing at that time contributed to Mr. Kellner's death.

[2] Dr. Thomas, while on the stand, testified: "They said he stumbled over a rug." By the word "they" he doubtless meant members of the family of the patient. During the argument counsel for plaintiff sought to tell the jury that members of Mr. Kellner's family had said to Dr. Thomas in the presence of Mr. Kellner that the latter had stumbled over a rug and had fallen. The court, upon objection being made, checked counsel, said there was no such testimony, and instructed the jury to pay no attention to counsel's understanding upon the subject. This is denounced as erroneous, but we find nothing in the evidence to justify the conclusion that the statement made to the doctor was in his patient's presence. The record therefore justifies the court's action.

Medical witnesses testified regarding the cause of death. The history of the case as related by Mr. Kellner's physician was, in brief, that of a man who had suffered an operation for appendicitis, followed by the development of a hernia, for the relief of which another operation was performed, after which a third operation became necessary for the removal of threads which had been used in closing the former wound. Dr. Thomas testified that his patient did not have hernia after the last-mentioned operation. Shortly before his death, however, Mr. Kellner went to the doctor's office, and the latter found "a slight bulge of the wound," but not what he would call a hernia. It was the belief of the physician, however, that there was weakness of the abdominal wall at the site of the incisions, but not a distinct hernia. The day following Mr. Kellner's fall Dr. Thomas was called to see him. The medical man found the patient in bed, very ill, vomiting, and suffering great pain. On examination of the patient's abdomen there was found considerable discoloration and protrusion, and an operation was ordered. A cut was made at the site of the former incision, and it was found that five or six feet of intestines protruded through an opening in the abdominal wall. There was discoloration, the protruding part was surrounded by dark fluid, and there were evidences of the beginning of peritonitis. Mr. Kellner died that night. Concerning the cause of death the doctor said:

"My opinion is that the fall caused a large quantity of gut to be forced out through the weak spot in the abdominal wall, and become strangulated, and that he died as a result of that strangulation."

[3] Other medical experts gave it as their opinion that under the statement of Dr. Thomas there must have been a hernia sac existing before the time of the accident, and that the fall alone could not have produced the result observed at the time of the last operation without the previous existence of a pathological condition. We cannot say that upon such conflicting evidence the verdict and judgment were not properly based upon that part of the evidence favorable to the defendant.

[4] Appellant attacks certain rulings with reference to giving and refusing instructions. One offered by the plaintiff, if given, would have informed the jurors that, if they believed the fall was the "sole and only direct cause" of Mr. Kellner's death, they must find for the plaintiff, notwithstanding a further belief that in previous years deceased may have had a reducible hernia, provided they should further find that "said Ernest F. Kellner would not have died at the time, under the circumstances, and in the manner he did die had it not been for said accident and fall." The proposed instruction did not properly declare the law. Under the terms of the policy the defendant was not responsible for the result of injuries resulting wholly or partly from disease in any form. The last part of the offered instruction would ignore this part of the contract and make the criterion of recovery the shortening by the accident of the life of a person assured without any reference to the possible concurrence of disease in producing death.

The court correctly instructed the jury that there could be no recovery under the policy for death caused partly by disease and partly by accidental injury. The court also gave to the jury the following instruction:

"If, however, the plaintiff in this case has established by a preponderance of the evidence not only the fact of the accidental injury, but the sufficiency thereof to cause death, independently of other causes, and the testimony in reference to pre-existing disease failed to establish such disease as indirect or contributory cause of death, then the plaintiff can recover."

This instruction correctly states the law on the subject discussed. Opposition to it is based upon the theory that any accident which shortens an insured man's life may be the basis of recovery. This is not a tenable theory. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Morrow, 213 Fed. 599, 130 C. C. A. 179, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1213. In the opinion in Clarke v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 179 Pac. 195, the Morrow Case is cited as typical of many authorities to the same effect and is approved.

[5] Plaintiff offered, and the court refused to give, an instruction the purport of which was that upon defendant rested the burden of proving that Mr. Kellner's diseased physical condition contributed to or caused his death. It is contended that, since defendant alleged in its answer that deceased was at the time of the accident in a diseased condition, and that disease proximately contributed to death, such allegation must be proven by defendant by a preponderance of evidence. Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, the law is well settled in California adversely to plaintiff's contention. Rock v. Travelers' Insurance Co., 172 Cal. 462, 156 Pac. 1029, L. R. A. 1916E, 1196; Price v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 169 Cal. 800, 147 Pac. 1175. The absence of disease contributing to death was as much a part of the plaintiff's case under the contract, as the affirmative showing of the occurrence of an accident producing injury and of death following such injury. Travelers' Insurance Co. v. Selden, 78 Fed. 285, 24 C. C. A. 92.

The judgment is affirmed.

HUBER v. SHEDOUDY et al. (L. A. 4908.)

1. MORTGAGES — 478—FORECLOSURE ACTION — FINDINGS—MARKET VALUE OF PROPERTY.

In mortgage foreclosure action, it was unnecessary to make findings as to market value of property, where allegations with reference thereto were directed toward appointment of a receiver, and where no receiver was appointed either pending the litigation or in foreclosure decree.

2. MORTGAGES — 478—FORECLOSURE ACTION — ATTORNEY'S FEES—MATERIALITY OF ISSUE.

In mortgage foreclosure action, finding on reasonableness of attorney's fees, was unnecessary, since the question as to what constitutes reasonable attorney's fees was not a material issue; the attorney's fee not being the cause of the action, but being, like costs, a mere incident to it to be fixed by chancellor in his discretion, not exceeding amount stipulated in mortgage.

3. COSTS — 260(4) — FRIVOLOUS APPEALS—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Appeal by mortgagor's grantee from foreclosure decree upon ground that court failed to find upon market value of property, though no receiver was appointed, and upon reasonableness of attorney's fees, delaying foreclosure nearly three years, held frivolous.

4. COSTS — 260(1)—APPEAL—FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

The object of imposing a penalty for frivolous appeals is two-fold—to discourage the same, as well as to compensate to some extent for the loss which results from the delay.

5. COSTS — 263 — FRIVOLOUS APPEAL — AMOUNT OF DAMAGES.

In determining amount of damages which should be awarded for a frivolous appeal, court should consider the facts with relation to the appeal and the effect of the delay.

6. COSTS — 263 — FRIVOLOUS APPEAL — AMOUNT.

Where mortgagor's grantee takes frivolous appeal from foreclosure decree, though no personal judgment was rendered against him, delaying foreclosure nearly three years, and where mortgage provides for interest at 8 per cent. and judgment at 7 per cent., a penalty for frivolous appeal of 10 per cent. of the judgment, where mortgagee's loss of interest during the three years would have amounted almost thereto, would have been just.

7. COSTS — 263 — FRIVOLOUS APPEAL — AMOUNT.

Where mortgagor's grantee takes frivolous appeal from foreclosure decree, delaying foreclosure nearly three years, and where mortgagee draws 8 per cent. and judgment merely 7 per cent. interest, court will award as penalty merely the difference between 7 and 8 per cent. on the judgment, where such is the penalty asked for by mortgagee, in view of nominal penalties imposed in recent years.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by S. V. Huber against Elias A. Shedoudy and wife, John Wollenshlager, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed, with directions.

William H. Fuller, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Valentine & Newby, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1] This is an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage in the usual form. Plaintiff prayed for judgment of foreclosure, for a deficiency against the mortgagors Shedoudy, and for a receiver. No relief was asked against the appellant, save that his interest in the property be declared to be subject to the mortgage. He was a grantee of the mortgagor. Judgment was entered directing the sale of the property, the application of the proceeds to the payment of the plaintiff's claim, directing the balance, if any, to be paid to the appellant, and if there was a deficiency instead of a surplus, the deficiency be docketed against defendants Sheoudy. Appellant claims a reversal upon the ground that two material issues were not found upon, one relating to the value of the property, and the other relating to attorney's fees. The allegations of the complaint and of the answer with reference to the market value of the property were directed to the matter of the appointment of a receiver. As no receiver was appointed pending the litigation or in the decree of foreclosure, it was unnecessary to make findings on these issues, which thus became immaterial. With reference to the matter of attorney's fees, the complaint alleges:

"That it was necessary to employ attorneys to foreclose said mortgage, and he has employed the firm of Valentine & Newby as his said attorneys, and incurred a liability to pay to them a reasonable attorney's fee for the prosecution of this action, and plaintiff avers upon information and belief that the sum of $1,500 is a fair and reasonable fee to be paid for such legal services."

Respondents' denial on that subject was as follows:

"Said defendants have not sufficient information or belief to enable them to answer the allegations contained in paragraph 11 of plaintiff's complaint, and, basing their denial upon that ground, defendant denies that said plaintiff has incurred a liability to Valentine & Newby in the sum of $1,500, and denies that $1,500 is a reasonable attorney fee to be paid said Valentine & Newby for their legal services in the foreclosure of the mortgage mentioned and described in plaintiff's complaint, and denies that it was necessary to foreclose said mortgage in order for the plaintiff to receive the money alleged to be due upon the note and mortgage described in plaintiff's complaint."

Upon this subject the finding of the court was as follows:

"That, in order to foreclose said mortgage, it was necessary for plaintiff to employ attorneys, and he did employ the firm of Valentine & Newby as his said attorneys, and the court finds that the sum of $890 is a reasonable amount to be allowed to plaintiff as attorneys' fees in this action."

[2] Appellant contends that this finding is insufficient for the reason that it fails to find upon the proposition that plaintiff had "incurred a liability" to pay a reasonable attorney's fee. The complaint alleges the employment of Valentine & Newby to foreclose the mortgage, that it was necessary to so employ them, and that a reasonable fee for said services was $1,500. The answer admits the employment, and by the form of denial that

$1,490.99 is a reasonable fee to be paid them for their services. The court, however, only allowed $890. However, the issue as to attorney's fees is not a material issue. As it was said in Carriere v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 435:

"The only difference between this case and that of Gronfier v. Minturn [5 Cal. 492], decided at this term, consists of the point made by appellants that there is no allegation in the declaration that 5 per cent. was reasonable counsel fees. Such an averment was unnecessary. The counsel fees stipulated to be paid were not the cause of the action, but, like the costs, a mere incident to it, and may be fixed by the chancellor, at his discretion, not exceeding the amount stipulated."

This case and various subsequent cases on the same subject were cited and the rule was again stated in McNamara v. Oakland Building & Loan Association, 131 Cal. 336, 63 Pac. 670, as follows:

"The mortgage in terms provides in case of foreclosure the mortgagor shall pay reasonable attorney's fees, 'and the payment of such costs and expenses and attorney's fees by the mortgagor is secured hereby.' The cross-complaint contains an averment setting forth the provisions of the mortgage and alleging that the attorney's fees therein provided for were secured thereby and the prayer asks for reasonable attorney's fees. There is no allegation that the sum claimed is reasonable, nor is there any finding of the fact, and therefore it is claimed defendant is not entitled to attorney's fees. It is found that plaintiff executed the mortgage, which is equivalent to a finding that he agreed to pay a reasonable attorney's fee for the mortgage so provided. The averment that the fee claimed was a reasonable amount is not necessary (Carriere v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 435); the attorney's fee was not the cause of action, but an incident to it (Mulcahy v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 484 [35 Pac. 144], affirming Carriere v. Minturn, supra.) See, also, Brooks v. Forington, 117 Cal. 219 [48 Pac. 1073]. Prescott v. Grady, 91 Cal. 518 [27 Pac. 755], does not overrule or conflict with Carriere v. Minturn, supra. As an averment was unnecessary, so also was a finding. The conclusion of law that defendant was entitled to recover attorney's fees rested upon the provisions of the mortgage, and the court could determine what amount would be reasonable without hearing any testimony thereon. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 234 [39 Pac. 758]; Clancy v. Plover, 107 Cal. 272 [40 Pac. 394]; Edwards v. Grand, 121 Cal. 254 [53 Pac. 796]."

See, also, Monroe v. Fohl, 72 Cal. 571, 14 Pac. 514; Bank v. Holt, 87 Cal. 158, 25 Pac. 272; White v. Allatt, 87 Cal. 245, 248, 25 Pac. 420; Bank v. Duncan, 133 Cal. 254, 256, 65 Pac. 469; Thrasher v. Moran, 146 Cal. 683, 684, 81 Pac. 32; Patton v. Pepper Hotel Co., 153 Cal. 460, 96 Pac. 296.

[3] We have cited the foregoing authorities to show how utterly frivolous appellant's contentions are in view of the previous decisions of this court. Owing to the crowded condition of the calendar of this court, a delay of nearly three years has resulted from this appeal. Section 957 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, "when it appears to the appellate court that the appeal was made for delay, it may add to the costs such damages as may be just." This language was adopted from Practice Act 1851 (St. 1851, p. 106) § 345, and that, in turn, from the New York Code, § 330. A similar provision was contained in the original Judiciary Act adopted by Congress September 24, 1789 (1 Stat. 73, c. 20), and subsequently continued in effect by the act of Congress March 3, 1803 (2 Stat. 244, c. 40), and by Revised Statutes U. S. § 1010 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1671). The federal statute in question, however, applied to all affirmances, in which it was provided:

"The court shall adjudge to the respondents in error just damages for his delay, and single or double costs, at its discretion."

The application of this rule is discussed in West Wisconsin Ry. Co. v. Foley, 94 U. S. 100, 24 L. Ed. 71, wherein it appeared that, after several revisions of the rules of the Supreme Court at the December term of 1870, the court adopted the following rule:

"In all cases where a writ of error shall delay the proceedings on the judgment of the inferior court, and shall appear to have been sued out merely for delay, damages at the rate of ten per cent., in addition to interest, shall be awarded upon the amount of the judgment."

In that case it was held that the court might award damages for a frivolous appeal in an amount less than 10 per cent. in addition to interest. It will thus be seen that the Supreme Court of the United States adopted as the ordinary measure of damages for a frivolous appeal, under a statute authorizing them to give just damages for delay, 10 per cent. upon the amount of the judgment. The practice in this court in imposing damages for a frivolous appeal has not been uniform. In Flynn v. Travers, 1 Cal. Unrep. 27, decided in 1857, 20 per cent. damages were awarded. This penalty was also imposed in Heney v. Alpers, 2 Cal. Unrep. 164; Nickerson v. Cal. Stage Co., 10 Cal. 520; Shain v. Belvin, 79 Cal. 262, 21 Pac. 747, by Department 1 in 1889, and Williams v. Hall, 79 Cal. 606, 21 Pac. 965; in bank. See, also, Cary v. Oslo & Randall, referred to in McMillian v. Vischer, 14 Cal. 232, where a penalty of 20 per cent., amounting to $2,698.53, was imposed. In De Witt v. Porter, 13 Cal. 172, the penalty imposed was 15 per cent., and in the second California Report the penalty imposed was usually 10 per cent., although the delay was sometimes only a few months. Buckley v. Stebbins, 2 Cal. 149; Russell v. Williams, 2 Cal. 158; Bates v. Visher, 2 Cal. 355; Pacheco v. Bernal, 2 Cal. 150. The amount of 10 per cent. as damages for a frivolous appeal is fixed in some states by statute; in others by rule of court. Hawkins

v. Jones, 21 Or. 502, 28 Pac. 548; Popp v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 101 Ky. 157, 40 S. W. 254; August Gast Bank Note & Lith. Co. v. Fennimore Ass'n, 84 Mo. App. 228; Lancelos v. Robertson, 5 La. 41; Limberger v. Engle (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 1025. This same amount was allowed in Sirmans v. Folsom, etc., Co., 18 Ga. App. 586, 89 S. E. 1103. See, also, N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3251, 3254. The later practice in this court has been to impose a nominal penalty of from $25 to $100 for a frivolous appeal. Henehan v. Hart, 127 Cal. 656, 60 Pac. 426; Estate of Snowball, 156 Cal. 235, 104 Pac. 446.

[4] The object of imposing a penalty for frivolous appeal is twofold—to discourage the same, as well as to compensate to some extent for the loss which results from delay. West Wis. Ry. Co. v. Foley, supra, 94 U. S. 103, 24 L. Ed. 71. In view of the crowded condition of our calendar and the fact that many novel constitutional and statutory questions have arisen in this state by reason of the great volume of legislative and constitutional amendments since 1911, it is important that appeals that are merely frivolous be discouraged. We may, perhaps, express our views by adopting the language of the Supreme Court of the United States on that subject in Whitney v. Cook, 99 U. S. 607, 25 L. Ed. 446:

"Our experience teaches that the only way to discourage frivolous appeals and writs of error is by the use of our power to award damages, and we think this a proper case in which to say that hereafter more attention will be given to that subject, and the rule enforced both according to its letter and spirit. Parties should not be subjected to the delay of proceedings for review in this court without reasonable cause, and our power to make compensation to some extent for the loss occasioned by an unwarranted delay ought not to be overlooked."

[5-7] In determining the amount of damages which should be awarded in this case for a frivolous appeal, we should consider the facts with relation thereto and the effect of the delay. Respondent claims, and we may assume, that the effect of this appeal has been to delay the foreclosure sale. The judgment was entered June 27, 1916. The appellant is not bound to pay the judgment or any part thereof. As to him the effect of the judgment was merely to subject his interest in the premises to the foreclosure. The mortgage provided for interest at the rate of 8 per cent., compounded quarterly. The judgment draws interest at the rate of 7 per cent. The difference between the amount of interest allowed by law and that by the mortgage for the three-year period of delay secured by this appeal is $2,173.76. The difference between simple interest at 7 and 8 per cent. will be $720. If the sale had occurred within the usual time after the decree, the appellant would have been required to pay 1 per cent. a month during the redemption period of one year in order to redeem. In view of the fact that the amount of interest lost by the respondent by reason of this appeal would be nearly 10 per cent. of the amount of the judgment, and that respondent has been required to employ an attorney to represent him on this appeal, it obviously would not be unjust to assess damages amounting to 10 per cent. on the principal sum for this frivolous appeal, namely, $2,600. Respondent, however, in his brief and on oral argument has only asked for a penalty equivalent to the difference between 7 and 8 per cent. on the amount of the judgment, and in view of the further fact that in recent years purely nominal penalties have been imposed for frivolous appeals, the penalty fixed in this case will be $720. It is hoped, however, that before other frivolous appeals now pending, if any, are brought to the attention of the court, some disposition thereof will be made by the parties which will obviate the necessity of placing such cases upon the calendar, thus depriving meritorious appeals of their opportunity to be heard, and obviating the necessity of imposing penalties therein.

The judgment is affirmed, with directions to enter a judgment in favor of respondent and against appellant for the sum of $720, with costs of appeal.

ARCADE REALTY CO. v. BANK OF COMMERCE. (S. F. 8070.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1919.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §109(4) — AUTHORITY TO INDORSE NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

Authority to collect money does not imply authority to indorse negotiable paper received in payment.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §109(4) — AUTHORITY TO INDORSE NEGOTIABLE PAPER—PRESUMPTION.

The authority of an agent to indorse negotiable paper is a very responsible power, and not lightly to be presumed or implied.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §109(4) — AUTHORITY TO INDORSE NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

Where a principal gave agent making collections authority to deposit all rents collected by him in his personal account for the purpose of remitting the same by his personal check, the authority carried with it power to indorse for deposit checks made payable to principal, where such were collected.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §123(9) — AUTHORITY OF AGENT TO INDORSE CHECKS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that an agent making collections was authorized to make indorsements upon checks collected by him.

Melvin, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Donahue, Judge.

Action by the Arcade Realty Company against the Bank of Commerce. Judgment for defendant, and the plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ostrander, Clark & Carey, of Oakland, for appellant.

Gibson & Woolner, of Oakland, and Henshaw, Black & Goldberg, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1, 2] This action was brought by the Arcade Realty Company against the defendant bank to recover $2,650 paid by defendant upon checks drawn in favor of the Arcade Realty Company by C. W. Phillips upon the defendant bank. Phillips assigned his claims thereon against the bank to the plaintiff. The question involved in the case is the authority of one A. W. Clement to indorse such checks on behalf of the plaintiff. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, upholding the authority of Clement to make such indorsements, and plaintiff appeals. Clement was the appellant's agent for the collection of the rents from its tenants in appellant's business block in Oakland. Appellant relies upon the well-settled rule that authority to collect does not imply authority to indorse negotiable paper received in payment, and upon the further well-established rule that the authority of an agent to indorse negotiable paper is a very responsible power, not lightly to be presumed or implied. There is no doubt as to the correctness of these rules. See Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (6th Ed.) §§ 292, 293, 294, 296; Hamilton N. Bank v. Nye, 37 Ind. App. 464, 77 N. E. 295, 117 Am. St. Rep. 333; Lonier v. Ann Arbor Sav. Bank, 162 Mich. 541, 127 N. W. 685; National Fence Machine Co. v. Highleyman, 71 Kan. 347, 80 Pac. 568; Jackson v. Nat. Bank of McMinnville, 92 Tenn. 154, 20 S. W. 802, 18 L. R. A. 663, 36 Am. St. Rep. 81; Tiedeman on Commercial Paper, § 77; Jackson Paper Mfg. Co. v. Com. Nat. Bank, 199 Ill. 151, 65 N. E. 136, 59 L. R. A. 657, 93 Am. St. Rep. 113. As these rules are conceded to be correct, and as there is no evidence of an express authorization to Clement to indorse these checks, it will be necessary to state the facts more in detail for the purpose of disclosing the scope of Clement's agency. It will appear therefrom that the agent was given and exercised far more power than a mere collector. Clement, as the agent of appellant, for some years had collected the rents from the tenants of appellant's building, had deposited the moneys or checks received, in his own bank account, to his personal credit, and had remitted such rentals to appellant in San Francisco, by a check drawn against such personal account. The rents of the Hotel Arcade, however, were paid by Phillips direct to appellant by his personal check until February, 1912. Phillips' rental was $1,000 monthly under a ten-year lease. Phillips, however, failed to pay promptly under this arrangement, and in order to facilitate collection the appellant directed Clement to collect such rentals. Beginning February 26, 1912, Clement collected a check in favor of the Arcade Realty Company, and mailed the same to appellant. Thereafter Clement collected the 64 checks in issue at intervals until May 29, 1913. Each check was indorsed by him as follows: "Arcade Realty Company by A. W. Clement, Agent, A. W. Clement"—and deposited in his personal account either in the Union Savings Bank of Oakland, or the Oakland Bank of Savings, Oakland. The checks were paid by the respondent, the drawee bank, in due course through the clearing house. Clement remitted these rents and others collected by him for rent by his personal check as formerly, together with his accounts of rentals collected. In June, 1913, appellant discovered that Clement had remitted $2,650, the amount involved here, less than he had collected up to that date. Nevertheless the appellant did nothing more about the matter than to instruct Clement thereafter to remit the Phillips checks direct to it, a direction which Clement carried out. On Clement's death about seven months later, the appellant discovered that Clement, during the period when he was depositing the Phillips rent to his account, had been making the indorsements in question, for such purpose. In addition to Clement's authority to collect rents, the correspondence shows that he was authorized to act as the general agent of the appellant for leasing, care, and repair of the building. It should be observed that we are not dealing with a general authority to indorse negotiable paper, but rather with the power necessary to deposit checks on local banks in another local bank for collection through the clearing house, for the purpose of transmitting the proceeds to the principal in a nearby city. The appellant, on receiving from month to month the personal check of its agent in satisfaction of rentals collected, must have been aware of the fact that Clement was depositing all rents in his own personal account, and thus by implication must have approved such deposit. The conclusion cannot be escaped in this case that the authority of the agent included the power to deposit money or paper collected to his own account. That is exactly what was done with the checks here in question. They were deposited to his own account, and the indorsements were made solely for the purpose of accomplishing such deposit. It may well be that indorsements for any purpose would have been unauthorized. But when the principal permitted its agent to deposit the collections to his personal account, to be transmitted by his personal check, it is a fair, if not in fact a necessary, inference that he had the authority to make such indorsements as were necessary to do this. Rents in large amounts are not habitually paid in money, but by check. The principal could hardly have assumed that such paper was all drawn to the order of the agent. The tenants would not naturally so draw their checks, but to the order of the landlord. The appellant receiving all its rentals by the agent's personal check cannot claim that it did not know that its tenants were paying by checks to its order. It should have presumed that they were doing so in some instances at least, and, this being so, the appellant should have known that the agent was indorsing such checks for deposit. Furthermore, it was immaterial to appellant, as long as it permitted its agent to deposit the rents in his own account, whether the rents were paid by check to the appellant's order, as was the case with the checks in question, or by check to the agent's order, where no question of indorsement could have arisen. In fact checks to the order of the agent would have given him a far greater measure of control over the fund than checks to the order of the appellant, and yet the appellant either permitted the latter, or else assumed that the paper was drawn to its own order, and that the agent was indorsing it for deposit. The point is that the principal either tacitly or expressly authorized the agent to deposit his collections to his own account, and the conversion by Clement, discovered in June, 1913, was not accomplished by the indorsements in question by which the funds were deposited in the agent's personal account, but by the agent's failure to remit from his account moneys of his principal which he had so deposited by authority. The authority to indorse for deposit in a local bank may reasonably be inferred in such a case, where it would be wholly unreasonable to infer authority to indorse for sale or discount a foreign bill of exchange. There is a most substantial difference between the various kinds of paper and the various purposes of indorsement.

[3] The test for ascertaining the question of the agent's authority to indorse negotiable paper is stated in Jackson Paper Mfg. Co. v. Com. Bank, supra, to be this: Can the agent perform the duties of his agency without the exercise of such authority? "In other words," says the court, "the power of an agent to indorse commercial paper for his principal must be a necessary implication from an express authority conferred upon such agent." Conceding the correctness of this rule, we here have evidence justifying the conclusion that the agent had authority to deposit all rents collected by him in his personal account, for the purpose of remitting the same to his principal by his personal check. This authority carried with it the power essential to that course of business, namely, the indorsement for deposit of checks made payable to the principal where such were collected. Civ. Code, § 2319, subd. 1. The case of Dispatch Printing Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 109 Minn. 440, 124 N. W. 236, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 74, cited by appellant, is somewhat similar in its facts, but differs in the essential particular that in that case the agent was expressly directed by the principal not to indorse or deposit checks payable to them, but to remit them direct to the principal.

[4] The evidence amply justified the finding of the trial court that the agent was authorized to make the indorsements made by him for the deposit of the checks to his account, including the checks in question.

The judgment is affirmed.

MELVIN, J. I dissent. While there might be some force in a contention that after the discovery of the conversion of some of the rents by Clement, the plaintiff by retaining him as agent would be estopped to object to the method by which he obtained the money, I cannot bring myself to approve of the doctrine announced by the majority of the court that when a principal employs an agent to collect and transmit rentals he thereby clothes such agent with authority to indorse checks. Some of the statements in the prevailing opinion are so extraordinary that with all due respect to the learned author I must unwillingly review them and dissent from them. For example, this language is used:

"The appellant on receiving from month to month the personal check of its agent in satisfaction of rentals collected, must have been aware of the fact that Clement was depositing all rents in his own personal account, and thus by implication must have approved such deposit. The conclusion cannot be escaped in this case that the authority of the agent included the power to deposit money or paper collected to his own account."

Of course the principal supposed that Clement was depositing rents to his own credit, as he was transmitting the money by personal check. That had been the usual course of business; but how did such a supposition bind the principal to the further and extraordinary implication that the collector was clothed with the high authority to indorse his principal's name? There were three ordinary methods by which the tenant might pay the agent. These were: (1) By actual cash; (2) by check payable to the agent's order; and (3) by check payable to the landlord's order. If by either of the first two methods Clement had collected the money, undoubtedly he might have deposited the cash or the check to his own account, and any subsequent conversion of the funds would have caused loss to his principal. If by the third method the tenant had paid, under the terms of Clement's agency as a collector, he could honestly do but one thing. He could transmit the check itself to the payee. When he indorsed the first check he was guilty of a conversion, not of money, but of his principal's check. If he had left the country the next day can any one question the fact that the Arcade Realty Company could have compelled the tenant to pay the rent? Or could any one doubt that the bank which without any inquiry or investigation had recognized Clement's authority to indorse for the payee could be compelled to reimburse its depositor Phillips? How then did a persistence in wrongdoing sanctify Clement's acts into those of an agent clothed with the power to do those very acts? It is true that much of the money thus obtained was paid to the Arcade Realty Company, but such acts of restitution did not excuse the bank for its astounding lack of ordinary prudence. If the officers of the bank had made the slightest inquiry the plaintiff would have been warned, of course, that its collector was assuming the right to indorse checks made payable to its order.

Continuing the argument, the opinion contains the following language:

"But when the principal permitted its agent to deposit the collections to his personal account, to be transmitted by his personal check, it is a fair, if not in fact a necessary, inference that he had the authority to make such indorsements as were necessary to do this."

I fail to follow this reasoning. Because the principal permitted his agent to collect money and to transmit it, by no means does it follow that the agency went to the extent of allowing him to accept and to convert something else.

"Rents in large amounts are not habitually paid in money, but by check," says the learned author of the opinion. Undoubtedly that is true, but the next two sentences in my opinion declare an absolute non sequitur. They are as follows:

"The principal could hardly have assumed that such paper was all drawn to the order of the agent. The tenants would not naturally so draw their checks, but to the order of the landlord."

Why could not the principal assume that the checks, if any, were all drawn to the order of the agent? The agent had authority to collect. Why should the principal think that the tenants would not take the convenient method of paying him directly in money or checks? In my opinion the power to indorse was no more involved in the power to collect than would have been an authorization to use a club in compelling Phillips to pay if Clement had employed that method of persuasion. Why would the tenants naturally draw their checks to the order of the landlord? There is no law of statutory origin or of commercial usage which justifies such reasoning. I venture to assert that a large proportion of the rentals of business and residence property in large cities is paid directly to real estate agents, and not to owners of the realty.

Continuing, the learned author of the opinion uses the following language:

"The appellant receiving all its rentals by the agent's personal check cannot claim that it did not know that its tenants were paying by checks to its order. It should have presumed that they were doing so in some instances at least; and, this being so, the appellant should have known that the agent was indorsing such checks for deposit."

Why should a principal be bound to assume that a trusted agent was going outside of his agency? I cannot, although I have tried, see the force of such reasoning. Again I assert that there is no such rule of law or commercial usage. Does the average tenant of an apartment house know the name of his landlord? I venture to say he does not. And even if he does, he deals entirely with the agent. True, Phillips knew who his landlord was, but he also knew that the Arcade Realty Company had empowered Clement to collect, and the landlord, having given him that notice, was thoroughly justified, it seems to me, in assuming that the payments were being made to the agent either in money or in checks which the latter might honestly indorse.

If Phillips, either because he did not trust Clement or for any other reason, chose to pay directly by check drawn in the landlord's favor, he was entitled to the protection afforded by the fact that his banker was bound to pay only the payee or an authorized agent, and it is to be remembered that plaintiff herein has succeeded to Phillips' rights. If the bank had done its duty Clement could never have been in a position to convert the checks and thereby injure either Phillips or the realty company. Concededly, if Clement had been getting the moneys in an authorized way he could have converted them more easily. But this does not prove that he was authorized to indorse the corporation's name. We are dealing with a matter of implied agency and I solemnly believe the rule announced in the prevailing opinion is illogical and will be productive of much harm. It will gladden the hearts of careless bankers and make them think that they are no longer held to a high degree of care in protecting their depositors from spollation.

In the prevailing opinion the majority of the justices approve the test for ascertaining an agent's authority to indorse negotiable paper as set forth in Jackson Paper Manufacturing Co. v. Commercial National Bank, 199 Ill. 151-156, 65 N. E. 136, 138 (59 L. R. A. 657, 93 Am. St. Rep. 113), in which Mr. Chief Justice Magruder used the following language:

"The weight of authority seems to be in favor of the contention of appellant that authority to indorse commercial paper can only be implied where the agent is unable to perform the duties of his agency without the exercise of such authority. In other words, the power of an agent to indorse commercial paper for his principal must be a necessary implication from an express authority conferred upon such agent."

Applying this test to the case at bar, it seems to me that power of indorsement was not a necessary implication from the agency. All Clement needed to do, under the terms of his agency, was to mail each check of this sort, or carry it, or send it by messenger, to his principal.

POZZI v. ALPINE EVAPORATED CREAM CO. (Civ. 2775.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1002—ASSIGNMENTS—UNWARRANTED APPEAL.

Where the evidence was clearly conflicting, but ample to justify jury's verdict, appellate court cannot interfere.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

Action by Angelo Pozzi against the Alpine Evaporated Cream Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Zabala & Sargent, of Salinas, for appellant.
C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for $3,577.60, alleged to be due as the purchase price of milk delivered by plaintiff and his assignors to the defendant company. There was no dispute about either the delivery or the value of the milk. As a defense, defendant contended that plaintiff and his assignors had entered into oral agreements to deliver to defendant all milk produced at their dairies for a period of one year in consideration of the payment of the highest market price therefor by the defendant to them; that the plaintiff and his assignors delivered milk for a period approximately three months only and then refused to deliver longer. Defendant alleged that, by reason of the failure of plaintiff and his assignors to deliver according to their alleged contracts, defendant has been damaged in the sum of $3,000, and defendant filed a counterclaim asking for that amount. Appellant admits that the only question in the case is: Did the plaintiff and his assignors agree to ship the milk produced on their several dairies to defendant for a period of one year? It then contends that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. From an examination of the evidence it appears that it was clearly conflicting, and that there was ample evidence to justify the verdict of the jury. Under such circumstances, and in the absence of a single assignment of error occurring at the trial, it would seem that the rule of law is sufficiently clear and well established to make an appeal to this court an unnecessary and unwarranted proceeding.

The judgment is affirmed.

MCGINN v. VAN NESS et al. (Civ. 2662).*

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 8, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡179(1)—ISSUES IN LOWER COURT—SUFFICIENCY OF ANSWER.

In action to foreclose lien for street work, contention that it was not shown that board of public works had properly apportioned street assessments as directed by ordinance cannot be sustained, where complaint alleged such fact and no issue was raised thereon; defendant's answer not containing a sufficient denial of the averment.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡465—STREET ASSESSMENTS—DEFECTIVE APPORTIONMENT—VALIDITY.

That a street assessment was defective for lack of proper apportionment as directed by the ordinance would not render the assessment void upon its face, being at most an irregularity, which could have been corrected upon appeal to the proper board in the manner provided by the ordinance.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡562(1) — STREET ASSESSMENTS—ERRORS NOT JUDICIAL—NECESSITY OF FIRST APPEALING TO BOARD.

It is only such errors in a street assessment as are jurisdictional, and which appear upon the face of the assessment, that may be taken advantage of upon trial of an action to enforce a street improvement lien, without an appeal having been first taken to the board.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡485(3) — STREET ASSESSMENTS—RECORDING—COLLECTIVE INDORSEMENT.

In action to enforce a lien for street work, defendant's contention that the record shows that the warrant, assessment, and diagram were not properly recorded as required by the terms of the ordinance is not warranted, where the record shows they were indorsed as having been duly recorded on the day of their filing for record, the fair intendment from this showing being that indorsement was made upon the originals, where it should appear, and the fact that such indorsement was collective as to all three documents is too technical to deserve consideration.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡485(3) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—FORMALITIES—VALIDITY OF WARRANT.

In an action by a warrant holder to enforce a lien for street improvements, the insufficient authentication of the return of assessment and warrant, and failure of the secretary of the board to attach his signature to the record, does not render the lien invalid, or prejudice the holder of the warrant, in view of the ordinance provision that no assessment or proceedings prior to assessment shall be held invalid for informality or defect, where the resolution of intention was actually published, which ordinance provision was warranted by San Francisco City Charter, art. 6, c. 2, § 33.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by George W. McGinn against T. C. Van Ness, Jr., and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants, except D. L. Bienfield, appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Chapman, of San Francisco (R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Fabius T. Finch, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an action to foreclose a lien for street work under a public contract affecting the property of the defendants. The assessment was made under the procedure provided by Ordinance No. 2439, New Series, of the city and county of San Francisco, approved September 4, 1913, under and by virtue of the power given to the supervisors of that municipality by section 33, chapter 2, of article 6 of its charter. The trial court decreed a foreclosure of said lien, and from such decree the defendants have prosecuted this appeal.

The first point insisted upon by the appellants is that of the insufficiency of the complaint as tested by a general demurrer, in view of the fact that the appellants concede in their opening brief that the complaint herein as amended is substantially in the same form as the complaint in the case of Bienfield v. Van Ness, 176 Cal. 585, 169 Pac. 225, and that the Supreme Court in that case disposed of practically every point herein urged as to the insufficiency of the complaint adversely to the appellants, it is not necessary to further consider this phase of the case.

*For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] The next contention of the appellants requiring consideration is the claim that the board of public works is not shown to have properly apportioned the assessment as directed by the ordinance. The complaint in that behalf alleges that the board of public works "duly and regularly made an assessment to cover the sum due for the work performed and specified in conformity with the provisions of the charter of San Francisco and in accordance with the provisions of Ordinance No. 2439." We do not find any sufficient denial of this averment to raise an issue involving the point urged in the appellants' contention, and we regard the averment of the defendants' answer relied upon by them as ineffectual to present such issue. Beckett v. Morse, 4 Cal. App. 232, 87 Pac. 408.

[2, 3] But even if it were to be assumed that the assessment was defective in the respect claimed, it was not such a defect as, in our opinion, would render the assessment void upon its face, but was at most only an irregularity which could and doubtless would have been corrected upon an appeal to the proper board under section 21 of the ordinance in question. It is only such errors as are jurisdictional and which appear upon the face of the assessment that may be taken advantage of upon the trial without an appeal having been first made to the board. Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 357, 80 Pac. 81; Girvin v. Simon, 116 Cal. 604, 48 Pac. 720; McLaughlin v. Knobloch, 161 Cal. 676, 120 Pac. 27; Ramish v. Hartwell, 126 Cal. 443, 58 Pac. 920.

[4] The next contention of the appellants is that the record shows that the warrant, assessment, and diagram were not properly recorded as required by the terms of the ordinance. In thus stating the condition of the record, we think counsel for the appellants are in error. The record shows that the warrant, assessment and diagram were indorsed as having been duly recorded on the same day on which they were filed for record. The fair intentment from this showing is that this indorsement was made upon the originals where it should appear. The fact that such indorsement was collective as to all three of these documents, and not made upon each separately, is too technical to deserve consideration.

[5] The case of Bienfield v. Van Ness, supra, seems to dispose of the objections of the appellants as to the sufficient authentication of the return of the assessment and warrant, also to hold that the failure of the secretary of the board to attach his signature to the record does not render the lien invalid nor prejudice the holder of the warrant. In that case, also, practically all of the other objections which the appellants herein make to the sufficiency of this assessment and the lien sought to be foreclosed in this action are held to have been rendered unavailing by the following provision of the ordinance, namely:

"No assessment, warrant, diagram or affidavit of demand and nonpayment after issue of the same, and no proceedings prior to the assessment, shall be held invalid by any court for any error, informality or other defect in the same, where the resolution of intention of the board of public works to recommend to the supervisors the ordering of the improvement has been actually published and posted and the notices of improvement posted as in this ordinance provided." Bienfield v. Van Ness, supra; Chase v. Trout, supra.

This disposes of every material point urged by the appellants upon this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

RAUER'S LAW & COLLECTION CO., Inc.,
v. SHERIDAN PROCTOR CO. et al.
(Civ. 2200.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 2, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENT $\S$ 882—TENDER OF AMOUNT—DEPOSIT IN COURT.

Depositing amount of judgment with clerk of court, and notifying judgment creditor that the same was there subject to his demand, did not constitute a legal tender.

2. TENDER $\S$ 12(2)—SUFFICIENCY OF TENDER.

Nothing short of the full amount due the creditor is sufficient to constitute a valid tender, and the debtor must at his peril offer the full amount.

3. JUDGMENT $\S$ 622(1)—RES JUDICATA—MATTERS OF COUNTERCLAIM.

A matter pleaded by way of counterclaim in a former action cannot be held to have been adjudicated, where it appears from the record that the counterclaim did not exist at the time, but that it matured some months later, and it is apparent that it was not pressed, for the reason that it was not an existing demand, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 438, subd. 2.

4. JUDGMENT $\S$ 951(1)—RES JUDICATA—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In order to debar a defendant's right to recover on the ground that the matter was adjudicated in a former case, it was necessary for plaintiff to show that the matter had been theretofore adjudicated.

Appeal from Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by the Rauer's Law & Collection Company, Incorporated, against the Sheridan Proctor Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William Tomsy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. H. Barrows and Martin Uldall, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment rendered in its favor for the sum of $49.32. The action was brought to recover $312.50 as the agreed price of certain personal property sold and delivered by the plaintiff's assignor, the Eastern Outfitting Company, to the defendant, Sheridan Proctor Company. In its answer, said defendant admitted the indebtedness pleaded in the complaint, but set up as a counterclaim a judgment in its favor against the plaintiff's assignor of $15, and a demand for $247, the price of storage of certain furniture.

[1, 2] The appeal presents but two questions. As to the first of these it appears that prior to the commencement of this action the plaintiff, in an attempt to satisfy a former judgment of $15 in favor of the defendant, deposited that sum with the clerk of the court, notifying the defendant that the same was there subject to its demand. Such a deposit and notice alone certainly did not constitute a legal tender, and, even if it had, it would have been unavailing, for the reason that a small sum for interest upon the judgment had accrued, which was not included in the amount deposited. Nothing short of the full amount due the creditor is sufficient to constitute a valid tender, and the debtor must at his peril offer the full amount. 38 Cyc. 137.

[3, 4] Respecting the other point, plaintiff asserts that the claim for storage constituting defendant's second cause of counterclaim had been adjudicated in a former action. It is true that this matter was pleaded by the defendant by way of a counterclaim in a former action between it and the plaintiff's assignor; but it also appears from the record that such counterclaim did not exist at the time that action was commenced, but that it matured some months later. It is apparent that it was not pressed in the first action for the simple reason that it was not an existing demand at the time the action was commenced (Code Civ. Proc. § 433, subd. 2; Wood v. Brush, 72 Cal. 224, 13 Pac. 627; McGuire v. Edsall, 14 Mont. 359, 36 Pac. 453), and therefore was not adjudicated in that case. Moreover, no evidence was introduced by the plaintiff in the present action that the subject of the defendant's counterclaim was res adjudicata; the only reference to it occurring in the cross-examination of a witness. In order to debar defendant's right to recover in this action on its counterclaim, it was necessary for the plaintiff to show that the matter had been theretofore adjudicated, which, as we have said, was not done.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMAS v. NEWMARK GRAIN CO. et al.
(Civ. 2330.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 28, 1919.)

CORPORATIONS — 513(4) — COMPLAINT ON DRAFT — SUFFICIENCY — AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

Complaint against a grain company and the agent in charge of its business in a county on a draft of the company executed by the agent stated no cause of action, where it embodied no allegation showing that the agent's authority as the person in charge of the company's business included authority to execute such a writing, despite allegations the agent was in charge of the business in the county and as such agent executed the draft.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by L. J. Thomas against the Newmark Grain Company and F. A. Wolz. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant Grain Company appeals. Reversed.

A. M. Norton, of Los Angeles, and Childers & Bruce, of El Centro, for appellant.

Galen Nichols and E. R. Simon, both of El Centro, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff, presented on the judgment roll alone.

We think that the appellant is right in its claim that the complaint in the case failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It was first alleged that the appellant is a corporation organized under the laws of California and having and maintaining a place of business in the city of El Centro, county of Imperial. These allegations followed:

"That defendant F. A. Wolz is, and was during all the times mentioned in this complaint, the duly authorized and accredited and acting agent of the defendant Newmark Grain Company. That said F. A. Wolz is, and was at all times mentioned in this complaint, in charge of the business of the defendant Newmark Grain Company, in the county of Imperial, and is, and was, in charge of the place of business of the said defendant in the city of El Centro, county of Imperial, state of California. That on the 9th day of June, 1915, for a valuable consideration, the said F. A. Wolz, as such agent at El Centro, said county and state, made and executed a certain draft in words and figures as follows: 'El Centro 6/9/15 A No. 197 Newmark Grain Co., Incorporated, 447 So. Los Angeles St., Los Angeles, Cal. Pay to the order of L. J. Thomas $600.00 six hundred & no/100 dollars. 18627 18627 F. A. Wolz'—and thereupon delivered said draft to the plaintiff herein."

The fourth paragraph of the complaint alleged that the "draft" was presented for payment to appellant, and payment refused, and that no part thereof had been paid. The written instrument set out in the complaint appears to have been executed by Wolz alone. Therefore it was both necessary, in order to charge appellant, that it be made to appear that the instrument was executed on its behalf, and that Wolz possessed authority to execute the same. While it is stated that Wolz was "in charge of the business of defendant Newmark Grain Company in the county of Imperial," and that "as such agent at El Centro" he made and executed the draft, there is no allegation showing that his authority as the person in charge of the defendant's business, whatever it might have been, included authority to execute a writing such as that sued upon. We think that such allegation was essential to show liability against this appellant. The instrument appears to be in form a bill of exchange, but in effect answering to a promissory note, as defined in section 3245, Civil Code.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

FARRISEE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 2944.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇨162(1)—APPEAL TO SUPERIOR COURT—STATUTES.

Appellant from justice court, in giving notice of appeal and filing undertaking, having fully complied with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 974, 978, the justice was divested of all jurisdiction, other than, as required by section 977, and subject to the payment of his fees, to transmit the record to the clerk of the superior court for further proceedings; the jurisdiction of the superior court attaching on perfecting of the appeal by filing of the undertaking, and being open to divestment only by order of dismissal, or some other order of the superior court itself.

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇨139—APPEAL TO SUPERIOR COURT—SECOND APPEAL.

Where a first appeal from justice court to the superior court was perfected, it effected a transfer of the case to the superior court, and there was nothing in the justice court which could be made the subject of a second appeal, and the proceeding, since there was nothing on which it could operate, was a nullity.

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇨159(6)—APPEAL TO SUPERIOR COURT — FAILURE OF SURETIES TO JUSTIFY—STATUTE.

Though Code Civ. Proc. § 978a, provides that, where exception to the sufficiency of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal from a justice court is interposed, they must justify within five days, otherwise the appeal must be regarded as if no undertaking had been given, the matter does not ipso facto affect the appeal, perfecting of which has vested jurisdiction of the case in the superior court, but merely gives respondent the right to move for its dismissal on the ground it has become ineffectual.

Petition for certiorari by Anna Farrisee against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, and Grant Jackson and Fred H. Taft, Judges thereof. Order of superior court annulled.

Louis N. Whealton, of Long Beach, for petitioner.

Charles M. Ackerman, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Certiorari. The question presented is the power of the superior court to proceed with the trial of an action pending therein on appeal from a judgment rendered by a justice's court, after denying a motion to dismiss the same made upon the ground that the superior court is without jurisdiction to try the case, for the reason that the sureties upon the undertaking failed to qualify within five days after exceptions interposed to their sufficiency, and that a second notice of appeal and undertaking thereon, filed before the expiration of the time within which the sureties might have qualified and while the first appeal was operative, was a nullity.

[1-3] An appeal from a justice's court is taken by filing a notice thereof with the justice and serving a copy thereof upon the adverse party (section 974, Code Civ. Proc.), but it "is not effectual for any purpose, unless an undertaking be filed" (section 978, Code Civ. Proc.). This implies that it is effectual if the undertaking required be filed. Appellant, in giving the notice and filing the undertaking, having fully complied with the provisions of the Code, the justice was divested of all jurisdiction in the matter, other than, as required by section 977, Code of Civil Procedure, and subject to the payment of his fees, to transmit the record to the clerk of the superior court for further proceedings. "The jurisdiction of the superior court attached upon the perfecting of the appeal by the filing of the undertaking, and having once attached could be divested only by an order of dismissal or some other act of that court." Moffat v. Greenwalt, 90 Cal. 368, 27 Pac. 296. The first appeal having been perfected, it ipso facto effected a transfer of the case to the superior court; hence there was nothing in the justice's court which could be made the subject of the second appeal (Brown v. Plummer, 70 Cal. 337, 11 Pac. 631; Tompkins v. Montgomery, 116 Cal. 120, 47 Pac. 1006), and the proceeding, since there was nothing upon which it could operate was, therefore, a nullity. While section 978a, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, where an exception to the sufficiency of the sureties is interposed, they must justify within five days thereafter, otherwise the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given, this does not, ipso facto, affect the appeal, the perfecting of which has vested jurisdiction of the case in the superior court; but, as said in Moffat v. Greenwalt, supra, the provision is to be construed "as giving to the respondent the right, if he shall choose to avail himself thereof, to move for its dismissal upon the ground that since it was taken it has become ineffectual." The purported appeal in the second proceeding, therefore, being a nullity, and the sureties upon the undertaking on the first appeal having, in response to exception to their sufficiency, failed to justify, it follows that, upon the conceded showing of such fact made, the court had no jurisdiction other than to make an order granting petitioner's motion.

The order denying petitioner's motion to dismiss the appeal in that certain action wherein Lewis E. Tucker is plaintiff and petitioner is defendant, now pending in the superior court of Los Angeles county, is annulled; and it is further ordered that respondent refrain and desist from any action or proceeding therein other than to make an order dismissing the appeal from the judgment rendered by the justice's court.

COLYEAR v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY
et al. (Civ. 2964.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 27, 1919.)

1. EXECUTION §414—SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS—ADVERSE INTEREST IN PROPERTY—WAREHOUSEMAN'S LIEN.

In supplementary proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 717, court's order, under section 719, requiring warehouseman, who was not a party to the action, to deliver judgment debtor's stored goods to judgment creditor notwithstanding warehouseman's claim of lien thereon for storage charges, was unwarranted, in view of section 720, warehouseman being entitled to have his right in the property determined in an ordinary action.

2. PROHIBITION §3(5)—GROUNDS—THREAT TO ADJUDGE PETITIONER GUILTY OF CONTEMPT.

Where court made unwarranted order in supplementary proceedings directing warehouseman claiming lien on goods to deliver them to judgment creditor, and threatens to adjudge warehouseman in contempt and commit him to jail as punishment for refusal to comply therewith, an appeal from the order will not afford speedy and adequate remedy, and prohibition to prohibit court from adjudging him in contempt will lie.

Petition for writ of prohibition by Curtis C. Colyear doing business under the firm name and style of the Colyear Van & Storage Company against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for County of Los Angeles and another. Respondent ordered to desist and refrain from enforcing certain order.

Joseph A. Adair, W. S. Baird, and Henry O. Wackerbarth, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Mabel Walker Willebrandt, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Prohibition. As appears from the verified petition, to which respondent has interposed a general demurrer and an answer, A. H. Mitchell, then in the possession of certain household furniture and furnishings, did, on September 4, 1918, deliver the same to petitioner who, as a warehouseman, received the same on storage for hire and issued a nonnegotiable warehouse receipt therefor. Thereafter the sheriff of Los Angeles county, under and by virtue of an execution issued upon a judgment rendered by the superior court of Los Angeles county in an action to which petitioner was not a party, brought therein by Harry Perkins against A. H. Mitchell for the possession of the goods, made demand upon petitioner for the delivery of the same to him, with which demand petitioner refused to comply, unless he produced an order therefor from Mitchell and paid the storage charges. Thereupon an order was issued in said action by respondent, copy of which was duly served upon petitioner, requiring him to appear in said court to answer concerning said property. Upon the appearance of petitioner in response to said order, a hearing was had wherein an order was made as follows:

"Harry Perkins v. A. H. Mitchell. In the matter of the order for appearance of A. H.

Mitchell, judgment debtor, and the order for Colyear Van & Storage Company to appear and answer concerning property, which comes on now to be heard, F. Horowitz and Mabel W. Willebrandt appearing as attorneys for the plaintiff and H. O. Wackerbarth appearing for the defendant, it appearing that Colyear Van & Storage Company has the property described in the complaint, and is holding the same as the agent of defendant, it is ordered that said Colyear Van & Storage Company deliver said property to the plaintiff within 10 days."

Petitioner, claiming an interest in the property, refuses to comply with the order, by reason whereof respondent threatens to and will, unless prohibited by this court, adjudge petitioner guilty of contempt and commit him to jail as punishment therefor.

[1, 2] Petitioner was not a party to the action of Perkins v. Mitchell, and the order made, requiring him to deliver to plaintiff therein the goods in which he claimed an interest was wholly unwarranted. Counsel for respondent insists, however, that petitioner, though not a party to the action, if aggrieved by the order made, has a right to appeal therefrom, and since an appeal will afford him a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, prohibition will not lie. Conceding, but not holding, this to be true, a sufficient answer thereto is that petitioner is not seeking a review of the order, but seeks to have the court prohibited from making an order based thereon, which the court threatens to and will make, adjudging him guilty of contempt and committing him to jail for refusing to comply therewith, from which, if made, no appeal lies.

The order made was in a proceeding supplementary to execution, as provided by chapter 2 (of title 9 of part 2), Code of Civil Procedure. Section 717 provides that after a return of an execution against property of the judgment debtor and upon proof that any person has property of such judgment debtor, the judge may by order require such person to appear and answer concerning the same. It was under this provision of law that petitioner was required to appear and answer concerning the property. Section 719 provides that the judge upon such hearing may order any property belonging to the judgment debtor, which is in the hands of any other person, to be applied toward the satisfaction of the judgment, but with this express proviso:

"But no such order can be made as to * * * property in the hands of any other person, * * * if such person claims an interest in the property adverse to the judgment debtor."

It is perfectly clear that petitioner claimed an interest in the property adverse to Mitchell by virtue of his lien thereon as a warehouseman for the storage of the property consigned to him by one who, in so far as this record shows, was at the time of the consignment in the lawful possession thereof. The law does not authorize the trial of the rights of a third party claiming property adverse to a judgment debtor in this summary manner. He is entitled to his day in court, with an opportunity for the determination of his rights in an ordinary action, as specified in section 720, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that, if it appears that a person having property of the judgment debtor in any case claims an interest therein adverse to such judgment debtor, the judgment creditor may maintain an action against such person for the recovery thereof; and the court may by order forbid a disposition or transfer of the property until an action can be commenced and prosecuted to judgment.

The court acted in excess of its jurisdiction in making the order requiring petitioner to deliver possession of the property to plaintiff in said action. McDowell v. Bell, 86 Cal. 615, 25 Pac. 128; High v. Bank of Commerce, 103 Cal. 525, 37 Pac. 508; Lewis v. Chamberlain, 108 Cal. 525, 41 Pac. 413. Hence it follows that the violation of such order constitutes no warrant for adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt and imposing punishment therefor.

It is therefore ordered that respondent desist and refrain from any proceeding having for its purpose the enforcing of that certain order made by the superior court of Los Angeles county on March 6, 1919, in the case of Harry Perkins v. A. H. Mitchell.

MECHANICS' LIENS § 72—EXTRA WORK ORDERED BY ARCHITECT—LIABILITY OF OWNER.

In a suit to foreclose mechanic's lien, contract to lay a concrete floor over the entire surface of a basement not less than 5 inches thick, the work to be performed under direction of the architect, held to bind the owner to pay for extra thickness of foundation ordered by architect in view of Civ. Code, §§ 2317, 2319, 2331, 2332, 2334, 3519, and 3521.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Q. Scribante against William Edwards and others. From the judgment rendered, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Edgar C. Chapman, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Albert Picard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRITTAİN, J. The defendant owner appeals from a judgment on a mechanic's lien. As stated in the opening brief, the single point presented is upon the interpretation of the contract. No authorities are cited in the briefs. The contract was evidenced by two writings, both prepared by the architect employed by the owner, one in form an offer to do the work, and the other a formal acceptance of the offer. The work was to lay a concrete floor in the basement of an old building, under which there was a pressure of water, causing it to precolate through the old floor and to flood the basement. When the writings were prepared, the basement was flooded to a depth of about 18 inches and the old floor was covered with mud. It was impracticable, if not impossible, to ascertain the condition of the old floor, and the architect and contractor, at least, assumed it was substantially level. The offer was to pump out and to clean the basement and to do certain other work in addition to the main work of laying the concrete floor. Upon the assumption of substantial uniformity of the surface of the old floor, the contractor computed the amount of concrete which would be required to lay a floor with a foundation 5 inches thick with a surface of an additional thickness of one inch. The architect was not at that time sure whether a floor of the thickness bid upon would be sufficiently strong to stop out the percolating water, a unit price for extra thickness was fixed by a computation of the area of the basement multiplied by one inch to ascertain the number of cubic yards of concrete which would be required for each additional inch of thickness.

The clauses of the contract which are in question are the following:

"Lay a concrete floor over the entire surface of the basement not less than five inches thick with good and proper fall to the sump at N. E. corner of the basement; * * * lay a top or finish floor one inch thick. * * * This work is to be performed under the direction of Fred Burrage Wood, architect, for the sum of one thousand and twenty-five ($1,025.00) dollars. * * * Should you desire to increase the thickness of the base or foundation floor I will furnish the materials same as in proposed floor as above and perform the labor for the sum of one hundred and twenty-five ($125.00) per inch thickness over and above the proposed five inches."

When the basement was pumped out, upon the advice of the architect, the owner, through the architect, orally instructed the contractor to increase the thickness of the foundation one inch. It was then apparent that the old floor was undulating, and that a floor of uniform thickness would not permit drainage to the sump. The contractor informed the architect that, even with the proposed additional inch of concrete, if the floor were laid so as to permit drainage, it would leave only about 3 inches of thickness over the high places in the old floor. The architect thereupon directed the foundation to be made 6 inches thick over the high places, and himself marked at more than 60 places on the walls and pillars the elevations to which the floor was to be laid. When the work was completed it was found the additional concrete over the original amount determined by computation was equivalent to $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches over the entire floor, that is, the admittedly ordered inch plus $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches additional which it is admitted went into the basement in filling the low spots in the original floor and in bringing the floor to the grade directed by the architect, acting for the owner.

On behalf of the appellant it is contended that under the contract as modified by the order of the additional inch of concrete the contractor was bound to lay a floor not less than 7 inches thick at the thinnest place, i. e., over the high places, on the old floor, and to lay that floor so that it would carry off the water and, further, that when the contractor discovered the condition of the floor after it had been pumped out, if the two requirements could not be fulfilled, the contractor should have refused to proceed with the work.

The contract bound the contractor to do the work under the architect's direction. The appellant by his argument admits the architect was the agent of the owner in ordering the contractor to lay the additional inch of foundation. To interpret the contract as contended for by the appellant would be to charge the contractor with the duty of determining at his peril which of the directions of the architect he was to fulfill and which he should disregard. Where the principal authorizes the agent to order work done, without notification to the contractor limiting the extent of the agent's power, the principal is bound, even though the agent exceeding his authority orders more work than the principal directed, in the absence of bad faith on the part of the contractor. Civ. Code, §§ 2317, 2319, 2331, 2334. When the attention of the architect was called to the physical impossibility of meeting the two conditions relied upon by the appellant, the architect directed the contractor to lay 7 inches of concrete on the high places and to work to grades which the architect then established. The work ordered by the architect was done satisfactorily. The work and the labor performed and the materials furnished were used in the alteration and repair of the appellant's building. Having received the benefit of the work, the owner should pay for it. Civ. Code, § 3521. The knowledge of the architect that the work was being done under his direction was notice to the owner. Civ. Code, § 2332. When the contractor told the architect what his order would require, the work might have been forbidden. Civ. Code, § 3519. There is no question presented as to the correctness of the amount for which judgment was rendered, if the interpretation of the contract by the lower court was correct. In holding the owner bound to pay for the extra work, the lower court interpreted the contract as binding the owner by the architect's order. This interpretation was correct.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. BANKS AND BANKING ⇐139—STOPPING PAYMENT OF CHECK—EFFECT.

Ordinarily, stopping payment of check does not discharge the liability of the maker to the holder.

2. SALES ⇐128—RESCISSION BY BUYER.

Where the buyer of automobile, who gave postdated check so that he could stop payment if he did not secure clear title, redelivered the automobile to the seller and stopped payment of the check, the buyer completely rescinded the sale as effectually as if the check had been returned to him for cancellation.

3. REPLEVIN ⇐8(1)—INTEREST OR RIGHT OF POSSESSION.

Plaintiff, who at the time of commencement of his action in claim and delivery for automobile had no interest in or right of possession of the car, was not in a position to commence or maintain the action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by A. H. Alchian against R. W. MacDonald and another. From judgment for plaintiff, the named defendant appeals. Reversed.

George G. Graham, of Fresno, for appellant.

Harry Sarkisian, of Fresno, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action in claim and delivery for one automobile. The plaintiff had judgment, and defendant MacDonald, alone, appeals.

Defendant MacDonald was purchasing an automobile, under contract of sale, from the E. L. Peacock Auto Company of Oakland. He desired to dispose of the car without the fact becoming known to a number of parties to whom he was indebted. He proposed to defendant Haig, and the latter joined him in executing, a plan whereby this might be done; they to divide the profit over and above a specified amount. Thereupon both defendants, representing themselves as owners of the automobile, offered to sell the same to plaintiff, in consideration of the payment of the sum of $700. Upon their agreeing to perfect title in themselves plaintiff delivered, to defendant Haig, a postdated check, payable to Haig, for the amount of the purchase price, and took possession of the automobile. Both defendants signed and delivered to plaintiff a bill of sale of the car. Plaintiff's purpose in postdating his check was, he testified, "in order to find out if it (the automobile) was clean and clear, that is, so I could get clear title to it. If the title did not vest in me I intended to stop payment of the check."

On the day following the delivery of the automobile to plaintiff, defendant Haig, at the request of defendant MacDonald, and as agreed between the two, paid to the real owner of the car the balance of the purchase price, and received a bill of sale thereto, together with a transfer to himself of the policy of insurance covering the car. He delivered both of these documents to plaintiff.

A disagreement arose between defendants Haig and MacDonald over the matter. MacDonald communicated this fact to plaintiff and asked for a rescission of the sale and return of the car, offering to restore the check to plaintiff. Plaintiff prepared and MacDonald signed a document which read as follows:

"Fresno, California, January 31, 1918.

"I, the undersigned, call the sale of one Aperson roadster car, factory No. 15094 canceled to A. H. Alchian and I will send the check of $700 to him made on Samuel H. Haig, which I also consider void, and I have also taken possession of the same car.

"[Signed] R. W. MacDonald."

Relying on this signed agreement, which he retained, plaintiff returned the automobile to MacDonald and promised to cancel the check, when it was restored to him. The check was not returned. The plaintiff stopped payment and subsequently brought this action.

MacDonald had in the meantime mortgaged the automobile to a third party in whose possession it was, and from whom the sheriff took it under the claim and delivery proceedings. The mortgagee made a third party claim to protect against which a bond was given. The mortgagee was not made a party to the action.

The main question to be determined on this appeal is: Was plaintiff entitled to possession of the automobile at the time of the commencement of the action? He had tentatively closed the deal by delivery of a postdated check "subject to cancellation," as he so testified, "if I did not get the car." Five days after giving the check, and eleven days before it became payable, he voluntarily prepared, and took from MacDonald, the document canceling the sale to himself, and acknowledging delivery of possession to MacDonald. With his full consent, MacDonald took entire possession of the car.

[1, 2] Ordinarily, stopping payment of a check does not discharge the liability of the maker to the holder. 7 Corpus Juris, par. 429, and cases cited. But in the present case, Haig, the holder of the check, was merely acting for, and as the agent of, MacDonald. He had entered into a scheme of misrepresentation and concealment for the purpose of assisting the latter in more readily disposing of his interest in the automobile, and became the convenient medium for the roundabout transfer of the title of the car from defendant MacDonald to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was not concerned with any agreement between the two defendants, looking to a division of the proceeds of the sale. When he redelivered the automobile to one of them, and stopped payment of the check as to both, he withdrew the entire consideration for, and worked a complete rescission of, the sale, as effectually as if the check had been returned by the defendants for cancellation.

[3] The plaintiff did not, at the time of the commencement of the action, have any interest in, or right of possession of, the automobile. He was therefore not in a position to commence or maintain it. Garcia v. Gunn, 119 Cal. 315, 51 Pac. 684; Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 33 Pac. 750.

In view of the conclusion we have reached, we do not deem it necessary to pass upon the other points made on this appeal.

The judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by the City of Los Angeles against George T. Cline, Bettie C. Rorick, William Rorick, and others. Action dismissed on plaintiff's motion, and from judgment of dismissal awarding the two last named defendants their costs and attorney's fees, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Daniel M. Hunsaker, Hunsaker & Britt, Le Roy M. Edwards, and Samuel Poorman, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. In this action the plaintiff proceeded under the "Street Opening Act of 1903," and sought to condemn and take for street purposes certain land of the respondents. After trial and a verdict assessing the value of the land to be taken, an interlocutory judgment was entered whereby the property of the respondents was condemned to the use of the plaintiff upon the payment of the amount specified in the judgment. The compensation provided for by said judgment was not paid. Instead thereof, the city attorney, after being duly authorized thereto by the city council, moved the court for dismissal of the action, and a judgment of dismissal was entered. Thereafter, upon motion of the respondents, the court set aside the judgment of dismissal and entered a new judgment of dismissal, awarding to respondents their costs, including the sum of $850 for attorney fees. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals, and this court is called upon to determine whether or not the lower court was authorized to allow attorney fees to the respondents.

Title 7 of part 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribes the general rules for the exercise of the right of eminent domain in this state. In said title 7 is contained section 1255a, which was added to that Code by act approved March 17, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 377). It provides for the right of abandonment of a condemnation proceeding and that "upon such abandonment, express or implied, on motion of defendant, a judgment shall be entered dismissing the proceeding and awarding the defendant his costs and disbursements, which shall include all necessary expenses incurred in preparing for trial and reasonable attorney fees." Appellant does not challenge the constitutionality of section 1255a. That has been done in other cases, wherein the validity of the section was upheld. City of Sacramento v. Swanston, 29 Cal. App. 212, 155 Pac. 101; Silver Lake, etc., Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 32 Cal. App. 123, 162 Pac. 432. It was held that the proceeding to condemn property for a public use "is so differentiated from the ordinary actions or proceedings in a court of justice * * * as to bring it within the settled test justifying the assignment of the proceeding to a particular class for the purposes of reasonable provisions not applicable to other classes of actions."

Section 6 of the Street Opening Act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 378) provides that the action for condemnation of land in proceedings under that act "shall, in all respects, be subject to and governed by such rules of the Code of Civil Procedure now existing, or that may be hereafter adopted, as may be applicable thereto, except in the particulars otherwise provided for in this act." Section 14 of that act declares the time and terms upon which proceedings thereunder may be abandoned. By act approved April 12, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 895, § 1), the Legislature made the following addition to said section 14:

"If the proceedings be abandoned or the action dismissed no attorney's fees shall be awarded the defendants or either or any of them."

Appellant contends that, by reason of this amendment, respondents are deprived of the right to attorney fees in this action, which right they otherwise could claim under section 1255a, Code of Civil Procedure. To this contention the respondents reply that said amendment of section 14 is void because it is in conflict with certain prohibitions contained in the Constitution of the state.

"All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." Const. art. 1, § 11.

"The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: * * *

"Third. Regulating the practice of courts of justice. * * *

"Thirty-third. In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." Const. art. 4, § 25.

These provisions of the Constitution have been illustrated and applied in numerous decisions, to only a few of which we need briefly refer. In City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 251, 27 Pac. 607, after some discussion of earlier cases the court said:

"The conclusion is that, although a law is general and constitutional when it applies equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction, it is not general or constitutional if it confers particular privileges or imposes peculiar disabilities or burdensome conditions, in the exercise of a common right, upon a class of persons arbitrarily selected from the general body of those who stand in precisely the same relation to the subject of the law."

In Title, etc., Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 325, 88 Pac. 356, 366 (8 L. R. A. [N. S.] 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199), the Supreme Court again was called upon to define the differences between general laws and those which are special, and to emphasize the fact that under appropriate circumstances special rules may be made which, although applicable only to particular classes of cases, yet retain the characteristics of general laws. The court said:

"After all, the question of classification is primarily for the Legislature. The court is not to set aside a statute merely because in its view it may have been unwise or unnecessary to apply certain rules to one class of cases. Before the act can be declared invalid on this ground, it must appear to the court that there was no reasonable basis on which the peculiar legislative provision could have been made."

The Street Opening Act of 1903 is not the only statute under which the plaintiff might have elected to open the street and condemn therefor the land of respondents. Section 36 of that act provides that said act shall in no wise affect the Street Opening Act approved March 6, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70), or any other acts on the same subject, but is intended to provide an alternative system of proceedings for the purposes stated. As the act of 1889 is silent on the subject of allowances for attorney fees, it follows without any doubt that proceedings under that act are governed by the provisions contained in section 1255a, Code of Civil Procedure, under which, upon abandonment and dismissal of the action, attorney fees must be allowed. There is no difference between the act of 1889 and the act of 1903 upon which to base a discrimination which would deprive the defendants of the right to an allowance for attorney fees in one proceeding, although that right clearly exists in the other proceeding. Moreover, there is much force in the argument of respondents that the rule stated in section 1255a, Code of Civil Procedure, allowing attorney fees generally upon abandonment and dismissal of condemnation proceedings, should exclusively control all such cases, because equally in all such cases the defendant property owner is brought into court against his will and without any claim that he has violated any obligation due from him to the plaintiff. In this respect the situation of the defendant is precisely the same in an action to condemn land for street purposes as in an action to take his land for the use of a railroad or for any other public use.

Our conclusion is that the provision here under consideration of section 14 of the Street Opening Act of 1903, is contrary to the limitations prescribed by the Constitution, and therefore may not be enforced.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BONFANTI. (Cr. 838.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §1186(4)—HARMLESS ERROR—ALLEGATIONS OF INFORMATION.

In view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, a conviction of assault with intent to commit rape under Pen. Code, § 220, will not be reversed by reason of the information failing to state that the victim of the assault was not the wife of defendant; it clearly appearing on the trial that she was not his wife, but was the wife of another.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §829(1)—INSTRUCTIONS.

It was not error to refuse requested instructions, where those given covered the law sought to be brought to the attention of the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Mario Bonfanti was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, and appeals. Affirmed.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was convicted of the offense of assault with intent to commit rape, and appeals from the judgment. He urges three grounds in support of his appeal, the first of which is that the information fails to state an offense within the jurisdiction of the superior court—the court in which he was tried and convicted. The defect of the information referred to is that there is no statement therein that the victim of the assault was not the wife of its perpetrator; that accordingly, for aught that appears in the information, she may have been his wife, and consequently the alleged acts of violence constitute in law a simple assault, an offense not within the jurisdiction of the superior court.

The offense that the information purported to charge is that defined by section 220 of the Penal Code, which provides that "every person who assaults another with intent to commit rape * * * is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison. * * *" Section 261 of the same Code defines rape as "an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator," under variant conditions set forth in said section, among which is the accomplishment of the act by means of force and without the consent of the participant. It is thereupon argued that an information charging an assault with intent to commit rape must contain the same statement with reference to the woman as in a charge of rape itself, namely, that she was not the wife of the perpetrator.

The cases of People v. Miles, 9 Cal. App. 312, 101 Pac. 525, and People v. Everett, 10 Cal. App. 12, 101 Pac. 528, are cited in support of the appellant's contention. The first of these cases was upon an information charging the same offense as in the case at bar, and the second of them was upon an information charging rape, in both of which it was held that the omission to state therein that the female concerned was not the wife of the defendant rendered the information so defective as to necessitate a reversal of the judgment.

In this connection, however, it is urged by the Attorney General that the two cases cited, having been decided prior to the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution known as section 4½ of article 6 thereof, should no longer be regarded as controlling; a new rule having been prescribed by that amendment for the guidance of appellate courts in the decision of appeals.

The new rule of decision laid down by the Constitution is couched in the following terms:

"No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, in any case, on the ground of the misdirection of the jury, or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, * * * the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

The defect in the information here pointed out is an error of pleading, and, following the mandatory direction of the Constitution, the judgment should not be reversed or a new trial granted unless that error of pleading has, in the opinion of this court, formed after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, resulted in a miscarriage of justice. It becomes, then, pertinent to inquire how the omission to state in the information that the woman upon whom the defendant is charged with having committed the assault was not his wife affected his trial, and to determine whether the omission pointed out affected it to such an extent as to have brought about a miscarriage of justice. An examination of the record immediately discloses that the omission in question affected the trial not at all; in fact, the trial proceeded as if the allegation were there. Its absence was not noticed by the defendant. He did not even demur to the indictment; if he had done which his cause of complaint would have been at once removed, but without his thereby gaining any apparent advantage. For the fact is that the woman was not his wife. Some of the instructions to the jury proposed by his own counsel stated the fact baldly that he was in fact charged with an assault to commit rape. It appeared at the trial that the victim of his assault was not in fact his wife, but was the wife of another man—his neighbor—and the mother of three children. It could not be contended, even by the defendant, that if the information had contained the statement that the victim of the assault was not his wife, the trial would have proceeded with one iota's difference from the course it took, or that the verdict of the jury or the judgment of the court would have been other than it was.

[1] Under these circumstances, it appears to us that there could hardly be a case to which to apply more appropriately the rule of decision laid down by the Constitution.

This rule since its adoption has been applied many times, and, we think, in cases where the error relied upon was of a less trivial character, regarded from the point of view of its consequences, than the one here. Thus in People v. Tomskey, 20 Cal. App. 672, 130 Pac. 184, the trial was had without the defendant having entered a plea of guilty or not guilty. This must be conceded to be a very substantial departure from proper and regular procedure, but it was held not to be sufficient to require a reversal of the case where the record did not show that a miscarriage of justice had resulted. In People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 130 Pac. 1042, and People v. Lawlor, 21 Cal. App. 69, 131 Pac. 63, the errors upon which a reversal was sought were of improper admission of evidence or misdirection of the jury, but it was held that the constitutional rule of decision required the affirmance of the judgment; it not appearing to the appellate court after its examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, that such errors had resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[2] Two other grounds for reversal are urged, namely, that the court refused to instruct the jury in certain specific terms as requested by the defendant, and that the evidence fails to show that the assault established thereby had for its object the raping of its victim. An examination of the instructions actually given to the jury discloses that they covered the law sought to be brought to its attention in those that were refused, although in different terms, and the examination of the evidence that we have made satisfies us that the jury was warranted in finding this question of intent against the defendant.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

HAUN v. TALLY et al. (Civ. 2626.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 5, 1919. On Rehearing in Supreme Court in Bank, June 5, 1919.)

1. THEATERS AND SHOWS — 6—RULE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR—APPLICABILITY.

Accident due to electric fan becoming detached from the connecting motor, resulting in the fan falling and striking plaintiff patron of defendant's theater on the head, was such as to make applicable the rule of res ipsa loquitur.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR — 880(2) — PARTY WHO MAY CLAIM ERROR.

In action against owner of theater and employé who installed electric fan, which became loose from its motor and fell, striking plaintiff on the head, that court advised jury that presumption of negligence from happening of accident did not apply to employé held a matter about which owner is not in a position to complain on appeal.

3. DAMAGES — 216(1)—INJURY TO PATRON—INSTRUCTIONS.

In action against owner of theater and employé who installed electric fan, which became loose from its motor and fell, striking plaintiff on the head, held court did not err in instructing that the expenses incurred by plaintiff for services of physician and value of time lost were the subjects of direct proof, and are to be determined only on the evidence which the jury has before it.

4. TRIAL — 260(8) — INSTRUCTION SUFFICIENTLY COVERED BY CHARGE—REFUSAL.

There was no error of a substantial nature in refusing to give a particular instruction which narrated the several acts contained in the charging part of the complaint as constituting negligence and advising the jury that plaintiff was required to make proof thereof, where the general charge of the court as given advised the jury that the burden was upon plaintiff to sustain the allegations made.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court in Bank.

5. NEGLIGENCE — 138(2) — INSTRUCTIONS — PRIMA FACIE NEGLIGENCE—COUNTERVAILING EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries from fall of fan, instruction that the prima facie case of negligence made by falling of fan "would justify a verdict in favor of plaintiff, unless the evidence in the case negatives that prima facie presumption, and establishes to your satisfaction that it was not the negligence of the defendants," was erroneous, in not requiring plaintiff's evidence to preponderate in weight over countervailing evidence.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1064(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In action for injuries from fall of fan, instruction as to prima facie case of negligence made by falling of fan, without requiring plain-tiff's evidence to preponderate over countervailing evidence, was harmless, in view of the evidence and the charge as a whole.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Harold W. Haun against Thomas L. Tally and another. From an adverse judgment and from an order denying his motion for new trial, defendant named appellants. Affirmed.

Delphin M. Delmas, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This appeal is taken by defendant Tally from an adverse judgment and from an order made denying his motion for a new trial.

The action was one for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendants. Tally was the owner of a theater, Darnell was his employé. On a certain day in the year 1914, Darnell, having received instructions from his employer so to do, procured and installed in one of the ventilating apertures of the theater an electrically propelled fan. On the 9th day of April of the same year plaintiff, after paying the required price of admission, was occupying a seat in the theater for the purpose of enjoying the entertainment. While he was so occupied the metal fan hereinbefore referred to became detached from the connecting motor and fell, striking the head of the plaintiff and inflicting quite a serious injury, compensation for which was assessed by the jury in this action at the sum of $3,500. The points upon which appellant Tally relies are few, and are succinctly stated in the opening brief of his counsel. They relate wholly to the matter of giving and refusal to give certain instructions to the jury. It will be necessary to preface a consideration of the contentions urged against the judgment with a statement as to some portions of the allegations of the complaint and the whole charge as given by the court to the jury. That portion of the complaint wherein the particular negligence of the appellant was referred to is as follows:

"On information and belief plaintiff alleges that the defendants, as a part of the furnishings and fixtures of the said theater, constructed, operated, installed, and maintained, for the convenience and comfort of the patrons of the said defendant Tally, a two ventilating fan, alternating currents, of six blades. That said defendants did not exercise due care in the construction, operation, installation, and maintenance of the said fan, but constructed, operated, installed, and maintained the same in a careless and negligent manner, and in particular that the said fan was so constructed and installed, operated and maintained that the same became loosened and did fall upon the patrons of said defendant Tally, and in particular on this plaintiff; that the said fan was so maintained, installed, and operated that the pressure of the running and operating the same caused the said fan to pull away from the motor and its bearings, thereby causing the said fan to fall from its said bearings on said 9th day of April, 1914, striking and injuring the plaintiff."

The court instructed the jury generally that the burden of proving negligence in the case was upon the party alleging that negligence, and that unless the jury could find that the plaintiff had established negligence by a preponderance of the evidence the verdict should be for the defendants. It instructed the jury as to the particular negligence alleged and relied upon by the plaintiff, in the terms of that paragraph of the complaint from which we have already quoted. This instruction followed:

"With relation to the operation, installation, and maintenance of the fan, the court instructs you it was the duty of the defendants to exercise ordinary care in the erection and installation of this appliance in the theater, and that that ordinary care is to be measured with relation, so far as this case is concerned, to the effect upon the patrons of the theater. If, therefore, you find that the fan in question fell on April 9, 1914, and injured the plaintiff while he was a patron in the theater it will be for you to determine whether or not such fall was the result of its negligent installation, operation, or maintenance. If you find that the fall was due to such maintenance, operation, or installation having been made in a negligent manner, your verdict in this case will be in favor of the plaintiff for such amount as you find from the evidence and under the instructions of the court he has suffered in the way of damages by reason of such negligence of the defendants, if you find they are negligent. The court further instructs you, gentlemen, in regard to the matter of negligence, that when a thing which causes an injury is shown to be under the management of the defendants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management, with proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, that the accident arose from want of care. To apply that doctrine to the case in question, if you find that the falling of the fan in question was such a thing as does not ordinarily happen if those who have the management thereof use proper care in the management and operation thereof, it affords prima facie evidence of negligence, and would justify a verdict in favor of the plaintiff unless the evidence in the case negatives that prima facie presumption, and establishes to your satisfaction that it was not the result of the negligence of the defendants."

As to the matter of damages an instruction was given which contained the following statement:

"The expenses incurred by him for the services of physicians and surgeons and the value of any time lost are subjects of direct proof, and are to be determined only on the evidence which the jury has before it, and must not exceed the amounts specifically claimed therefor in the complaint. The other elements of damage are from necessity left to the sound discretion of the jury, but in no event must the amount of damages exceed the amount alleged, $25,000."

[1] There was no dispute as to the fact that the fan fell and injured the plaintiff in the manner described, or that it fell by reason of pulling or dropping away from its motor bearings. The fan was exclusively within the charge and control of the defendant Tally, and the occurrence of the accident was such a one as to make applicable instructions as to a presumption of negligence arising under the familiar rule of res ipsa loquitur. Counsel says that because the complaint alleged that "the pressure of the running and operating the same caused the said fan to pull away from the motor and its bearings, thereby causing the said fan to fall," the plaintiff exhibited the fact that he had knowledge of what the alleged acts of negligence consisted, and that such matters then demanded express proof, leaving no room for any presumption to be used in aid of the case of plaintiff. We do not concede that where specific acts of negligence are described, the plaintiff in making his proof will be deprived of the aid of the presumption of negligence in a proper case (respondent cites a case to the contrary, Cassady v. Old Colony Street Ry. Co., 184 Mass. 156, 68 N. E. 10, 63 L. R. A. 285); but that is not the situation here. Plaintiff alleges on information and belief that the fan was so negligently and carelessly constructed, installed, and operated as to become loose and fall, adding the further descriptive statement as to the pressure of running the fan having caused it to pull away from the motor bearings. Plaintiff did not attempt to particularize what the defects in the fan were which would permit the same when operated to become separated from the motor part of the appliance. The fan was intended to be operated, and, if properly constructed and maintained, would not have pulled away from its attachments while running. It is claimed, further, however, that by the instruction given on the question of the application of the rule of presumption of negligence the court went too far, and in effect placed the burden upon the appellant to establish nonnegligence as against the presumption by a preponderance of the evidence. It will be noted that the court in concluding that instruction stated to the jury that the prima facie case made out with the aid of the presumption "would justify a verdict in favor of the plaintiff unless the evidence in the case negatives that prima facie presumption, and establishes to your satisfaction that it was not the result of the negligence of the defendants." The argument of appellant impresses us with much force, and if we could consider the question an open one we would be inclined to agree that the instruction was improper. In giving this particular instruction the court seems to have left out of view the requirement that the evidence of the plaintiff must preponderate in weight, and that the defendant will be entitled to judgment where the countervailing evidence merely balances, but does not overcome, the case made by the plaintiff. Then, too, it might well be argued that proof to the "satisfaction" of the jury would require even more than a preponderance, and reach almost to proof beyond a reasonable doubt. We can see little difference between that instruction—referring now only to the use of the words "establishes to your satisfaction"—and one considered by the Supreme Court in Campbell v. Bradbury (Sup.) 176 Pac. 685. The language there considered is said by the court to amount to a "reasonable doubt" instruction. However that may be, the Supreme Court in a number of cases has given consideration to instructions similar to that about which complaint is here made, and has held that there was no error committed against a defendant by the giving thereof (Osgood v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 137 Cal. 280, 70 Pac. 169, 92 Am. St. Rep. 171), and as to the general application of the rule (Steele v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 375, 143 Pac. 718; Wyatt v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 170, 103 Pac. 892; Worden v. Central Fireproof Building Co., 172 Cal. 94, 155 Pac. 839). On the other side of the question, and in a case where the court did instruct the jury that the defendant was only required to introduce sufficient evidence "to balance such a presumption without overcoming it by preponderance of the evidence," the Supreme Court declined, and no doubt properly so, to reverse the case upon the appeal of the plaintiff. The Osgood Case, supra, however, directly meets the question which the instruction here considered proposes, by asserting that—

"This presumption [the presumption of negligence], which the law raises from proof of certain facts, is 'satisfactory if uncontradicted' (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963); and to meet it the evidence of defendant must show to the satisfaction of the jury that defendant was 'without any negligence on its part.'"

We will there leave this question and hold that there was no error in the instruction, so holding only because we think that the decisions of the Supreme Court have foreclosed us against the exercise of any original judgment in the matter.

[2] Further complaint is made because the court advised the jury that the presumption of negligence hereinbefore referred to applied only to the appellant and not to Darnell, his employé. The evidence showed that Darnell was instructed to procure the fan and to install it, and that he followed instructions in that regard, although he was not an expert in such matters. The defendant's liability, assuming that negligence was shown in the installation or operation of the fan, cannot be questioned. That Darnell may have been improperly exculpated we think is a matter about which the appellant is not in a position here to complain.

[3] It is contended that the court erred in instructing the jury that the expenses incurred by the plaintiff for services of physicians and the value of time lost were "subjects of direct proof, and are to be determined only on the evidence which the jury has before it," in that there was left out of view the right of the jury to form its own opinion as to those elements of damage. No evidence was introduced by the defendant to contradict in any way the proof made by the plaintiff as to these matters. Strictly speaking, considering that the evidence referred to by the court would include the evidence as to the quantity of time lost by the plaintiff and the amount of services rendered by physicians and surgeons, the instruction was correct. The jury would have no right to go outside of the evidence to determine any of those things. The court's intention no doubt was to place before the jury the fact that these matters were matters of particular damage, to support which particular proof was needed, whereas, as to other general elements of damage, the sound discretion of the jury would control. The instruction is so phrased, and its language is quite clear.

[4] We do not think that there was any error of a substantial nature in the court's refusing to give a particular instruction offered by appellant which narrated the several things contained in the charging part of the complaint as constituting negligence and advised the jury that plaintiff was required to make proof thereof. The general charge of the court as given advised the jury that the burden was upon the plaintiff to sustain the allegations made.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court in Bank.

PER CURIAM. [5, 6] In denying the application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, Division I, we are not to be understood as approving the instruction discussed in the opinion to the effect that the prima facie case of negligence made by the falling of the fan "would justify a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, unless the evidence in the case negatives that prima facie presumption, and establishes to your satisfaction that it was not the result of the negligence of the defendants." We think the italicized portion of this instruction was erroneous for the reason suggested in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, namely, in leaving out the requirement that the evidence of the plaintiff must preponderate in weight, and that the defendant will be entitled to judgment where the countervailing evidence merely balances, but does not outweigh, the case made by the plaintiff. But in view of the evidence and the charge of the court taken as a whole we cannot conceive that this defect in this particular instruction in any way contributed to the verdict, and therefore are of the opinion that the error must be held to be without prejudice.

The petition for a hearing in this court is denied.

All concur, except WILBUR, J., not participating.

Act Jan. 30, 1919, authorizing the state board of control to purchase warrants of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, issued in payment for the expense of continuing the construction of the east levee of the Sutter by-pass, is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 33, forbidding special laws in all cases where a general law can be made applicable.

2. STATES $\S$ 119—GIFT OF LOAN BY STATE—

Act Jan. 30, 1919, authorizing state board of control to purchase warrants of Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, issued in payment for expense of continuing construction of east levee of Sutter by-pass, is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 31, prohibiting the giving or lending of credit of the state or making a gift to any individual, municipal, or other corporation whatever; reclamation districts, and particularly the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, not being in strictness "corporations" at all, but governmental agencies.

Application for writ of mandate by the Argyle Dredging Company against John S. Chambers, as Controller of the State of California. Demurrer to the application overruled, and peremptory writ prayed for ordered to issue.

James S. Spilman and Chas. H. Oatman, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

John W. Carrigan, of Los Angeles, and Jas. L. Attridge, of San Jose, for respondent.

Robt. T. Devlin, of San Francisco, as amicus curiae.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the State.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an application for a writ of mandate compelling the controller to issue his warrant for the payment of plaintiff's claim. As the matter was one of emergency, and as at the argument we were fully convinced that the writ should issue, it was so ordered from the bench. By the request of all parties we will state the case and the reasons for our conclusion.

It appears from the petition as follows: That the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district is "a body politic and corporate created by the act of the Legislature of this state, approved December 24, 1911" (Stats. 1911, Extra Session, p. 117), as amended and supplemented by the act of May 26, 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 252), and was further amended and supplemented by the act of June 9, 1915 (Stats. of 1915, p. 1338), which said act of 1911, as amended by said act of 1915, "is known and designated and referred to as the 'Reclamation Board Act,' as provided in section 31 of said acts as so amended and supplemented"; that the reclamation board referred to in the petition was created and exists as provided for in said Reclamation Board Act; "that the management and control of the said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district is by virtue of section 5 of said Reclamation Board Act vested in the said reclamation board." We quote from the petition:

"V. That pursuant to the provisions of said Reclamation Board Act the said reclamation board did, in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of said Reclamation Board Act, adopt and determine upon a certain portion or project of the plans to be carried out by said board and did designate the same by the name and number of 'Sutter-Butte By-Pass Project No. Six,' and did pass its order and resolution for the levying of an assessment in the sum of more than $10,000,000 upon the lands within said Sacramento and San Joaquin district to be benefited thereby, as might be determined in the manner provided by law, and did direct that said assessment be known and designated as 'Sutter-Butte By-Pass Assessment No. Six,' and did appoint three assessors for the purpose of making said assessment, all in the manner required and provided by said Reclamation Board Act.

"VI. That a part of the said Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 so adopted and determined upon by said reclamation board is the construction of a levee along the East line of a by-pass in Sutter Basin, in Sutter county, California, known as the Sutter by-pass, the said levee being known and designated as the east levee of the Sutter by-pass.

"VII. That after the adoption of said Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 the said reclamation board, acting for and on behalf of the said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, entered into a contract with your petitioner for dredging work to be done by the dredger Argyle in and about the construction of the said east levee of the Sutter by-pass. That pursuant to said contract, and in the summer of 1918, your petitioner commenced work upon said east levee of the Sutter by-pass with the said dredger Argyle, which work has been prosecuted continuously ever since. That on the 1st and 2d days of February, 1919, your petitioner, pursuant to said contract, performed work upon the construction of the said east levee of the Sutter by-pass, for which work so performed on said two days your petitioner was entitled to be paid by said reclamation board for and on behalf of said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district the sum of $255 according to the terms of said contract.

"VIII. That thereafter the claim of your petitioner for said sum of $255 against the said Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, acting by and through the reclamation board, was duly presented to and allowed by the said reclamation board, and was thereafter submitted to the state board of control for its scrutiny and approval, and was thereafter approved by the said state board of control, and thereafter, and on February 20, 1919, a warrant numbered 24274, was duly drawn by the state controller upon the state treasurer in favor of your petitioner for said sum of $255, payable out of said Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6, for the amount of the said claim of your petitioner, which said warrant was thereupon and on said day by the said state controller delivered to your petitioner and was by your petitioner on February 21, 1919, presented to the state treasurer for payment, but there were no funds in the hands of the state treasurer to pay the said warrant when so presented, and the said state treasurer did thereupon register the said warrant and did indorse on said warrant the date of said presentation and the fact that it was not paid for want of funds, all as provided in and by section 15 of the said Reclamation Board Act.

"IX. That the Legislature of this state now in session passed an act, entitled 'An act authorizing the state board of control to purchase warrants of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district issued in payment for the expense of continuing the construction of the east levee of the Sutter by-pass, appropriating money therefor, and providing for reimbursement to the state of such appropriation,' which said act was approved by the Governor of this state on January 30, 1919. That a copy of said act is hereunto annexed and marked Exhibit A, and is hereby referred to and made a part hereof. That said Legislature did, in section 6 of said act, declare that it deemed it necessary for the immediate preservation of the public health and safety that said act should go into immediate effect, and did in section 6 of said act set forth a statement of the facts constituting such necessity, which said section of said act was passed by each house of said Legislature upon an aye and nay vote upon a separate roll call thereon, as provided by section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution of this state. That it was further determined and declared by said Legislature in and by section 6 of said act, that said act constituted an urgency measure which under the provisions of section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution of the state of California should go into immediate effect, and that said act did go into effect immediately upon the signing and approval of the same by the Governor of this state on January 30, 1919.

"X. That on February 27, 1919, your petitioner, being then the owner and holder of said warrant for $255 payable out of the said Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6, did offer to sell said warrant at par to the state board of control, pursuant to the provisions of said last named act; and the said state board of control did thereupon and then and there accept said offer, and did purchase said warrant from your petitioner at the price of $255, being the par value thereof, and did prepare and approve a claim in favor of your petitioner for said sum of $255 in payment therefor, payable out of the appropriation of $300,000 made by said last-named act, and did present said claim to the respondent, John S. Chambers, who is and then was the controller of the state of California, and did request said respondent as such controller to draw a warrant upon the state treasurer payable out of said appropriation of $300,000 for the sum of $255 in favor of your petitioner, in payment of the purchase price of said warrant of like amount so purchased by said board of control as aforesaid. That said respondent as such state controller then and there refused and still refuses to draw said warrant as so requested by said board of control, or otherwise, or at all.

"XI. That said appropriation of $300,000 was so made by said act of January 30, 1919, there was in the state treasury, and not otherwise appropriated, a sum of much more than said sum of $300,000. That no part of said appropriation of $300,000 made by said last-named act has ever been drawn or expended, but the same remains in the state treasury subject to the provisions of said act.

"XII. That the drawing of said warrant as so requested by said state board of control is an act which the law specially enjoins upon the said respondent as such state controller as a duty resulting from his office."

A demurrer to the petition was interposed by respondent on the following grounds: (1) That the act of January 30, 1919, violates section 21 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of California, in that it is class and special legislation; that it is giving or lending the credit of the state in violation of section 31 of article 4, and in making an allowance for compensation on a contract for services rendered under contract unauthorized by law; (2) that it cannot be ascertained from the petition who is the real party in interest; (3) that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause for granting the writ prayed for.

The insufficiency of the facts or the failure to disclose who is the real party in interest was not seriously urged. Nor do we think either point well taken. Unless the act in question is unconstitutional, mandamus is the appropriate remedy, and the facts alleged were sufficient to justify the issuance of the writ. It clearly enough appears that petitioner is the real party in interest.

Is the act of January 30, 1919, violative of the Constitution? It becomes necessary to ascertain the nature and character of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district. The validity of the Reclamation Board Act is not called in question. The constitutionality of acts of this character was established and set at rest in the case of People ex rel. Chapman v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 Pac. 207.

The origin and administrative and legislative history of the Reclamation Board Act, its nature and character, were concisely stated at the argument by Mr. Robert T. Devlin, who appeared amicus curiæ. The statement accords with our information upon the subject and we therefore take the liberty of using it. We quote from the notes written by our stenographic reporter:

"The problem of flood control has been a problem that has engaged the United States government and the state of California for more than half a century. For the last 50 years the United States government has been engaged in studying the flood condition of the Sacramento valley, for the purpose of preventing floods and increasing the navigability of the river. The state of California has been engaged in the same work. They sent for Mr. Eads, who had control of the Mississippi river, to come to California and make a report. He reported a plan for the improvement of the Sacramento river to prevent the very things that this act now before us was to do. The United States government made its report through Col. Mendel and others. In 1893 the debris commission was formed, first, to see that hydraulic mining should not be continued without permits; and, second, to take steps to restore the navigability of the river to the condition which it was in 1851 or 1852, about the time California was ceded to the Union. California again, when Governor Pardee was Governor, provided for a commission and invited three engineers to come to California, one of them being Col. Dabney, having charge of the Mississippi work. They made a report. The United States government was investigating this matter all the time, and finally there culminated what is called the Capt. Jackson report, which was made in 1911. That report was a report having for its object three things: First, the restoration of the navigability of the Sacramento river; secondly, the prevention of disastrous floods; and, thirdly, incidentally, the reclamation of private land. That report, Document 81, said that those three objects were inextricably involved, so you could not improve flood conditions and the navigability of the stream without aiding the landowner. The matter was of such importance to the state of California that Governor Johnson, in convening the Legislature in special session, made it as one of the objects to be legislated upon. He named eight or nine objects of such importance to the people that the Legislature should be convened for the purpose of considering them, and one of the objects was the consideration of the report of Capt. Jackson. "At the special session in 1911 the Legislature of this state adopted that report of Capt. Jackson as a part of the state policy and declared that part of the work should be carried out. In 1911, in pursuance of that plan, the state of California constituted the reclamation board and provided for the appointment of three commissioners and provided that all future works in California should be in conformity with that report. Two years following, the state of California created the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, referred to in this petition, being a territory including the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys determined by state engineers as being territory subject to flood control and flood injury, and provided that that board might carry on the work which is described in this petition. Subsequently, in 1917, the national Congress adopted the Jackson report and appropriated six million some odd thousand dollars for the purpose of carrying it out, to be used in conjunction with appropriations of like amounts made by the state of California, with the provision on the part of the United States government that the obligation of the United States should not exceed $1,000,000 per year. The state of California has made those appropriations, and to-day and for the last several years past, as a part of this work, the United States government and the state of California are co-operating in the lower parts of the Sacramento river in widening the river and in deepening its channel. Now, this work is all one project. This Sutter by-pass taps the river at the north, conducts the water out through two series of levees to be built, making an adjoining river or an additional river, carries it down to the Fremont weir, clear across the Sacramento river into the Yolo basin, and down to tidewater. This work is carried out exclusively by a state agency and by a state board. Capt. Jackson's report stated that, roughly speaking, the obligation resting upon the United States and the state of California and upon the landowners might be divided into three parts, so the nation would pay one-third, the state one-third, and the landowners one-third, and that the total estimated cost of the entire project would be $33,000,000, placing upon the state of California as a direct responsibility $11,000,000, upon the United States a like sum of $11,000,000, and upon the landowners $11,000,000. Owing to the fact that work progressed from time to time and a certain part of the work was done by private owners, this was reduced to a little more than $18,000,000, and upon that basis of $18,000,000 the Congress of the United States has already appropriated one-third, $6,000,000, binding the United States government to contribute over $6,000,000 to this work. * * *

"Some 25 or 30 years ago, the state of California tapped the Sacramento at Tisdale weir, by building a weir that allows the water to escape from the Sacramento river when it reaches a certain height, and that is the water that is doing the damage. By the state's action this water is taken out of the Sacramento river and thrown upon that territory on the east. For the purpose of taking care of that water, these by-passes are being constructed. If these by-passes are not constructed, this water that the state of California takes out of its own volition (nobody else has control of it) is taken out and dumped upon private land—up to some years ago, upon the lands known as 'District 1600,' now upon the lands in 'District 1.' In other words, the floods in that section are caused by the state government in taking water out of the river and dumping it on private lands. For the purpose of performing that governmental duty, the state of California is now building these by-passes. It has spent already more than $1,000,000 and has obtained the money by using its warrants, which warrants have been taken by private persons. We have now reached the point where private persons refuse to take warrants further."

It is well to recall what the Supreme Court said in People v. Sacramento Drainage District, supra, in speaking of districts of the character of the one here: Said the court:

"It is unnecessary to repeat the reasons set forth in the decisions in those cases [cases cited], by which the conclusion there reached was expressed, to the effect that such districts are, in strictness, not corporations at all, but rather governmental agencies to carry out a specific purpose—the agency ceasing with the accomplishment of the purpose. But, additionally, it may be said that the likeness of these agencies to corporations is superficial, and that the similitude—for it is no more than this—ceases, if consideration be paid to the fact that the state could accomplish this very work without organizing a district as such at all, and without giving the landowners within the district any voice in the selection of the managers or trustees. Thus it would be perfectly legal and competent for the Legislature, delimiting a tract of land, itself to appoint a commissioner or commissioners to perform all of the functions which, under the existing schemes, are performed by the trustees and the assessors."

The act of 1911 created the reclamation board to consist of three members; adopted the plan of the California debris commission, empowering the board to make modifications, as a general scheme for reclamation flood control in the Sacramento valley. The act of 1913 enlarged the board to seven members, created the San Joaquin and Sacramento valley drainage district and authorized the reclamation board to go forward with the construction of the project and to levy assessments on lands in the district in aid of that purpose. The act provided that in the carrying out of the work the board should divide it into separate projects or divisions, each to be taken up separately and a separate assessment levied therefor, each such project to have a distinctive name and number and its funds to be held separately.

These assessment funds are to be collected by the county treasurers in the counties affected and by them to be deposited in the state treasury and paid out by the state treasurer on warrants drawn by the controller against the state treasurer, as directed by the reclamation board, payable out of that particular assessment in each such separate project. Warrants may be drawn against any assessment whenever it has been ordered by the reclamation board and the assessors have been appointed; these warrants may issue for work before the assessments are collected and when thus drawn may be presented to and registered by the state treasurer, who is authorized to register them and indorse them not paid for want of funds and they shall thereafter bear interest from date of registration.

As alleged in the petition, the reclamation board adopted a project, known as Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 and levied an assessment for its construction, known as Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6 and appointed the assessors therefor. At this stage the controller was authorized to draw warrants for construction work against this assessment on the request of the reclamation board, in anticipation of collections on the assessment. The reclamation board was able to make contracts for work on the east levee of this by-pass, being part of the project No. 6, payable in warrants against its assessment No. 6. Arrangements were made whereby private interests cashed these warrants to a very considerable amount. This arrangement having ended and the necessity for the uninterrupted prosecution of the work being imperative the act of January 30, 1919, was passed to meet the emergency.

This act, in effect, appropriated the sum of $300,000, and authorized the state board of control to purchase at their face value (to the extent of not exceeding said amount) all warrants of said drainage district drawn by the state controller, as provided by the Reclamation Board Act and payable out of said assessment and "issued in payment for the expense of continuing the construction of the east levee of the Sutter by-pass." Section 5 of said act provides:

"The state controller shall draw warrants upon the state treasurer, payable out of said appropriation, in such amounts and at such times and in favor of such persons as the board of control may request, and the state treasurer shall pay the same."

After the passage of this act, petitioner, Argyle Dredging Company, continued to work under contract with the reclamation board and the claim here was allowed for $255 for such work. It was duly allowed by the reclamation board and approved by the board of control, the state controller drew and issued to petitioner his warrant against the reclamation board's assessment No. 6 for $255, and it was registered by the state treasurer as not paid for want of funds. No question arises as to the regularity of the proceedings. The state board of control, however, contracted with petitioner, proceeding under the act of 1919, to purchase this warrant at its face value and requested the state controller to direct the payment out of the fund thus appropriated. This the controller refused to do and hence the action.

[1] The Constitution does not deprive the Legislature of the power to pass all special acts. It forbids special laws in all cases where a general law can be made applicable. Section 25, subd. 33, art. 4. It was said by the Supreme Court:

"The Legislature must, in the first instance, determine whether or not a general law can be made applicable in the particular case. The court will not interfere with its judgment on the subject, unless it clearly and beyond reasonable doubt appears that it adjoined contrary to the fact." Wheeler v. Herbert, 152 Cal. 224, 232, 92 Pac. 353, 357, citing cases.

It does not appear and it is not claimed that conditions such as prevail in the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district exist elsewhere in the state, nor do we think that a general law could reasonably be made applicable. But as was said in People v. Mullender, 132 Cal. 217, 222, 64 Pac. 299, 301:

"We would certainly not hold such a law invalid merely because it would, in our opinion, have been possible to frame a general law under which the same purpose could have been accomplished."

It was also there said:

"The language of said paragraph [section 25, art. 4] plainly implies that there can or may be cases where a local or special act may be wise, salutary, and appropriate, and in no wise promotive of those evils which result from a general and indiscriminate resort to local and special legislation."

Such in our judgment is the case here.

[2] In no just sense can the act be said to violate section 31, article 4, which prohibits the giving or lending the credit of the state or making a gift to "any individual, * * * municipal or other corporation whatever." As we have seen (People v. Sac. Drainage District, supra), reclamation districts "are, in strictness, not corporations at all, but rather governmental agencies to carry out a specific purpose—the agency ceasing with the accomplishment of the purpose." So completely are these districts so regarded, as we are informed, that their warrants are not taxable nor is the interest payable on those warrants taxable by the United States as income; so, also, are the salaries of the officers of such districts not subject to the payment of an income tax for the reason that the government regards them as part of the state.

Much more closely is the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district knitted to the state and really part of it than is the ordinary drainage district. Section 7 of the Reclamation Act of 1915 declares that—"The state of California and the people are hereby declared to have a primary and supreme interest in having created, maintained and protected on the banks of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers and their tributaries and the by-passes and overflow channels and barriers maintained herein, good and sufficient levees and embankments or other works of reclamation, adequately protecting the lands overflowed or subject to overflow by said streams, * * * and it shall be the duty of the reclamation board to enforce on behalf of the state of California and the people thereof the erection, maintenance, and protection of such levees * * * as will best serve the interest of the state of California. The purposes and objects of this act are to carry into effect the plans of the California debris commission with such modifications and amendments and such additional plans as have been or may hereafter be adopted by the reclamation board for the control of the flood waters of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers and their tributaries and said levees and to vest in said reclamation board control and jurisdiction over said plans."

We then have an institution, a state agency, created by the state, under the exclusive control and management of the state, administered by officers appointed by the Governor of the state, and engaged in an enterprise of state-wide concern—the act itself providing that "the state of California and the people thereof are hereby declared to have a primary and supreme interest" in its objects and purposes.

But, aside from these considerations, we think the act of January 30, 1919, is neither more nor less than an act authorizing the state board of control to invest state money in the warrants duly and regularly issued under the act precisely as that board may now and has been since its organization authorized by law to invest state funds in United States and state bonds, municipal bonds, school district bonds, highway and irrigation district bonds. The state has simply added another class of securities in which the board of control may invest state funds. The fact that an appropriation of moneys made to meet the anticipated purchase, in this particular instance, does not affect the power of the Legislature to make the appropriation or the power of the board to make the investment. The act specifically provides for the payment of these warrants out of assessments, when collected, and when paid, the money goes back into the state treasury just as it would upon payment of any of said bonds purchased by the board of control.

In no view of the case can we see that either the Legislature or the board of control has exceeded its authority. The demurrer is overruled, and it is ordered that the peremptory writ prayed for be issued.

TRULL v. INDEPENDENT ORDER OF PURITANS. (Civ. 2733.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 28, 1919.)

1. INSURANCE ◊645(3) — LIFE INSURANCE—EVIDENCE.

Admission of life insurance certificate running to one "Prull" instead of deceased "Trull" is not erroneous, where defendant had received premium payments from deceased, and its answer pleaded its assumption of certificate.

2. PLEADING ◊182 — ANSWER — FAILURE TO REPLY—EFFECT.

Where answer set forth deceased's life insurance application in full and was not denied under oath within 10 days, the application becomes admitted under direct provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 448.

3. INSURANCE ◊665(2) — LIFE INSURANCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that one "Trull" had paid premiums on life insurance certificate for many years, etc., held to sustain finding that certificate was in fact issued to him, although under name of "Prull."

4. INSURANCE ◊665(3) — LIFE INSURANCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence of defendant's medical examiner and others held to sustain finding that deceased was not guilty of misrepresentation in stating his health was good when making a life insurance application.

5. INSURANCE ◊646(3) — LIFE INSURANCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Defendant insurance company has burden of proving that deceased misrepresented condition of his health when applying for life insurance.

6. INSURANCE ◊686 — COMPLAINT — SUFFICIENCY.

Complaint to recover on defendant's assumption of a life insurance certificate held not defective for failure to fully set out deceased's application for insurance.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by Catherine Trull against the Independent Order of Puritans. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. F. Fury, of Petaluma, for appellant.
Olin L. Berry, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment on a life insurance policy issued by the Knights of Honor and assumed by the defendant.

From an examination of the entire record, it appears that in 1890 the Knights of Honor issued a policy or certificate of insurance in the name of George E. Prull, which was delivered to George E. Trull. The Knights of Honor received payments of premiums from Trull for something over 25 years; the last payment having been made in November, 1915, one month after the Knights of Honor had gone into the hands of a receiver. The acceptance indorsed on the certificate was signed "George E. Trull." On November 13, 1915, Trull made an application to the defendant for the latter organization to assume the insurance, in which the applicant recited the facts of his membership in the Knights of Honor, warranted that he was then in sound health, that he knew of no cause in connection with his physical condition that would be a bar to his securing life insurance, or would in any way shorten his life, and that any untruthful statements or violations of the laws of this order should render his certificate void. This application was accepted by the defendant, which issued to him a receipt book in the name of George E. Trull, in which it entered successive payments made to it by him monthly. Trull died in June, 1916, and the defendant refused to pay to the beneficiary, the widow of the insured, who brought this suit.

In the complaint it is alleged that the Knights of Honor issued "a certain policy of insurance in the words and figures following, to wit: [Here being set forth the original benefit certificate.]" The certificate stated that it was issued "upon evidence received from said lodge [one in San Francisco] that he has lawfully received the degree of Manhood, and is a contributor to the widows and orphans benefit fund of this order and upon condition that statements made by said member in his petition for membership, and the statements made by him to the medical examiner, be made a part of this contract, and warranted to be true, and upon condition that he complies with the laws, rules, and regulations now governing this order, or that may be hereafter enacted for its government."

The defendant demurred generally and specially, because the statements made to the medical examiner were not alleged. After the demurrer was overruled, the defendant answered, denying the issuance of the certificate and that it was as set forth in the complaint for the reason that it had no information or belief on the subject sufficient to enable it to answer thereto. There were similar denials in regard to the allegations, as to the payment of premiums and the performance of conditions by the insured under the terms of the policy, and as to the alleged financial difficulties of the Knights of Honor. The defendant set up the application of Trull to the defendant for the assumption of the insurance, and alleged on information and belief that at the time of making the latter application Trull was suffering from a disease which, it was further alleged, contributed to his death.

The appellant relies on claimed errors in rulings on evidence, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, and claimed error in overruling the demurrer.

[1] The defendant's first exception was to the admission over objection of the original certificate of insurance, because it purported to run to George E. Prull instead of George E. Trull. The suit was on the contract of the defendant assuming in favor of Trull and his beneficiary the obligation of the Knights of Honor to pay on the original certificate issued to Trull, although the name was written therein as Prull. It does not appear the defendant was in any way misled. The defendant had received payments from Trull, and in its answer it set up its own assumption of the particular certificate, referring to it by number. The lower court treated the word "Prull" in the certificate as a clerical error. Under all the circumstances the certificate was properly received in evidence.

[2] The defendant offered in evidence the application for the assumption of the insurance contract by the defendant and excepted to its rejection by the court. The application was set forth in full in the answer, and was not denied under oath within 10 days. It was therefore admitted for all purposes of the case. Code Civ. Proc. § 448. The court found that it was made by Trull, and further found that the statements contained in it were not untrue. If these findings are supported, the appellant was not injured by any remarks made by the judge at the time of his ruling concerning the materiality of the evidence.

[3-5] The appellant claims the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision. The finding that the original certificate was issued to Trull is attacked. This is the same contention in regard to the clerical error by which the name was written "Prull," although both insurers received the premium payments from Trull. This finding was sustained by the evidence. The finding that the statements made in the application for assumption are true is sustained by the evidence notwithstanding the attempt on the part of the appellant to avoid the effect of the evidence of its own medical witness, the attendant physician of Mr. Trull, who testified that at the time of the application for assumption he had no reason to believe that Trull was otherwise than in good health. The burden of proving misrepresentations was on the defendant, and the only witness it produced was the physician. It not only failed to make out its defense, but supported the plaintiff's case. No other finding could properly have been made. Mickschl v. National Council, etc., 180 Pac. 27; Speegle v. Leese, 51 Cal. 415; Leviston v. Ryan, 75 Cal. 293, 17 Pac. 239; Connolly v. Hingley, 82 Cal. 643, 23 Pac. 273.

[6] Appellant's last contention is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Reliance is placed on Gilmore v. Lycoming Ins. Co., 55 Cal. 123. Reference is made to Tischler v. Insurance Co., 66 Cal. 173, 4 Pac. 1169, and Schenck v. Insurance Co., 71 Cal. 28, 11 Pac. 807. After these cases were decided the Supreme Court reconsidered the matter in Cowan v. Insurance Co., 78 Cal. 181, 20 Pac. 408. A quotation from the opinion in the latter case is determinative upon the contention made by the appellant:

"It is argued that the complaint is defective in that it does not set forth the application of the assured, which is declared to form a part of the policy. It appears clearly from the complaint that there was an application which was made a part of the policy. The contents are not stated in the complaint. But it is stated in the complaint by appending the policy to and making it a part of it that there was an application, and that that application should be considered a warranty by the assured. This stipulation of the contract is a solemn engagement by the assured that the representations made in the application at the time they were made, and when the policy became a contract, were true and correct. There are two classes of conditions usually inserted in policies, the first pointing to the time of the contract, the second to things which may occur or which may have to be performed at a time subsequent. In the former case the stipulation is called an affirmative warranty, and in the latter a promissory warranty. * * * Affirmative warranties are sometimes called warranties in praesenti. * * * A breach of an affirmative warranty consists in the falsehood of the affirmation when made, of a promissory warranty, which is in its nature executory, of the nonperformance of the stipulation. * * * In counting on a policy of insurance, we cannot see that there is any necessity of averring performance by the insured of anything warranted to be true when the policy was issued, for the reason that there was nothing to be performed. When the assured has warranted a thing to exist or a representation to be true, at a time when the policy becomes consummated as a contract, he has done all he can do."

Further, referring to the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure, § 457, permitting the pleader to state he has performed all the conditions of the contract, the court said:

"It is said that something material or which may be material to plaintiff's right to recover has been left out of the complaint. In reply to this we say it does not appear that anything material in the application, or which may be material to plaintiff's case, has been left out. The application is not before us, and we cannot say what is in it; therefore we cannot say that anything material is omitted. * * * As to the contention that there may be something material in the application which is omitted from the complaint, in addition to what is said above, we will further say that a demurrer to a complaint should not be sustained because there may be possibly something in an application affecting plaintiff's right to recover which is not averred in the complaint. Certainly we should not reverse a ruling of the court below overruling a demurrer on a 'perhaps.' Error should clearly appear to justify such a course."

The appellant seeks to distinguish this case from the present one because the court added:

"In ruling against the defendant on the point above discussed, we desire to say further that we cannot see how it can receive any detriment from the lack of the suggested allegation. The policy states that the application is filed with the defendant, and in his answer defendant can set it out and aver nonperformance of anything required by it to be performed."

The reasoning applies with equal force here. The defendant assumed the obligations of the contract in its entirety. It must have been fully informed in regard to its terms. It accepted the premiums paid after the assumption. If it did not know the terms of the contract when it assumed them, it could not be heard to say, after accepting its benefits, that it had no information regarding those terms. Yet that is just what it did say in its answer.

The judgment is affirmed.

O'NEIL v. BRODE. (Civ. 2630.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 21, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨541—IMPROVEMENTS—PARKS AND PLAYGROUNDS—DELINQUENCY AS TO ASSESSMENT.

Under St. 1909, p. 1070, §§ 18, 19, the fact of delinquency in payment of an assessment rather than the attaching by the street superintendent of a certificate as to the fact established the jurisdiction of the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles to proceed with sale of the property for delinquency in paying its share of the expenses of a park improvement.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨577—PARKS AND PLAYGROUNDS—ASSESSMENT OF EXPENSES—CERTIFICATE OF SALE—SIGNATURE BY PRESIDENT.

Certificate of sale of property for delinquency as to assessment of proportionate part of an expense of park improvement pursuant to Acts 1909, p. 1066, executed in duplicate by the street superintendent, one copy of which was signed by the president of board of public works of city of Los Angeles by his own hand, and other was signed by a fac simile stamp signature of same officer impressed on document by assessment clerk by president's direction (the copy so signed being retained in the files of the office, and the other delivered to the purchaser), was sufficiently signed.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨582—PARKS AND PLAYGROUNDS—ASSESSMENTS OF EXPENSES—SALE DEED TO PURCHASER—SIGNATURE BY PRESIDENT.

The board of public works of city of Los Angeles, by resolution adopted prior to the enactment of St. 1909, p. 1066, had power to direct its president to make or sign a deed to the purchaser of land sold for delinquency as to assessment of the proportionate expense of a park improvement, though the charter of the city provides that all documents required to be signed and executed by the board shall be signed by the order of the board, or by the president, or by two members.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨581—PARKS AND PLAYGROUNDS—ASSESSMENT OF EXPENSES—SALE FOR DELINQUENCY—NOTICE TO REDEEM.

Notice to redeem land from sale for delinquency as to assessment of proportionate part of expense of park improvement under St. 1909, p. 1066, given by the purchaser, referring to the improvement for which the property was sold, and stating the amount required to be paid to effect redemption, held valid, though stating there would be added also $3 for service of notice and making of affidavit, though the charge was unauthorized.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨581—PARKS AND PLAYGROUNDS—ASSESSMENT OF EXPENSES—SALE FOR DELINQUENCY—AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE OF NOTICE.

Affidavit of service of notice to redeem land from sale for delinquency as to assessment of proportionate part of expense of park improvement under St. 1909, p. 1066, held not faulty in failing to state the name of the person on whom service was made, setting forth that the purchaser served on the owner and occupant of the property a notice, etc., the requirement of the statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by William J. O'Neil against A. W. Brode. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

George H. Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Conner, Heath & Maxwell, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff had judgment quieting his title to a certain parcel of land located in the city of Los Angeles, from which judgment defendant has appealed. Defendant's claim of title to the land in question was based upon a deed issued by the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles, which deed had for its foundation a sale for delinquent assessment made under the authority of an act of the Legislature approved April, 1909. Stats. 1909, p. 1066. This act authorized the acquiring of property by municipalities for purposes of public parks or public playgrounds. The trial court held with the plaintiff that there were such irregularities in the procedure adopted by the assessment officers and in the notice to redeem as given by the defendant as to invalidate the deed. It is admitted by the plaintiff that all the proceedings taken up to the time when assessments became delinquent were regular.

[1] 1. The first asserted defect consists in the failure of the board of public works to make a certificate upon the assessment roll of the fact that the assessments had become delinquent. A certificate was in fact made, but was signed, "Board of Public Works, by R. I. Follmer, Assistant Clerk." Of course, it must be conceded that there was no authority in a clerk to execute the certificate on behalf of the board; so that the real question presented is as to whether the failure of the board to make such a certificate was vital to the proceedings which followed. Section 18 of the act referred to, as relating to the making of assessments, after declaring that notice shall be given by publication of the fact that the assessment has been recorded in the office of the street superintendent (the board of public works acting in the stead of such an official under the charter of the city of Los Angeles), and that the sums assessed are due and payable within 30 days from the date of the first publication of the notice, provides that "on the expiration of said period of thirty days, all assessments then unpaid shall become delinquent, and the street superintendent shall certify such fact at the foot of said assessment roll, and mark each such assessment 'Delinquent,' and add five per cent. to the amount of each delinquent assessment." The section immediately following provides that within 10 days "from the date of such delinquency" the street superintendent shall begin the publication of a list of delinquent assessments, which shall contain a description of each parcel of the property delinquent, the name of the owner as stated in the assessment roll, and the amount of the assessment, penalty, and costs due, including the cost of advertising, and shall append a notice that, unless each delinquent assessment is paid, the property upon which such assessment is a lien will be sold at public auction at a time stated in the notice. It will be noted that the act declares that the unpaid assessments, upon the expiration of 30 days from the date of publication of the notice first referred to, shall become delinquent, and that the street superintendent shall, within 10 days from the date of delinquency, begin the publication of a list of the delinquent assessments. The assessments under the express terms of the act are delinquent before the certificate is required to be made at the foot of the assessment roll. The subsequent notice to be published by which the owners are to be informed that, unless the delinquent assessments, together with penalties and costs, are paid, their property will be sold, is not required to contain the certificate so attached to the roll, and it does not appear that the making of such certificate is at all a prerequisite jurisdictional matter which must occur before the last notice to the property owner, is published. It is not contended that there was a failure of the board to mark the overdue assessments "Delinquent" as required by the act; hence upon the roll itself there would be indicated which of the assessments had not been paid and were subject to the delinquency penalty. We think it was the fact of delinquency, rather than the attaching of a certificate as to that fact, which established the jurisdiction of the board to proceed with the sale of the property. Direct authorities bearing upon this question are not many, but the reasoning of the Supreme Court in Bienfield v. Van Ness, 176 Cal. 585, at page 591, 169 Pac. 225, we think is applicable here.

[2] 2. The act further required that after making sale of property for delinquent assessment the street superintendent must execute in duplicate a certificate of sale, one copy of which is to be filed in the superintendent's office and the other delivered to the purchaser. The certificate of sale was made in duplicate, except that one copy was signed by the president of the board of public works by his own hand, and the other was signed by a fac simile stamp signature of the same officer, which was impressed upon the document by the assessment clerk. This clerk, however, testified that he stamped the signature on the duplicate at the direction of the president of the board; that the original was delivered to the purchaser, and the one signed by the rubber stamp retained in the files of the office. We think that the duplicate was sufficiently signed by the president of the board, and that for the purpose he adopted the rubber stamp as expressing his signature. That he had power to direct the attaching of the stamp by the clerk, and that the signature in law would become his own act, we have no doubt. Williams v. McDonald, 58 Cal. 527; Pennington v. Baehr, 48 Cal. 565; Jansen v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 563, 83 Am. Dec. 84.

[3] 3. The deed issued to defendant as purchaser at the sale was signed by the president of the board of public works. It is claimed that its execution in that manner was unauthorized, because the charter of the city of Los Angeles provides that "all documents required to be signed or executed by the board of public works shall be signed on order of the board by the president or by two members thereof." Prior to the time when the proceedings were instituted and prior to the adoption of the act under which the same were taken, the board of public works had adopted a general resolution directing among other things, "that the president of the board of public works, or, in the absence of the president, two members thereof, be and they hereby are authorized and directed in the name of and on behalf of said board, to sign and execute all certificates of sale and all deeds of property sold for delinquent assessments for the opening and widening of streets, alleys, and other public places." It was under authority of this resolution that the president of the board made the deed which was delivered to the appellant. We think that the board had power to direct its president to make all deeds of the nature indicated in the resolution, as the act to be done was one which involved no discretion on the part of the board—was purely a ministerial function which could not be avoided. Nor do we think that the fact that this resolution was adopted before the act of the Legislature under which the proceedings were taken makes any difference. The authorization and direction given by the resolution applied to all proceedings and such acts connected therewith as might then or in the future be required to be performed as an official duty. We have given some attention to that subject in a case recently decided, the decision in which, however, is not yet final. Hayes v. Handley et al., decided March 14, 1919. [See decision of Supreme Court. 187 Pac. 952.]

[4, 5] 4. The notice to redeem as given by the appellant as purchaser sufficiently referred to the improvement for which the property was sold and stated the amount required to be paid to effect redemption. The fact that it contained the statement that there would be added also "$3 for the service of this notice and making affidavit thereto, as allowed by law," even though such charge was unauthorized, did not invalidate the notice. Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 623, at page 627, 50 Pac. 761. The affidavit of service of the notice to redeem we do not think was faulty in failing to state the name of the person upon whom service was made. The law requires such notice to be served "upon the owner of the property and upon the occupant"; the affidavit set forth that appellant, on the 6th day of February, 1914, as purchaser, did "serve upon the owner and occupant of said property a notice," etc. It was shown by the evidence of appellant that he in fact served a notice to redeem upon the plaintiff, who was also upon the property at the time. We think the objections as raised as to the irregularities which occurred subsequent to the date of delinquency of the assessments do not show substantial departure from the requirements of the act as to invalidate the title obtained by the appellant.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

STOCK v. STITES. (Civ. 1921.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 14, 1919.)

QUIETING TITLE ~~§~~ 47(2)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ACT TO QUIET TITLE AGAINST LIEN—FINDINGS.

In action to quiet title against lien, arising out of issuance of bond for street improvements, court's finding "that before the passing of the resolution * * * careful estimates of the cost and expenses thereof had been required to be furnished to said common council by the city engineer, * * * and special specifications thereof had been furnished by him," held sufficient finding of compliance with Vrooman Act, § 3, providing that city engineer shall furnish common council, if required to so do by council, "plans and specifications, and careful estimates of the cost and expenses thereof," the words "special specifications thereof" referring to and embracing "careful estimates of the cost and expenses."

Action by Elizabeth A. Stock against O. T. Stites. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Hoefler & Morris and L. M. Hoefler, all of San Francisco (George F. Snyder, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

W. M. Beggs and R. C. McComish, both of San Jose, for respondent.

BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an action to quiet title against a lien arising out of the issuance of a bond for street improvements on plaintiff's lot in the city of San Jose. Plaintiff had judgment, from which defendant appeals.

Appellant's contention in this case that the street in question had not been previously accepted has been sustained by the Supreme Court in the case of Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Bennett, 171 Pac. 304.

Also respondent's contention that the bond act under which the bond in question was issued does not apply to San Jose has been recently disposed of in appellant's favor by this court in the case of Ahlman v. Barber Asphalt Pavinfi Co. et al., 181 Pac. 238.

Further, for the purpose of sustaining the judgment, respondent in this court contends for the first time that from a certain paragraph in defendant's answer and the finding made thereon it appears "that there was no authority in law to issue" the bonds in question. Respondent quotes as follows from the answer and finding:

"That before the passing of the resolution * * * careful estimates of the costs and expenses thereof had been required by it to be furnished to said common council by the city engineer of said city."

Relying upon this, respondent claims that the bond issue is defective because it does not appear from defendant's answer and finding herein that there was a compliance with section 3 of the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 148), which provides that—

"Before passing any resolution for the construction of said improvements, plans, and specifications, and careful estimates of the cost and expenses thereof, shall be furnished to said city council, if required by it, by the city engineer of said city."

Respondent filed no demurrer, either special or general, attacking the foregoing allegation, and the finding was made accordingly. But it should be noted that the allegation and finding contained also the following language immediately following the language quoted and relied upon by counsel:

"We believe that this language, in the absence of any special demurrer, possesses sufficient scope and pregnancy to supply the defect indicated by counsel. The language being as follows: '* * * And special specifications therefor had been furnished by him and had been filed in the office of the said city clerk on the 8th day of April, 1912.'"

The words "special specifications therefor" can be deemed to refer to and embrace the "careful estimates of the costs and expenses." And certainly a furnishing by the city engineer of specifications or a specification of "a careful estimate" is in substance and effect the furnishing by him of a statement of the estimates. The Century Dictionary gives as one of the meanings of "specification":

"An act of specifying, or making a detailed statement, or the statement so made; a definite or formal mention of price; as, a specification of one's requirements, for example, 'all who had relatives or friends in this predicament were required to furnish a specification of them.' Prescott, Ferd. & Isa., 1, 7."

And for an example of the scope of the word "therefor," see Hutchinson v. City of Olympia, 2 Wash. T. 314, 5 Pac. 606, 607; Marcus v. Rovinsky, 95 Me. 106, 49 Atl. 420, 421.

Also the form of expression used by the pleader to convey the above idea of compliance with the statute has received a certain countenance and approval in this state from its use in the well-known California textbook, Page on California Street Law, p. 891, § 7.

Also if there had been a special demurrer it does not appear that the facts were such that the answer could not have been so amended as to obviate the objections made. Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Bennett, supra.

The judgment is reversed.

DAVIES v. RAMSDELL et al. (Civ. 2724.)

(District Court of Appeal. First District, Division 2, California. March 25, 1919. Rehearing Denied April 23, 1919. Denied by Supreme Court May 22, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨256 — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE — ABSENCE OF EXCEPTION—MOTION TO STRIKE PLEADING—STATUTES—"ORDER DEEMED EXCEPTED TO."

Since an order refusing to strike out a pleading or a portion thereof is not an order deemed excepted to under Code Civ. Proc. § 647, an exception must be taken at the time the decision is made, under section 646.

2. MORTGAGES ⇨364—SALE BY TRUSTEE—PURCHASE BY CREDITOR—PAYMENT.

Where the consideration for the property sold by a trustee to satisfy an indebtedness secured by it was the satisfaction of the indebtedness, it was not necessary that the creditor should actually pay for the property in gold coin.

3. MORTGAGES ⇨370 — SETTING ASIDE OF TRUSTEE'S DEED—EFFECT—SECOND SALE.

Where in ejectment a deed to plaintiff creditor from the trustee under deed of trust securing the indebtedness was set aside by consent, and the property again sold to plaintiff, and a second deed from the trustee made to her, the judgment was as much a part of the chain of title as was the deed, and any buyer is presumed to know that in no action could plaintiff set up title by virtue of the first deed set aside, so that defendant cannot claim, in a second action to quiet title, that the sale by the trustee deprived defendant of the benefit of competition of buyers, because nobody other than the holder of the legal title could buy without buying a lawsuit.

4. ESTOPPEL ⇨91(1)—CONSENT JUDGMENT.

Where in ejectment a deed to plaintiff creditor from the trustee under deed of trust securing the indebtedness was set aside by consent, and the property again sold to plaintiff, and a second deed from the trustee made to her, the consent judgment, with acceptance of benefits thereunder, estopped defendant to claim that the first trustee's deed was not a nullity, in contradiction of the consent judgment, but conveyed legal title, so that no title passed under the second deed.

5. PLEADING ⇨9—CONCLUSION OF LAW—TITLE TO LAND.

In suit to quiet title, in view of the special allegations of the complaint, plaintiff's allegations that she had not voluntarily or involuntarily parted with any interest in the land acquired by her, and that by proceedings previously mentioned she had become and was the owner of the land, etc., held merely a conclusion of law arising from the facts previously alleged.

6. PLEADING ⇨347—MOTION FOR JUDGMENT—INSUFFICIENT DENIAL—CONCLUSION—DENIAL AS PREVENTING JUDGMENT ON.

In suit to quiet title, where defendant's denial that plaintiff had title was in effect a conclusion of law from the facts set out by defendant in her answer, as plaintiff's allegation that she had title was in effect a conclusion of law from the facts alleged in the complaint, and was an erroneous conclusion, it cannot avail defendant to prevent judgment against her on the pleadings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Glennie Davies against Lucie C. Ramsdell and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed. See, also, 183 Pac. 702.

C. D. Dethlefsen, of Oakland, and Peck, Bunker & Cole, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ralph R. Eltse and Elston, Clark & Nichols, all of Berkeley, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in a suit to quiet title to certain real property in the county of Alameda. Defendant filed a motion to strike out parts of the complaint, which motion was denied; also a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled; defendant then answered, and judgment was given for the plaintiff upon a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

Instead of filing the ordinary short form of complaint to quiet title, plaintiff set up in the complaint in detail that the defendant executed a note and trust deed to evidence and secure a loan of $5,000, made by the plaintiff to the defendant; that the defendant had defaulted in payments and the trustee had sold the property to satisfy the debt; that the sale was postponed under an arrange ment between the plaintiff and defendant, and a dispute arose as to this arrangement; that it was claimed by the defendant that proper notice of the sale had not been given. It was further alleged that the plaintiff had sued the defendant in another action in which these facts were involved, and which was terminated by a judgment entered upon a stipulation that the trustee's deed be set aside, and that immediately after the entry of such judgment, the plaintiff requested the trustee to again advertise the property for sale, because of the default of the defendant, and after notice, the property was again sold to the plaintiff, and a second deed from the trustee made to her. It was also alleged in the complaint that the defendant disputes the ownership of the plaintiff, and claims that she is entitled to hold the property and to refuse to pay the indebtedness; that these claims are made in bad faith and fraudulently, for the sole purpose of harassing and annoying the plaintiff and exacting from the plaintiff a sum of money to get rid of such claims; that the defendant is insolvent, and retains possession of the premises; that the defendant has failed to pay taxes and street assessments; that the rental value of the property is $50 per month, and that a receiver should be appointed. Plaintiff prayed for a judgment that the defendant is estopped and barred by the judgment set up in the complaint; that the plaintiff is the owner of the real property; that defendant has no interest in the same; that defendant be enjoined from asserting any claim thereto, and that the plaintiff be awarded possession; and that, pending a final judgment, a receiver should be appointed.

In the answer, the defendant claimed to be the owner of the property in possession, and entitled to the possession. Defendant alleged that she made the note and trust deed; that for the purpose of defrauding her, the plaintiff entered into a conspiracy with the Berkeley Bank of Savings & Trust Company, named as trustee in the deed of trust, in pursuance of which the trustee sold the property to the plaintiff and executed a deed therefor, but that plaintiff paid no money to the trustee in support of her bid; that the plaintiff commenced the action, and the defendant answered and cross-complained, as stated in the complaint; that the judgment was entered thereon (the judgment being set up in the answer); that the value of the property is upwards of $10,000; that the defendant is not insolvent; that the defendant had declared a homestead on the property; that in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy, the second sale by the trustee took place and the property was sold to the plaintiff for $5,749.71; that the defendant had demanded the surrender of the canceled note, which had been refused; that the trustee knew that the plaintiff was the only person who could bid at the sale, because of the then condition of the title, the trustee having been so advised by the defendant; that the second trust deed was made in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy; that the trustee had no power to sell, and denies plaintiff's allegation that she is the owner of the property.

[1] The motion to strike out was directed to all of the recitals of the complaint claimed by the defendant to be a mere deraignment of title. The refusal to grant this motion is assigned by the appellant here as error. It does not appear from the transcript that exception was taken to the ruling refusing to strike out. It will be presumed that counsel acquiesced in the ruling, and the objection cannot be urged on appeal. "The exception must be taken at the time the decision is made" (Code Civ. Proc. § 646) in all cases except those specified in § 647, Code of Civil Procedure. An order refusing to strike out a pleading, or a portion thereof, is not an order deemed excepted to under section 647, Code of Civil Procedure. Ganceart v. Henry, 98 Cal. 281, 283, 33 Pac. 92.

[2, 3] The second objection of appellant is that the court erred in overruling the defendant's demurrer to the complaint. It is urged that the complaint is defective in not showing that an amount of money equal to that bid by the creditor at the sale was actually paid to the trustee, and that the trustee had divested itself of title by the first sale, and therefore had no power to make a second sale. In regard to the first objection, it appears from the complaint that the property was sold for the purpose of satisfying the indebtedness secured by it, and that the property was "struck off and sold" to the owner and holder of said indebtedness "for said sum." The consideration for the property was the satisfaction of the indebtedness, and it was not necessary that the plaintiff should actually pay for the property in gold coin. As to the second objection, it will be necessary for us to consider for a moment the judgment in the ejectment suit between the same parties, which judgment is set out in the complaint herein. It is admitted on this appeal that in the ejectment suit the plaintiff there, who is also the plaintiff and respondent here, relied upon the first trustee's deed, and defendant denied the efficacy of that deed to pass title, whereupon the parties stipulated that the first trustee's deed was a nullity, and upon the stipulation, judgment was entered as between those parties to that effect. Upon the present suit to quiet title, the plaintiff relies upon a second trustee's deed, and the defendant says, notwithstanding the former judgment, no title passed under the second deed, because the original trustee conveyed title under the first deed, and in support of this position argues two points: (1) That despite the prior judgment that the deed was a nullity, as a matter of fact it conveyed legal title to the grantee named; and (2) the sale by the original trustee deprived the defendant of the benefit of competition of buyers, because nobody other than the holder of the legal title could buy without buying a lawsuit. This second contention may be disposed of very briefly, as it is without merit, for the reason that the judgment was as much a part of the chain of title as was the deed to the plaintiff, and any buyer would be presumed to know that in no action could the plaintiff in that case set up title of any character in herself by virtue of the first deed.

[4] A consideration of defendant's first objection convinces us that it, also, is without merit. Defendant contends that in the second suit (the present suit) she is not estopped by the consent adjudication in the first suit that the original deed was a nullity, because the original trustee was not a party to the suit and the deed was not in fact a nullity, but conveyed legal title to the plaintiff, which under the case of Seccombe v. Roe, 22 Cal. App. 139, 133 Pac. 507, placed her in a position of a substituted trustee for the original trustee.

When the stipulation was made and the judgment entered, the plaintiff, under the defendant's theory, combined in herself the two relations of trustee and beneficiary of the trust under the trust deed. She agreed with the defendant for the defendant's benefit that the trust deed was a nullity for all purposes. The original trustee accepted the result of this stipulation by executing at her request the second trust deed. Having had the benefit of one result of the stipulation in the first suit, the defendant must bear the burden of the other results of the stipulation, and in a suit between the same parties cannot be heard to say that the deed was effective for any purpose—contrary to the stipulation and judgment between the parties—and this regardless of any legal effect that the instrument may have had as between other parties. Himmelman v. Sullivan, 40 Cal. 125. The very basis of estoppel is that regardless of the real fact, the parties have placed themselves in a position where they will not be heard to assert any state of facts, whether true or false, in contravention of their agreement. This is as true as to estoppels of record as to estoppels in pais. Love v. Waltz, 7 Cal. 250.

A very similar question arose in the case of Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 38. That was an action to recover a piece of land, title to which was, in 1860, in one Turman under a deed absolute on its face, and which Turman subsequently conveyed to Lodge, the defendant, and after which he again conveyed to one Jackson. Jackson was the plaintiff and Lodge the defendant. It appeared that Jackson, Turman, and another, prior to the conveyance to Lodge, had borrowed money from him. Upon default, Lodge brought suit against Jackson and his comakers, Turman and the other. Turman allowed the judgment to go by default. Jackson and the other answered, setting forth that they executed the note for accommodation, and that shortly after the execution of the note, Turman, for the purpose of paying it, had conveyed the land to Lodge. Lodge denied the deed to him was made in satisfaction of the note. It was thereafter found that the deed was absolute and not a mortgage. Jackson, having succeeded in his defense against the note on the sole ground that the deed from Turman to Lodge was a conveyance of land in satisfaction of the note, then sought in the second suit to recover the same land under his subsequent deed on the sole ground that the conveyance was not absolute in satisfaction of the note, but a mortgage to secure it. It was urged that Turman who had defaulted in the original suit, would not have been estopped by that judgment. The court said, in language directly applicable to this case:

The question now is not what title Jackson took by the conveyance, but whether he is concluded by the prior adjudication of the same matter in which he and Lodge were parties, in which he was directly interested in determining the character of the conveyance, and in which it was found and adjudicated in his favor that his grantor had already conveyed the land to Lodge. The benefits of that adjudication he has fully enjoyed. For he has taken a title which, however good it may be, he has once litigated, and had adjudicated and thereby estopped himself from further litigation. He did it with full knowledge of the facts, and he cannot complain. At all events he is concluded."

It has been held in the case of Donner v. Palmer, 51 Cal. 629, that if the parties to an action in ejectment agree to facts which are based on the presumption that at a certain time a title was in a third person, and the court decide on the facts, neither party can afterward be heard to assert, for the purpose of avoiding the effect of the judgment, that such third person had no title. We think this case answers the contention of appellant that the trustee had no power to convey at the time it executed the second deed to the plaintiff.

[5, 6] The third objection of appellant is that the court erred in granting the motion of plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings. The appellant's position, in effect, is that even though the affirmative allegations of the answer should be held to constitute an estoppel, an issue was raised as to the ownership of the plaintiff by a denial of such ownership in the answer. As we have heretofore remarked, the complaint in this case did not contain the ordinary recitals of a complaint to quiet title. The plaintiff pleaded the specific and detailed facts of her ownership and right of possession to the real property in controversy and her special equities, growing out of the relations of the parties, the sale by the trustee, the stipulation and prior judgment between the parties, and the second sale to the plaintiff—and then she alleged that she had not voluntarily or involuntarily parted with any interest acquired by her, and that "by the proceedings hereinbefore mentioned the plaintiff has become, and by such proceedings she now is, the owner of the said real property and of the whole thereof." We think that under the special allegations of the complaint in this case this allegation of ownership is but a conclusion of law arising from the facts previously alleged, and the denial of this conclusion in the answer raised no issue. While it is true that, in general, an allegation that a party is the owner of real property is an allegation of an ultimate fact, and not of a conclusion of law, and there are a number of cases in this state so holding, yet it has been held also that the same averment may be a statement of fact or a conclusion of law, according to the context. Heeser v. Miller, 77 Cal. 192, 19 Pac. 375; Levins v. Rovegno, 71 Cal. 273, 12 Pac. 161; Turner v. White, 73 Cal. 300, 14 Pac. 794. In the present case, the complaint does not contain an allegation of unqualified ownership, but only an allegation of the consequences resulting from the transactions set forth in the complaint. The allegation is that "by the proceedings hereinbefore mentioned * * * the plaintiff is the owner, * * *" etc. This is a legal conclusion, and its denial raises no issue. Furthermore, the denial by the defendant of this conclusion of law was a denial inconsistent with the facts admitted in the answer. It was in effect also a conclusion of law from the facts set out by the defendant, and it was, under our conclusions here, an erroneous conclusion therefrom. Under such circumstances it cannot avail to prevent a judgment on the pleadings. Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 444, 25 Pac. 749, 22 Am. St. Rep. 257.

In addition to the cases above referred to, the case of Hamman v. Milne (Sup.) 178 Pac. 523, recently decided by our Supreme Court, holds that where in a suit to quiet title, the defendants were precluded from attacking the validity of certain patents upon which the plaintiff relied, judgment on the pleadings is proper.

Under the pleadings in this case, we are of the opinion that judgment on the pleadings was proper.

The judgment is affirmed.

SUTTER BUTTE CANAL CO. v. RICH-VALE LAND CO. et al. (Civ. 1933.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 27, 1919.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨254—IR-RIGATION CONTRACT—PERFORMANCE—EVI-DENCE.

In action to recover for water alleged to have been furnished by plaintiff to a land company for irrigation, held, under the evidence, that plaintiff did not deliver water in accordance with the contract.

2. ESTOPPEL ⇨78(1)—RESERVATION IN CON-VEYANCE.

Where respondents in contract of purchase agreed with vendor that contract and deed should be subject to prior instrument reserving right of way for irrigation ditches, and thereafter vendor and plaintiff entered into contract under which plaintiff was to furnish water for the premises and vendor should supply all necessary rights of way, held respondents are estopped from urging that the language used in the prior instrument does not measure up to a reservation, and that they are entitled to compensation for land taken in construction of ditches.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨46—RESERVA-TION OF RIGHT OF WAY—REVERSION.

It being the intention of the vendor and purchasers in contract of sale to except from operation of deed a right of way for irrigation ditches, the court is not justified in resorting to technical refinement as to the meaning of "reversions" to defeat the manifest intent to exclude right of way.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by the Sutter Butte Canal Company against the Richvale Land Company, W. H. Bradley, and W. W. Ralls, in which the two defendants last named filed cross-complaints. At the beginning of the trial, the company withdrew. Judgment for cross-complainants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Henry Ingram, of Gridley, and W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for appellant.

Samuel J. Nunn, of Chico, for respondents.
J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, for defendant.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover $129 for water alleged to have been furnished to the Richvale Land Company under a certain contract, which is set out in the complaint and which makes the charge a lien upon the land to be irrigated. The real property involved consists of lot No. 35, and the east half of lot No. 36 of Richvale Colony, No. 1, in Butte county, the legal title to which was and is in said land company, although prior to the execution of said contract for water Bradley and Ralls had entered into an agreement with the Richvale Land Company for the purchase of the land, and they were actually in the possession and use of it during the year 1914, the period with which we are herein concerned. At the beginning of the trial, the Richvale Land Company withdrew, and the trial was had on the complaint and answer and the cross-complaint of Bradley and Ralls and answer thereto by plaintiff. The cross-complaint denied that plaintiff had furnished the water as agreed, and cross-complainants set up a claim for damages to their crop of rice because of the failure to deliver the water in time, also a claim for compensation for 4.18 acres of land alleged to have been taken by plaintiff in constructing ditches and roads. The court found that plaintiff had failed to deliver the water according to its contract, thereby damaging cross-complainants to the extent of $277.90 and had appropriated 3.13 acres of the land for which Bradley and Ralls were allowed the sum of $250.40.

It is conceded that the vital questions presented on this appeal are two, as follows: "Did plaintiff deliver the water in the year 1914 in accordance with its contract?" and "Were defendants Bradley and Ralls entitled to judgment for the 3.13 acres of land in question?"

[1] As to the first of these, we think plaintiff is in error in the claim that there is no substantial evidence in support of the adverse finding of the court. It appears that plaintiff was to furnish 95 second feet of water for the irrigation of some 5,066 acres of land altogether, including the lots in controversy, and Mr. Charles T. Tulloch, superintendent and manager of plaintiff, testified positively that the requisite amount was furnished.

It also appears without question that the amount agreed upon was amply sufficient for the purposes of all the landowners. It may be stated further that no witness for respondents attempted to specify the number of second feet that was actually furnished, but several of them related facts from which the conclusion would follow that there was a material omission to comply with the requirement of the contract. It seems unnecessary to recite the testimony or to comment upon it further than to say that the declaration of the witnesses that there was a "shortage" in the supply could be understood to mean, under the circumstances detailed by the witnesses, only that the amount furnished was less than what was promised. The term itself, in a sense, represented the opinion of the witness, but no objection was made on that ground, and we cannot say that the lower court attributed to it a greater significance than it deserved. The other question we regard as of more serious moment.

[2] There is no controversy as to the extent of the land that is embraced in the ditches and roads used by plaintiff for its irrigating system or as to its value, but it is claimed by appellant that this is not the proper subject of counterclaim or cross-complaint and, furthermore, that appellant obtained a right of way for these roads and ditches by virtue of certain instruments set out in the record.

This latter contention will first receive our attention. The original instrument was executed by the Richvale Land Company on September 20, 1909, and it was recorded in the county recorder's office in Book H of Miscellaneous Records. Said document was termed: "Stipulation, Richvale Colony No. 1." Among other things it recited:

"The said Richvale Land Company intends selling the said colony in tracts to various purchasers. Now, therefore, it is stipulated that in all such sales the said Richvale Land Company reserves to itself and assigns the right of way over the following property to be used as roads by the general public and the right to enter upon, open, and grade said roads. The property so reserved is a part of said Richvale Colony No. 1, and is particularly described as follows, to wit," said description including the lots in controversy.

Said "stipulation" proceeds:

"And, it is still further stipulated that in all such sales Richvale Land Company reserves to its assigns and successors a right of way in, to, and across said Colony No. 1 and all portions thereof for the purpose of constructing and maintaining and operating (free of cost) irrigation and drainage ditches and to flow water therein, however, not unnecessarily to the detriment of purchasers of property."

We may state that there is no controversy as to the road, and it will therefore be eliminated from further consideration. Nor is there any claim that any of the ditches which were constructed was or is "unnecessarily detrimental" to any one. Then comes the subsequent agreement of sale with respondents of November 8, 1909, covering said lot No. 35 and the east one-half of lot No. 36 and containing the covenant:

"It is agreed by and between the parties hereto that on the performance of all the stipulations, covenants and provisions herein on the part of the purchaser the company will execute and deliver to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, a good and sufficient deed conveying title to the land contracted to be conveyed upon the conditions, however, that the contract and deed made hereunder shall be subject to the terms, provisions, reservations, stipulations, etc., set out and contained or referred to in a certain instrument, dated the 20th day of September, 1909, and recorded the same day in the office of the county recorder of said Butte county in Book H of Miscellaneous Records, at pages 409 and 410. The purchaser hereby assents to the said terms, provisions, reservations, stipulations, etc., in said instrument contained."

Then follows the agreement of June 30, 1911, between appellant and the Richvale

Land Company, providing that appellant will furnish water for these very premises, and binding the party of the first part (appellant) to construct and complete for the second party (Richvale Land Company) "on or before the 30th day of December, 1911, all lateral ditches, weirs, gates and structures necessary in its judgment for the delivery of water to said land." The agreement further provides that the Richvale Land Company would "supply all necessary rights of way therefor and install service gates" and maintain the ditches, weirs, etc., and would pay the party of the first part the sum of $13.50 per acre for the construction of said canals and ditches. In accordance with the terms of this contract, said structures were completed by appellant, there being apparently no controversy as to their proper location. The case thus stands for appellant apparently as follows: The undisputed owner of the land, by a solemn instrument of record, declares the purpose and intention to reserve from the operation of any future sale a right of way for canals and ditches necessary for irrigation. Thereafter an agreement of sale for a portion of said land is executed, in which the vendees recognize and consent to said "reservation." This transaction is followed by an agreement between the said owner and appellant, whereby the former grants to the latter a right of way for said purpose, which is accepted and its location agreed upon and the structures completed. Assuming that each step as thus detailed is legally what it purports to be, of course, no one would contend that said vendees could successfully urge a claim against appellant for compensation for the land used for said right of way. But the point is made that the attempted "reservation" for the right of way for said ditches, in said instrument of September 20, 1909, is entirely void, for the reason that it is in favor of a third party, and, also, because said third party is not designated and identified. The "reservation," it is to be remembered, does not read "Richvale Land Company reserves to itself, its assigns and successors," as is usual in such cases, but the provision is "Richvale Land Company reserves to its assigns and successors," etc.

In Eldridge v. See Yup, 17 Cal. 52, it was held that such a covenant or reservation would be void, the court saying:

"A person who is not a party to a deed cannot take anything by it unless it be by way of remainder. The grantor cannot covenant with a stranger to the deed."

However, it is sometimes the case that what is called a "reservation" is treated as an "exception" and effect given to it, although, under the established rules of interpretation, it is inoperative as a "reservation." Martin v. Cook, 102 Mich. 267, 60 N. W. 679; Burchard v. Walther, 58 Neb. 539, 78 N. W. 1061; Bridger v. Pierson, 45 N. Y. 601; Red- ding v. Vogt, 140 N. C. 562, 53 S. E. 337, 6 Ann. Cas. 312. This is in line with the recognized policy of the law to give effect, as far as possible, to the intention and purpose of the parties to an instrument.

[3] But, it is apparent herein that the said provision in the instrument of September 20, 1909, strictly speaking, constitutes neither a "reservation" nor an "exception." This follows from the fact that the instrument was not a conveyance, nor an agreement for the conveyance, of any property, nor did it purport to be such an instrument. However, it was written evidence of the purpose of the owner to withhold from the operation of the deed to any future purchaser of said land or any portion thereof a right of way for said ditches and canals. Whether the recording of said instrument would constitute notice of such intent we need not consider, since there is no dispute herein as to actual knowledge of that instrument. Moreover, as we have seen, respondents expressly agreed to be bound by the terms of that instrument. Their title rests upon said executory agreement of November 8, 1909. We must scan its terms to ascertain the intent of the parties. The vendor therein agreed to convey to the vendees a good and sufficient deed, subject, however, "to the terms, provisions, reservations and stipulations," etc., of said instrument of September 20, 1909. In other words, reading the stipulation of the earlier instrument as thus incorporated in said agreement of sale, we find that the Richvale Land Company, upon the consideration of certain payments by respondents, "agrees to sell and convey unto the purchaser and the purchaser agrees to buy * * * the following real estate * * * subject to the following stipulation that in such sale Richvale Land Company reserves to its assigns and successors a right of way in, to, and across said Colony No. 1 and all portions thereof," etc. No one could doubt from this language that it was the intention of the parties to except from the operation of the deed a right of way for said purpose, and a court is not justified in resorting to technical refinement as to the meaning of "reversions" to defeat the manifest intent of the parties to exclude this right of way.

Again, it is too late for respondents to urge successfully that the language used does not measure up to the definition of a reservation. They deliberately agreed that their deed should be subject to such reservation, and, acting upon that agreement, appellant and the Richvale Land Company entered into their contract under which the improvements were made without any objection, we may assume, from respondents, and they should now be estopped from claiming that said stipulation and reservation is void. That an attempted reservation or exception in a conveyance in favor of a stranger, although not conferring title, may sometimes operate as an admission in his favor, or as an estoppel against the grantor, is supported by the authorities. Butler v. Gosling, 130 Cal. 422, 62 Pac. 596. The same principle would apply to the vendee in a case like this, where he has agreed to the reservation.

As indicated above, there is no question before us as to the authority of the Richvale Land Company to locate the right of way. Where a dispute does arise in such cases, however, the rule to be applied is thoroughly considered in Brown v. Ratliff, 21 Cal. App. 282, 131 Pac. 769, and Ballard v. Titus, 157 Cal. 673, 110 Pac. 118. If we are right in the foregoing, the other point suggested by appellant becomes unimportant, and we need not consider it.

We think the trial judge was in error in allowing cross-complainants compensation for the land appropriated for said right of way, and for that reason the judgment is reversed.

HOME TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.
v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.
(Civ. 1856.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 28, 1919.)

1. LICENSES ☞34 — RECOVERY—VOLUNTARY PAYMENT.

Taxpayer may recover license tax claimed to have been involuntarily paid, though he was not threatened with actual imprisonment or threatened with the penalty of having his right to do business taken away.

2. LICENSES ☞34 — RECOVERY—VOLUNTARY PAYMENT.

That license tax collector has recourse to civil action to collect tax does not divest payment of license under protest, of its voluntary character; for protestant can contest validity of tax without suffering risk of incurring excessive penalties or arrest.

3. LICENSES ☞34—ACTION TO RECOVER LICENSE PAID—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—VOLUNTARY PAYMENT.

In action against city to recover license tax paid under ordinance void under Const. art. 13, § 14, where ordinance imposed penalty of fine or imprisonment for failure to pay license, evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff had been coerced into paying the license tax.

4. LICENSES ☞34 — RECOVERY — WRITTEN PROTEST—SUFFICIENCY.

Where payer of license tax had discussed ordinance imposing tax with collector, claiming it to be unconstitutional, failure of written protest to payment of license to state grounds for invalidity of ordinance was not fatal to recovery of the license paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by the Home Telephone & Telegraph Company against the City of Los Angeles and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Charles S. Burnell, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John E. Biby and Trippet, Chapman & Biby, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This appeal is taken by the defendant city of Los Angeles and certain of its officers from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff. The judgment was for the return of certain fees paid as a license for the conducting of a telephone business within the city of Los Angeles. It was admitted that under an amendment to the Constitution of the state, adopted in November, 1910 (section 14, art. 13), the municipality had no power to exact a license tax from the plaintiff, and that its ordinance attempting so to do was void. The ordinance under which the claim for license tax was made against the plaintiff provided that telephone companies should pay a license tax monthly; that any tax remaining unpaid for a period of 10 days should have added a penalty of 10 per cent.; that "any person, firm or corporation" violating any of the provisions of the ordinance should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punishable by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $200, or by imprisonment in the city jail for a period of not more than 100 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and that "each such person, firm or corporation shall be deemed guilty of a separate offense for every day during any portion of which any violation of any provision of this ordinance is committed, continued or permitted. * * *" There was testimony heard by the trial judge on behalf of the plaintiff showing that the secretary of the latter had had interviews with the tax and license collector, whose duty it was to enforce the terms of the license ordinance, and that it was orally called to the attention of the collector during these conversations that the Constitution had been amended, and the officer of the plaintiff inquired if the city attorney had not advised them regarding the noncollection of the license tax, and that the tax collector had answered, "No," that "they were going right ahead with the operation of it, and that we would have to pay up or they would have to enforce the penalties." Further conversation was had to the same effect, the tax collector's office insisting upon payment of the tax; whereupon the tax was paid by the plaintiff, the payments being accompanied by a written notice of protest. The secretary of the plaintiff corporation testified that he feared proceedings of arrest if payment was not made. He testified further:

"My recollection was that in the interview that we had in the tax and license collector's office the general statement was made, 'You know the provisions of the ordinance, and if you fail to comply with them you or somebody will have to be arrested under the provisions of the ordinance.' And practically every time we paid afterwards there was an argument because we did not think it was a proper charge to be made, and thought it was illegally made. While I can't point to specific instances, I might say that we practically had an argument every time the payment was made right from January on, and even back of that."

Appellants raise several points in support of their claim that the judgment entered cannot be sustained. The principal of these contentions is that the payments must be considered as voluntary, as no acts were committed on behalf of the city such as would amount to legal coercion. Under the provisions of the ordinance which have already been noted, there was a delinquency penalty to be imposed where the licensee failed to pay his license tax within 10 days from the due date. A further provision existed providing for the arrest of those who violated any of the provisions of the ordinance, with a possible fine and imprisonment, the maximum being $200 fine or 100 days in jail, respectively, and that each day during which such violation continued would constitute a separate offense. Appellant's counsel cite Trower v. City and County of San Francisco, 152 Cal. 479, 92 Pac. 1025, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183, where the Supreme Court, in defining what constitutes legal duress which will give involuntary character to payments made under pretended force of law, declares:

"The distinction to be observed is between a payment made for the purpose of protecting or securing the present enjoyment of a right to which the person is immediately entitled, and a payment made to prevent a threatened disturbance of such right where there is no authority to interfere with its enjoyment until the right of the threatening party shall be established in a judicial proceeding in which the rights of the respective parties may be presented and determined. In the latter case a payment to avoid such threatened contest is regarded as voluntary, while in the former case it is compulsory."

Also Justice v. Robinson, 142 Cal. 199, 75 Pac. 776, the court there stating:

"The general rule in reference to the payment of taxes under protest, where not controlled by some statutory provision, is, that, in the absence of acts amounting to duress or coercion, the payment is deemed to be voluntary, and a mere protest made at the time of such payment does not divest it of its voluntary character. Where there is no legal compulsion, the legal effect of the payment is not impaired by protest."

[1] A number of other cases are cited, among them some from other jurisdictions, which are all declarative of the generally accepted rule that there must be a sufficient showing of legal coercion before a person may pay a public tax and not have such payment considered voluntary. We think, however, that it is not essential to a recovery of such a tax that the person be threatened with actual imprisonment or threatened with the penalty of having his right to do business taken away. There may be penalties which fall perhaps short of this mark to avoid which the person paying may protect himself by protest. As was said in Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. O'Connor, 223 U. S. 280, 32 Sup. Ct. 216, 56 L. Ed. 436, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1050, cited in Hartford Fire Insurance Co. v. Jordan, 163 Cal. 270, 142 Pac. 839:

"Courts sometimes, perhaps, have been a little too slow to recognize the implied duress under which payment is made. But even if the state is driven to an action, if at the same time the citizen is put at a serious disadvantage in the assertion of his legal, in this case of his constitutional, rights, by defense in the suit, justice may require that he should be at liberty to avoid those disadvantages by paying promptly and bringing suit on his side. He is entitled to assert his supposed right on reasonably equal terms."

That case, to be sure, had to do with the payment of corporation franchise tax where the failure to pay the tax, if the same were determined legal, would have resulted in the corporation being deprived of its right to do business in the particular state.

[2] If under the ordinance here considered the tax collector had only recourse to a civil action to collect the license tax, then there could be no payment under protest sufficient to divest the payment of its voluntary character; for the protestant could then contest the validity of the tax without suffering the risk of incurring excessive penalties or arrest. But in the enforcement of the provisions of the ordinance there was available to the tax collector the machinery of the municipal criminal courts, and with the provision of the ordinance, as stated, that a violation continued should be deemed a new offense on each succeeding day, the plaintiff might have incurred liability for a large amount of money by way of criminal fines before the legality of the tax could have been finally determined. This is assuming that the arrest would be that of the corporation under the provisions of the Penal Code, rather than the arrest of officials of the corporation individually. In addition to this, there would seem to be little doubt but that there might be such action on the part of the officials of the corporation in violation of the terms of the ordinance as might subject them to individual arrest and thus create an additional reason why the payments made to avoid such consequences should not be considered as voluntary. The secretary of the corporation, according to his testimony, had it in mind that arrests might follow, as the tax-collecting authority had informed him that the "penalties" of the ordinance would be enforced. The state of mind of the official was of more important legal consideration than any undisclosed intent of the officers whose duty it was to collect the city's license taxes. "And a threat of arrest for which there is no ground does not constitute a duress, as the person threatened could not be put in fear thereby. But these rules fail to take into consideration that the question at issue in such cases is whether the mind of the person was overcome by impending criminal proceedings to such an extent as to make his act of payment involuntary. No hard and fast rule therefore should be laid down, but each case must be decided on its own peculiar facts." 21 Ruling Case Law, § 178, p. 154.

[3] Our conclusion on the proposition stated is that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the trial judge that the plaintiff was coerced into making the payments for which recovery was sought.

[4] It is next contended that the written protest filed at the time of the making of the license tax payments was not sufficient, for the reason that particular grounds were not sufficiently stated. The notice of protest did advise the license collector that the licensee considered the ordinance void, and it was further stated in the notice that the ordinance was in violation of the Constitution of the United States and of the Fourteenth Amendment thereof. We have referred hereinbefore to the testimony of the secretary of the corporation wherein it was shown that he had discussed with the license collector the effect of the amendment made to the California Constitution in 1910, and had claimed that under that amendment the plaintiff company should not be required to pay the tax; that, notwithstanding this notification, the collecting officer insisted that he would enforce the penalties of the ordinance. It has recently been held by our Supreme Court that such a protest may be made orally, and that particular grounds thereof need not be expressly stated, where the collecting official is already informed of the reasons upon which the paying party objects to the tax. Spencer et al. v. City of Los Angeles et al. (Sup.) 179 Pac. 163.

We have examined the specifications pointing to alleged errors of the court in receiving certain testimony, and are satisfied that upon these assignments no such error is shown as to warrant a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

JOHNSON v. WUNNER. (Civ. 2669.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 28, 1919.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 32(3) — CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—MUTUALITY.

Oral contract, under which plaintiff landlord agreed to erect building on adjoining property if defendant tenant would then lease entire premises, cannot be specifically enforced by plaintiff after performing his part and tendering lease to defendant for execution, since agreement lacked mutuality.

2. PLEADING $\Leftrightarrow$ 8(20)—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—INJURY OR DAMAGE.

A complaint seeking specific performance of a lease, which alleges that, unless said lease be executed plaintiff will suffer great and irreparable injury and loss, states a mere conclusion of law, and does not authorize granting damages, instead of specific performance.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action for specific performance by Mina H. Johnson against C. Wunner. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Walter H. Robinson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Costello & Costello, of San Francisco (E. R. Hoerchner, of San Francisco, for counsel), for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to compel specific performance of an oral contract, which plaintiff claimed was fully performed on her part. At the time the contract was entered into the parties occupied the relation of landlord and tenant. The defendant, who is the tenant, conducted a grocery store in premises owned by plaintiff, and he was desirous of increasing the dimensions of his floor space. Accordingly the parties entered into an oral agreement whereby plaintiff agreed to purchase a vacant lot adjoining the leased premises and erect thereon a building as an addition to the store held by respondent as lessee. The purchase of the lot was made by plaintiff for the sum of $4,700, and plans for the erection of the building were prepared. In these plans it was provided that the east wall of the leased building should be removed, so that the addition erected should be connected with and open into the store, and thus become an integral part of it. It was further orally agreed by the parties that, before the erection of the building reached the stage where the removal of said wall was necessary, a new lease of the entire premises would be executed. Thereupon plaintiff erected at a cost of some $3,000 the contemplated addition, which, having reached the point when it became necessary to remove the wall, plaintiff signed and tendered the contemplated lease, which defendant refused to execute. Construction of the addition was thereupon discontinued by plaintiff, owing to defendant's refusal to comply with his agreement, and this action was brought to compel respondent to specifically perform his contract. Judgment went for defendant, and plaintiff appeals, taking his appeal on the judgment roll alone.

[1] In support of the judgment respondent argues that, as the agreement was one for the erection and completion of a building, it is not the subject of specific performance for the reason that it lacked mutuality, and it was upon this ground that the trial court rendered judgment in favor of defendant. It is conceded that contracts of this character cannot generally be specifically enforced, the reason being that the obligor cannot be forced to perform, and that therefore the obligee should not be compelled so to do. But it is insisted that in the instant case the contract was fully performed, for the reason that, the parties having agreed to execute the lease when the work had progressed to the point when the intersecting wall was to be removed, when that time arrived nothing further remained executory. But a contract of this character at no period of its existence is specifically enforceable. Neither party to an obligation can be compelled specifically to perform it, unless the other party has performed, or is liable to specifically perform, everything that he has thereby undertaken (Los Angeles v. Occidental Oil Co., 144 Cal. 528, 532, 78 Pac. 25; Tuohy v. Moore, 133 Cal. 516, 65 Pac. 1107); and under this rule the contract cannot be divided into independent covenants (Id.). This being so, specific performance was rightfully refused.

[2] Plaintiff further claims that, if the relief sought is not obtainable, she is still entitled to some relief. The only other possible relief would be damages for breach of the agreement. Plaintiff's whole theory of her cause of action, however, was for specific performance. Her complaint is entitled "Complaint in Specific Performance of Lease," and the prayer is confined to that form of relief. No issue of damages was tendered. The only allegation of damages in plaintiff's complaint is found in the recital "that unless said lease be executed plaintiff will suffer great and irreparable injury and loss." Such an allegation is a mere conclusion of law. Mechanics' Foundry v. Ryall, 75 Cal. 602, 17 Pac. 703; Bishop v. Owens, 5 Cal. App. 87, 89 Pac. 844. Before a court of equity can intervene, it is necessary to allege the facts entitling plaintiff to the relief sought. Here no such facts are set forth.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

DAVIS v. BLASINGAME. (Civ. 2642.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 27, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 26, 1919.)

1. ANIMALS 91 — TRESPASS — REPEAL OF STATUTE.

St. 1907, p. 999, concerning trespassing animals upon private lands and the recovery of damages resulting therefrom, did not operate to repeal St. 1873-74, p. 50, and recovery can be had for the depasturing of unfenced land in Fresno county by trespassing animals.

2. ANIMALS 100(2¼) — TRESPASS — ACTION FOR DAMAGES — LIMITATIONS.

Under St. 1873-74, p. 50, an action for recovery of damages for trespass of stock upon unfenced lands in Fresno county is not limited as to its time of commencement to 60 days after the time of trespass.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by W. T. Davis against A. A. Blasingame. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

D. T. Winne and C. K. Bonestell, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Geo. Cosgrave, of Fresno, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action for damages for the alleged trespass of the defendant's cattle upon the lands of the plaintiff and another, and the consequent depasturing of the same. The complaint contains two causes of action, one relating to the depasturing of the plaintiff's own lands, and one relating to the depasturing of the lands of another who assigned his cause of action to the plaintiff. The defense consists in a denial of the allegations of both counts of the complaint. The evidence educed upon the trial showed that the parties to the action were neighbors living in the eastern foothills of Fresno county, and owning tracts of land of considerable acreage in proximity to each other. With the exception of about 300 acres, the lands of the plaintiff and his assignor were uninclosed, and the defendant pastured his stock repeatedly upon these uninclosed lands after warning to desist from so doing. The trial court rendered judgment in the plaintiff's favor for the damages in the sum of $1,003.35, with costs of suit.

The only two points urged by the appellant upon this appeal are: First, that no recovery can be had for the depasturing of land in Fresno county unless the land is fenced; and, second, that even if such an action is maintainable, it must be commenced within 60 days after the commission of the trespass. The determination of these points requires an inquiry into the state of the statutory law, and the decisions construing the same, in relation to fences upon pastoral lands in the county of Fresno. This inquiry may well begin with the case of Blevins v. Mullally, 22 Cal. App. 519, 135 Pac. 307, in which Mr. Justice Hart, after a very thorough review of the statutes and cases bearing upon the subject, holds that the rule of the common law which required every man to keep his beasts within his own close was abrogated by the Legislature of this state in 1850 (Stats. 1850, pp. 131, 214), and was for a time thereafter not in force in any of the counties of the state of California, but that, commencing in the year 1863, the rule of the common law began to be restored to operation by special acts in that and later years, applying to an increasing number of the counties of the state as conditions changed therein from a pastoral to an agricultural or horticultural state. The first county to be thus affected was the county of Santa Clara. St. 1863, p. 581, as amended by St. 1871-72, p. 580. In the case of Hahn v. Garratt, 69 Cal. 146, 10 Pac. 329, these acts were held to intend that an owner of land in the county of Santa Clara was no longer required to fence it against cattle belonging to another person, but could maintain an action for damages against the owner of cattle permitting them to trespass upon such uninclosed land. In the year 1874 the Legislature passed an act (St. 1873-74, p. 50) entitled "An act to protect agriculture and to prevent the trespassing of animals upon private property in the counties of Fresno, Tulare, Kern, Ventura, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo and Monterey." The act provides that the owner or occupant of lands in the designated counties, whether such lands be inclosed or not, should have the right to take up and impound stock found upon such lands, and proceed to sell such stock for the damages occasioned by their trespass. Section 8 of the act gave to such owner or occupant of such lands the right to maintain an action for the trespass in any court of competent jurisdiction without exercising his right of impounding such stock, provided such action was commenced within 60 days. In the case of Triscony v. Brandenstein, 66 Cal. 514, 6 Pac. 384, the Supreme Court had occasion to construe and apply this statute to a case of trespassing cattle upon unfenced lands in the county of Monterey, and the court there held that a cause of action existed for such trespass in that county in addition to the remedy of the proceeding in rem provided for in that statute, and that the plaintiff in that action was not restricted to the period of 60 days within which to bring his action.

In the case of Heilbron v. Heinlen, 70 Cal. 482, 12 Pac. 385, which was an action for the trespassing of stock upon unfenced land in Fresno county, the Supreme Court sustained such action upon the authority of Triscony v. Brandenstein, supra, holding that the plaintiff was not confined in his proofs to the trespasses committed by the defendant's cattle within 60 days prior to the commencement of his action. A similar ruling was made in the case of Zumwalt v. Dickey, 92 Cal. 156, 28 Pac. 212, an action arising in the county of Tulare.

[1, 2] In the year 1878 the Legislature passed an act entitled "An act concerning the trespassing of animals upon private lands in certain counties of the State of California." By the terms of this act it was declared to be unlawful for any animals, the property of another person, to enter upon any land owned or lawfully in the possession of another than the owner of such animal. The act as at first passed was made applicable to the county of Colusa and certain other counties of the state, not including Fresno, Monterey, or Tulare, and was later in the same session amended so as to apply to the county of Los Angeles. Stats. 1877-78, pp. 176, 878. It was this act which was under review in the case of Blevins v. Mullally, supra, and which was further considered in its application to the county of Los Angeles in the case of Hicks v. Butterworth, 30 Cal. App. 564, 159 Pac. 224. In each of these cases last above cited an important question applicable to the case at bar arose. This was the question as to the effect upon the statute of 1877-78, and necessarily also upon the statute of 1873-74, of the act of the Legislature passed in 1907, entitled "An act concerning trespassing animals upon private lands and the recovery of damages resulting therefrom." St. 1907, p. 999. By the terms of this latter act it was made unlawful for any person owning or in possession of an animal to suffer or permit such animal to break in or enter upon any land of another person where such land is planted to growing crops, vines, fruit trees, or vegetables, "and is at the time entirely inclosed by a substantial fence or other inclosure." The act provides that "all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed." The question discussed by the District Courts of the Second and Third Districts in the two cases last above cited was as to the effect of this act upon the act of 1877-78, and inferentially also upon the act of 1873-74. In both of these cases the conclusion was arrived at that the act of 1907 did not operate to repeal the act of 1877-78, or any other of the special acts declaring the common-law rule as to trespassing stock upon uninclosed lands to be in force in the counties designated therein, but only to limit the application of such rule to lands other than those specially required to be inclosed under the terms of the latter enactment. In each of the foregoing cases a petition for rehearing before the Supreme Court was denied.

The law as thus stabilized by the line of authorities above set forth would seem to be that the rule of the common law regarding the keeping of stock within its owner's close is in full force and effect in its application to pastoral lands in the county of Fresno, and that an action for the recovery of damages for the trespass of stock upon such uninclosed lands is not limited as to its time of commencement to 60 days after the act of trespass complained of. It follows that neither of the two points urged by the appellant herein has sufficient merit to justify a reversal of the case. It may be stated that nothing which was said in the case of *Montezuma Improvement Co. v. Simmerly*¹ decided by the Second division of this court, is to be taken as contrary to the views herein expressed, that case having application to the county of Mendocino, in which the common-law rule as to trespass has never been in force.

Judgment affirmed.

(Civ. 1928.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 2, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨ 80(4)—JUDGMENTS APPEALABLE—"FINAL JUDGMENT."

In a suit for the dissolution of a partnership, appointment of a receiver, an accounting, sale of the property, and for a deficiency decree, a decree failing to determine the amount of proceeds and profits due plaintiff, being interlocutory merely, is not appealable; a judgment being final only when it terminates the litigation on the merits and leaves nothing to be done but enforce by execution what has been determined.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Suit by Andrew Gianelli against Michael Briscoe. On the death of plaintiff, Bridget Gianelli was substituted as the administratrix of his estate, and from a decree in her favor, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

² Opinion of Court of Appeal superseded by that of Supreme Court, 189 Pac. 100.

A. H. Ashley, of Stockton, for appellant.
A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for respondent.

HART, J. The pleadings disclose that there is a dispute between the parties as to whether or not, for about 14 years, there was a partnership existing in the saloon business in the city of Stockton between Andrew Gianelli, plaintiff's intestate, who commenced the action, and the defendant.

The complaint was filed on October 16, 1916. It was alleged that a partnership between the parties was formed in April, 1902; that it existed until July 2, 1916, at which time defendant took exclusive possession of the partnership property and has prevented plaintiff from having access thereto, and retains the income derived from said business. The prayer of the complaint was that said partnership be dissolved; that a receiver be appointed to take possession of the partnership property; that defendant be ordered to account to plaintiff for all moneys and property received by him, in running said partnership since the 2d day of October, 1912; that plaintiff's share thereof be paid to him by the receiver out of the proceeds realized from the sale of the property; and for judgment against defendant for any deficiency.

On April 16, 1917, the trial court caused to be filed an "interlocutory decree," the material portions of which are as follows:

"This cause came regularly on for trial upon certain preliminary questions as to whether a partnership existed between plaintiff and defendant, and whether plaintiff was entitled to a dissolution of the same, and to an accounting thereof, on the 5th day of December, 1915, before the court sitting without a jury." It was then stated that evidence was introduced and the matter was submitted to the court for decision, "and all and singular the law and the premises being understood and considered, the court makes and renders its interlocutory decree herein as follows: * * *

"That from the date of the aforesaid agreement of partnership up to the 2d day of July, 1916, both plaintiff and defendant observed and carried out the terms and conditions of said agreement, when on the date last named the defendant, in violation of the terms and conditions of said agreement of partnership, took exclusive and adverse possession of said entire saloon business and all the property thereof, including all the proceeds and profits thereof since the 2d day of July, 1916, and converted the same to his own use, and thereby deprived plaintiff of his right thereto.

"The plaintiff is entitled to a decree dissolving the aforesaid partnership and to an accounting from defendant of all the profits thereof since the 2d day of July, 1916, and to have all the property of said partnership, including the good will thereof, sold, and to have all the proceeds of such sale and the net amount of all moneys received by said defendant from said partnership business since the said 2d day of July, 1916, as may appear by said accounting, equally divided between him and said defendant, and the defendant is hereby directed to render such account within 30 days from date hereof.

"It is further ordered that upon the rendition of said account and a satisfactory settlement and division of the proceeds thereof, and after a legal and proper sale of all the said partnership property and a satisfactory division of the proceeds thereof, as herein provided, the same be reported to this court for approval and confirmation."

Other than what might be regarded as such in the decree, the court made no findings.

Defendant appeals from the judgment under the alternative method.

The first proposition submitted for consideration is that the decree is merely interlocutory, and that therefore no appeal lies therefrom. Upon that ground the respondent insists that the appeal should be dismissed. On the other hand, the appellant contends that since, as is the claim, all the vital issues in controversy are adjudicated by the decree, the same is final.

It is not claimed that, if the decree from which the appeal is taken is interlocutory, it is one from which an appeal will lie. Nor in that case could any such claim be sustained, inasmuch as it is not among those interlocutory orders or decrees from which an appeal is authorized to be taken by section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Alvord, 99 Cal. 407, 410, 33 Pac. 1132. And we think the decree appealed from is merely interlocutory, and not a final judgment. It will be observed that it leaves for future determination and adjudication the question as to the proceeds and profits accruing and derived from the business of the partnership from the 2d day of July, 1916, which, it is stated in the decree, were received by the defendant and converted by him to his own exclusive use. It is therefore still necessary, before a final judgment can be rendered, that the amount of such proceeds and profits shall be ascertained by the accounting which was ordered and the same determined and adjudicated by the court upon a consideration of the report of the account of said proceeds to be rendered and returned by the defendant within 30 days from the date of the rendition and entry of the decree.

It is true that the language of the last paragraph of the decree contemplates that the parties themselves may agree to a settlement, in which case all that would remain to be done would be the approval and confirmation of the same by the court upon a report to it of such settlement. And the appellant takes the position that this is all that can be done or that no more is left to be done except to confirm such report as may be made and to enforce by execution the decree already made. But the position is founded on a precarious or indefinite premise, viz. that there will be arrived at between the parties litigant a satisfactory agreement as to the profits withheld from the plaintiff and division thereof, but the assumption that such will be the result of the accounting conducted by the parties themselves cannot be granted. It is possible, if, indeed (in view of the hostile feeling which would in such a controversy as this naturally arise between the opposing litigants), not probable, that a satisfactory or any settlement cannot be agreed upon between the parties themselves, and thus the controversy finally settled. In that case the court would, of course, be compelled to take evidence and make findings as to the several vital matters necessarily involved in the question of profits retained and converted by the defendant and the division thereof, and thereupon render judgment accordingly. It would in such case have to be ascertained and determined by the court how much, if any, of the profits of the business that the defendant received into his possession of which he had made no account to the plaintiff or which he had wrongfully appropriated to his sole and exclusive use. It is, however, not material to inquire whether a satisfactory arrangement or agreement might be reached between the parties themselves so as to leave nothing remaining for the court to do but to confirm the findings contained in the report of their accounting and see that the judgment is then executed. The important proposition is, as above stated, that there are vital matters which the decree appealed from does not adjudicate, but which are left for future determination and adjudication by a judgment or decree from which it would not be seriously contended that an appeal would not lie, since, unlike the decree already entered herein, it would involve a full, complete, and definitive adjudication of all the essential questions in the action.

A judgment is final only "when it terminates the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce by execution what has been determined." Klever v. Seawell, 65 Fed. 373, 12 C. C. A. 653; Express Co.'s

Case, 108 U. S. 24, 2 Sup. Ct. 6, 27 L. Ed. 638; Griffin v. Orman, 9 Fla. 22; In re Smith, 98 Cal. 636, 640, 33 Pac. 744; Doudell v. Shoo, 159 Cal. 448, 453, 114 Pac. 579. In the last-named case it is said:

"Our system of procedure contemplates that there shall be but one final judgment in a case [citing cases], and in the absence of a clear showing, it is not to be presumed that the court would attempt to dispose of a case piecemeal by successive final judgments, each covering a part of the matters in controversy."

In the case of Clark v. Dunnam, 46 Cal. 204, cited by appellant, involving an action for the dissolution of a copartnership, the court below made specific findings as to all the assets and indebtedness of the firm, and entered a decree whereby a sale of the partnership property and effects were to be made, and directed the payment of all the debts of the partnership and a distribution of whatever might remain of the proceeds of the sale amongst the copartners in certain proportions which were fixed by the decree. The Supreme Court entertained an appeal from the judgment in that case holding it to be a final judgment because all the essential matters in controversy were thereby fully and completely adjudicated. There was nothing remaining to be done but to enforce by execution what had been determined by the judgment. The litigation between the parties on the merits was thus terminated. And if, in this case, the court had ascertained and determined the amount of the profits of the business which the decree declares were received and converted by the defendant, and so have determined how much thereof the plaintiff was entitled to, we would, of course, have a case here to which the case of Clark v. Dunnam would be in all respects analogous, but manifestly that case is not like this, and is therefore not in point. The other cases cited by the appellant are not similar to this, and consequently are of no assistance to him.

Our conclusion is that an appeal does not lie from the decree here, and the appeal therefrom is, therefore hereby dismissed.

BLESSING v. FETTERS et al. (Civ. 1905.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 28, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 26, 1919.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚖️184(2)—DEPOSITS TO SECURE LEASE—TERMINATION OF TENANCY BY EVICTION.

In an action by a tenant's successor in interest to recover a deposit made by the tenant with the landlord, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the lease was terminated by eviction, so that the landlord was not entitled to retain the deposit.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚖️172(2)—"CONSTRUCTIVE EVICTION"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Any intentional and injurious interference by a landlord, which deprives the tenant of the means or the power of beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises, or any part thereof, or materially impairs such beneficial enjoyment, is a "constructive eviction."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Constructive Eviction.]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚖️184(2)—DEPOSITS TO SECURE LEASE — LANDLORD'S RIGHT OF RETENTION.

A landlord is not entitled to retain deposits given to secure certain covenants of the lease after the termination thereof by eviction.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚖️76(3) — ASSIGNMENTS OF LEASE—NECESSITY OF LANDLORD'S CONSENT.

Under a lease requiring the landlord's written consent to an assignment by the tenant, that the tenant assigned a half-interest in the lease to his partner without the written consent of the landlord, and in violation of covenants of the lease, did not forfeit the lease, where the landlord accepted rent from the original tenant with knowledge of the assignment.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚖️101½—PARTNERSHIP — EFFECT OF BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS.

Where an original lessee forms a partnership, he is entitled to possession of the premises, after the bankruptcy of his partner, by his right as original lessee, and as the remaining solvent partner, until he consents to have the partnership property administered in bankruptcy.

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⚖️238(3)—ACTIONS — JOINDER OF HUSBAND — JUDGMENT AGAINST HUSBAND FORMALLY JOINED.

In an action by a tenant to recover a deposit securing the lease, after termination of the tenancy by wrongful eviction by defendant, that defendant's husband is joined as a defendant as a formality required by Code Civ. Proc. § 370, does not authorize a judgment against such husband personally.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Action by Charles B. Blessing against Emma Feters and husband. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

Reuben G. Hunt and Samuel M. Samter, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

BUCK, Judge pro tem. This is an action brought by a successor in interest of a tenant to recover from the landlord moneys deposited as security for the performance of the covenants of the lease, upon the claim that there had been an eviction of the tenant by the landlord and a consequent termination of the lease. With the foregoing cause of action there is joined a cause of action to recover the sum of $250 deposited by the tenant with the landlord at the time of the making of the lease, with the understanding that this sum should be returned by the landlord to the tenant at the termination of the lease, upon the renewal of a certain liquor license in favor of the landlord.

The case was tried without a jury, and the court found that there was an eviction, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover the $250 deposited to cover the saloon license, and also was entitled to recover the sum of $1,000 deposited as security for the performance of the covenants of the lease, less the sum of $350, being the damage caused by breach of covenant to take proper care of the premises and goods leased. Judgment accordingly in the sum of $900 was given against defendants Emma Feters and her husband, George Feters, from which they each took this appeal.

In appellants' brief no points are made or suggested in regard to the findings or evidence in the cause of action in regard to the $250 deposited on account of the liquor license. In their brief "appellants claim in this action that the sole question for decision is: Did the lessor either actually or constructively evict the tenant Nichols?" On this issue the finding of the court was as follows:

"On or about the 13th day of September, 1917, the defendant Emma Feters, while the said lease was still in full force and effect, wrongfully re-entered upon the said hotel premises and evicted all persons therefrom and assumed possession thereof, all without the consent and against the will of said partnership, said Nichols, and said bankrupt, and thereby terminated said lease, and released the said Nichols from his obligation to pay rent under said lease. Ever since such re-entry the defendant Emma Feters has been and now is in full possession of the said premises to the exclusion of said Nichols, the said bankrupt, the said partnership, and the plaintiff as such receiver and trustee. Ever since on or about the 4th day of October, 1917, the defendants have been operating the said hotel premises for their own use and benefit, to the exclusion of said Nichols, the said bankrupt, the said partnership, and the plaintiff as such receiver and trustee."

This finding is in strict accord with the issues made by the pleadings, and no issue is raised by the pleadings in regard to the termination of the lease in any other manner than by the eviction above found. On most points the evidence is sharply in conflict, and in some respects the inferences which may be drawn from the evidence are equally conflicting; but it substantially appears from the evidence that the lease in question was executed on the 2d day of January, 1917, for the term of five years, at the annual rental of $960, payable quarterly in advance, and was for the property known as the "Hotel Chauvet," consisting of the hotel building and hotel equipments and furniture therein contained, and of the estimated value of $1,000. The lease contained the usual covenants for the payment of rent, and that the tenant should not "voluntarily or involuntarily assign this lease without the written consent" of the landlord, and provided that the tenant should conduct the hotel business in a quiet, lawful, and orderly manner, and should properly care for the premises and keep the buildings in good condition of repair at his own cost and expense, and "upon the expiration of this lease, or any sooner determination thereof, the tenant will quit and surrender the premises and all of said personal property in as good state and condition as reasonable use and wear thereof will permit." And the lease further recited that the tenant, upon the execution of the lease, has deposited with the landlord "the sum of one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars as a guaranty that he will faithfully perform each and every of the covenants of this lease, and said sum of one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars is to be kept and retained by the said party of the first part (the landlord) during the term of this lease as a guaranty for the faithful performance thereof, and any damage or detriment that said party of the first part may sustain by reason of any violation of any of the covenants of this lease shall be indemnified and paid from said sum of one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars."

On May 15th, following the execution of the lease, the tenant Nichols entered into an agreement of partnership with one Oscar Banks for the purpose of conducting the hotel and saloon business in the leased premises. For a one-half interest in the business Banks paid to Nichols the sum of $800, and received from Nichols an assignment of a one-half interest in the lease and moneys deposited under the terms of the lease. The defendant had knowledge of this transaction and of the association of Banks in the business, but never gave any written consent to the assignment, though there is testimony to the effect that she promised so to do. On July 1, 1918, the rent, payable quarterly in advance to October 2, 1918, was paid by Nichols and accepted by the landlord. Later in July some controversy arose between the parties and the landlord, Emma Feters, who claimed that the hotel business was not being conducted in a proper and lawful manner, and after offering Banks $250 for his interest she stated:

"If you don't want to sell sooner or later, you have to go out; and if you don't go out, I will show you that I have to put you out."

About two weeks after this Nichols went away on a trip, leaving his partner, Banks, "in charge of the place." But he returned in about two weeks after some attachments had been levied upon the place. After these attachments were paid off by himself and Banks, he went away again, leaving Banks in charge, and saying that "he wanted to go on a trip." Shortly after other attachments were levied, and Mrs. Feters appeared at the place and told Banks "that, if Mr. Nichols wasn't there, she would have to take over the place, and if I would not go out she would put me out, and that I had no business over there, and I should not stay; that I would spoil her business, her whole investment." To which Banks replied, "I am in charge of this place, and I take very well care for it." Whereupon Banks "sent a telegram to Mr. Nichols that the Chauvet Hotel, the saloon, was attached, and I ask him for his advice what to do. I waited a couple of days, and finally a telegram came and said to do the best I could; so I went up to Santa Rosa, and I left Mr. Billie Karns in charge of the place, and I told him if anybody comes and wanted to go in that place, don't let him in." Upon returning from Santa Rosa about September 11th, Banks was taken in custody by the constable upon a warrant of arrest sworn to by Mrs. Feters and taken back to the hotel, where he found Mrs. Feters in possession with the constable. She told him, among other things:

"If you don't go out, I will have to put you out; and if you don't go out, I will put you in jail, you to stay there."

After Mrs. Feters had taken an inventory of the furniture in the place, Banks was told by her that he could now go; and Banks, left, fearing, as he states, that if he didn't go she would have him prosecuted and sent to the state's prison, and "Mrs. Feters commanded the constable to lock everything in the house, let nobody in there, and she would put somebody in, or the constable would put somebody in, and Mr. Doon, what was there, I told him to take charge of the place, and she says, 'There will be nobody here in the place; that place belongs to me, and I don't want to have nobody run my place.' So I went to take the bus to Napa and I never went back." Banks had already contemplated going into bankruptcy, and for that purpose had made an inventory of and segregated a part of the personal property belonging to him on the premises, and on September 13th Banks filed his petition in bankruptcy, and on that day was adjudged a bankrupt. On September 28th the plaintiff herein was appointed receiver, and on October 4th appointed trustee in bankruptcy. On September 20th Nichols filed in the bankruptcy court his written consent to the administration of the partnership affairs by the bankruptcy court. But prior to this, and since the attachments were dissolved by the adjudication in bankruptcy, Mrs. Feters directed the attachment keeper of the property on the premises to "stay there and take care of the place; that she would have to keep a man there on account of the neighbors"; also at the time of the last attachment, on or about September 11th, Mrs. Feters told one of the attaching creditors, who had just levied an attachment at her suggestion:

"We will have to get them out, or I will have to get them out. The remark was made at the time I put the attachment on there; struck me that Mrs. Feters certainly wanted to get them out."

[1-3] From the foregoing it appears that there was sufficient evidence to justify the finding of the trial court that there was a termination of the lease by eviction before the appointment of the trustee in bankruptcy, and that consequently the defendant landlord was not entitled to retain the deposit given to secure the performance of the covenants of the lease after it had been thus wrongfully terminated by her. As stated in the case of New State Brewing Ass'n v. Miller, 43 Okl. 183, 141 Pac. 1175:

"Any intentional and injurious interference by the landlord, which deprives the tenant of the means or the power of beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises, or any part thereof, or materially impairs such beneficial enjoyment, is a constructive eviction."

And the case of Onward Const. Co. v. Harris (Sup.) 144 N. Y. Supp. 318, holds that threats and abusive language may in some instances be sufficient to constitute an eviction. And the following authorities are conclusive on the proposition that a landlord is not entitled to retain a deposit given to secure certain covenants after the termination of the lease by eviction: Green v. Frahm, 176 Cal. 259, 168 Pac. 114; Rehkopf v. Wirz, 31 Cal. App. 695, 161 Pac. 285; Rez v. Summers, 34 Cal. App. 527, 168 Pac. 156; Wollenshlager v. MacLean, 34 Cal. App. 102, 166 Pac. 853; Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, pp. 1221, 1258; Wilson v. Agnew, 25 Colo. App. 109, 136 Pac. 96.

terest in the lease to Banks and its use by the partnership was without the written consent of the landlord, and in violation of the covenant in the lease, it did not create a forfeiture of the lease, especially after the landlord had accepted the rent with knowledge of the assignment. Garcia v. Gunn, 119 Cal. 315, 319, 51 Pac. 684.

[5] The evidence is sufficient to show that at the time of Banks' eviction, Nichols had not abandoned the lease, and that Banks was attempting to hold possession, not only for himself, but also to take care of the property for Nichols. Furthermore, even after the bankruptcy proceedings, on September 13th, Nichols was entitled to hold possession and to have some one on the premises on his behalf, not only under his right as original lessee, but also as the remaining solvent partner until he consented to have the partnership property administered in bankruptcy. Francis v. McNeal, 228 U. S. 696, at page 700, 33 Sup. Ct. 701, 57 L. Ed. 1029, L. R. A. 1915E, 706.

[6] Appellants insist that in any event the judgment against the husband, George Feters, should be reversed; and it is clear both from the evidence and the judgment roll that no judgment should have been entered against him. In the complaint it is stated that:

"Said George Feters is joined as party defendant herein only because of the provisions of section 370 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California."

And at the opening of the trial counsel stated:

"The only reason George Feters is joined as a defendant is because he is the husband of Emma Feters."

But, notwithstanding this, the plaintiff took judgment that he "have and recover of and from the defendants Emma Feters and George Feters, her husband, the sum of $900," etc. By its terms this judgment unjustly binds and affects, not only the separate property of George Feters but also the community property. But, as stated in the case of Terry v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. at page 88, 42 Pac. at page 465, husbands become—

"proper and necessary parties defendant, not, however, to the end that they or their property should be bound by the judgment, but solely that they might be able to aid their wives in their defense. The present utility of the statute in this progressive day may be open to question, but, however this may be, it was passed at a time when the lawmakers, perhaps with mistaken chivalry, believed that a wife, brought into litigation, might be the better for the comfort, protection, and support of her husband's authorized presence."

See, also, Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 308.

Substantial justice, however, can be ac-completed by a modification of the judgment. Davis v. Lamb et al., 5 Cal. Unrep. 765, 35 Pac. 306.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment as to the defendant Emma Feters be affirmed, with direction to the trial court that the judgment be modified, so as to provide that it do not affect the separate property of the defendant George Feters or the community property (Van Maren v. Johnson, supra), and, as so modified, the judgment will be affirmed, without costs to either appellant.

KIRCH v. WATTELL et al. (Civ. 2619.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨32(3)—MUTUALITY.

Under agreement expressed in part in a memorandum and in part by certain escrow instruments given to a trustee selected by the parties, whereby plaintiff sold to defendant furnishings, furniture, and leasehold interest in a lodging house, held, that there was such mutuality of obligation as entitled plaintiff to specific performance, though the agreement contained a provision for liquidated damages.

2. DAMAGES ⇨85—LIQUIDATED DAMAGES OR SECURITY.

Where purchaser agreed that upon his default, deed held by a trustee and transferring certain property to plaintiff as security was to be delivered to plaintiff, and that purchaser should forfeit property as liquidated damages, plaintiff was entitled to the deed as security upon default of purchaser, though provision for liquidated damages was void.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Claire J. Kirch against Junot Wattell and another. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Bernard Potter, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ira L. Brunk and J. H. Creighton, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this action a decree was entered agreeable to the prayer of the complaint requiring specific performance of the agreement made between defendant Wattell and the plaintiff. In the decree it was further determined that a deed made by Wattell to his codefendant was void as to the plaintiff. The cause of action grew out of a transaction had wherein plaintiff sold to Wattell the furniture, furnishings, and her leasehold interest in a certain lodging house located in the city of Los Angeles. The agreement was expressed in part in a memorandum made at the time and signed by both parties, and in part by certain escrow instructions give to a trustee selected by the parties.

[1] Counsel for appellants, in insisting that there was no mutuality such as would entitle the plaintiff to the remedy which she obtained in this action, refers only to the memorandum first made, which is only in part expressive of the admitted agreement intended to be entered into. In order to arrive at the full purpose of the contracting parties, the escrow instructions constituted a necessary part of the contract. The lodging house sold by plaintiff to Wattell was furnished, and the agreed price was $3,750 for the furnishings, furniture, and leasehold interest. Wattell agreed first to pay the sum of $1,200 on or before the 26th day of December, 1914, and agreed to execute a chattel mortgage on the furniture for $2,550, which should be payable in certain parts per month, with interest stated. It was provided that an extension of time might be given in certain contingencies. As further security that he would comply with the terms of the agreement, Wattell was to deposit a deed with the trustee, transferring title to a lot in the city of Los Angeles to the plaintiff, which deed was to be held by the trustee until default was made by Wattell, whereupon it was to deliver it to the plaintiff. It was stated in the agreement that upon default of Wattell to fulfill his obligations under the contract the deed was to be delivered to the plaintiff, and the contract recited that "the second party [Wattell] agrees to forfeit above named property as liquidated damages." An extension of time was given on the contract, but defendant failed to make the payments to the plaintiff as required, whereupon this action was brought. We think that specific performance was the appropriate remedy, and that plaintiff was not required to resort to an action for damages as her only means of obtaining satisfaction of the obligations assumed by the defendant. Shannon v. Cavanaugh, 12 Cal. App. 434, 107 Pac. 574.

[2] Appellants insist that the court improperly decreed that the deed from Wattell to the plaintiff should be delivered to the plaintiff to be held as security. They argue that the term of the contract providing that the property should be taken under the deed as for liquidated damages was void for the reason that the case was not such a one as to permit damages to be fixed in advance. We may agree that this was so. However, assuming that the plaintiff had received the deed, she would have been entitled to retain it as security for the performance of the obligations of the defendant. She could not have claimed the property transferred by defendant absolutely as her own, but would have been required to foreclose in order to subject the lot to the payment of her debt. So here the court properly decreed that the deed should be delivered and held in the same way. The form of the chattel mortgage which the court decreed should be executed by Wattell was precisely in record, as to the payments to be made, with the contract as expressed in the memorandum agreement and the trust instructions executed by Wattell. The court found against the defendant's claim that there had been fraudulent representations as to the value of the lodging house, furnishings, and furniture; hence we are not concerned with that question here, as there was sufficient evidence to support those findings. The contract between these parties was poorly expressed, and the action taken under it somewhat disconnected. However, on the record before us we cannot perceive wherein justice has miscarried in this case.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA HIGHWAY COMMISSION OF DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 2945.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 27, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 26, 1919.)

MASTER AND SERVANT — 361—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION — RELATION OF EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYÉ—EVIDENCE.

Where deceased was fatally injured by the overturning of an automobile secured by the highway commission to transport him and another to the place where they, if acceptable to the foreman, would be employed, held deceased was not in the employ of the commission at the time of the injury, and his dependents were not entitled to compensation.

Proceedings by Nettie H. McGillivray and others, for compensation for the death of George J. McGillivray, opposed by the California Highway Commission of Department of Engineering of the State of California. Compensation awarded, and the Highway Commission petitions for writ of review. Award annulled.

Daniel W. Burbauk, of San Francisco (F. J. Creede, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Upon a writ of review issued herein we are asked to annul an award of compensation made by the Industrial Accident Commission against the California Highway Commission and in favor of dependents of George J. McGillivray, deceased, who is alleged to have died as the result of injuries received while in the employ of the Highway Commission.

The facts are as follows: In May, 1918, petitioner was engaged in constructing highways some distance from the city of Los Angeles, where the office of its division superintendent, whose duties were the general supervision of the work in his division, was located. Each section or job of work was in charge of a superintendent or foreman on the ground. In the month of May the Public Employment Bureau of Los Angeles, having received notice from the division superintendent's office that petitioner was in need of laborers, sent George J. McGillivray to the office of said superintendent, where he applied for work as a teamster, and was told by Mr. Swartz, then in charge of the office, that he could secure a job by applying to Mr. J. G. Beckjord, the foreman on the ground of what was known as the "Ridge Route," distant some 60 miles from Los Angeles, provided he was satisfactory to him. He was also informed as to compensation paid and the amount deducted therefrom as board for employés, who were required to furnish their own blankets, and told that transportation to the place would be furnished him, no charge for which would be made, provided he held his job for one month. For the purpose of conveying deceased and another to the work, the Highway Commission secured an automobile, the owner of which undertook, for hire, the transportation of the men to the place where they, if acceptable to the foreman, would be employed. On the way to the prospective work the automobile overturned, injuring McGillivray, as a result of which he died. In the employment of men for the work Swartz had no authority other than, when men were needed and finding those whom he thought would be acceptable to the foreman, to send them on to the work, telling them, as he did McGillivray, that they could secure a job provided they were satisfactory to the foreman; that as to men thus sent to him the foreman was vested with full authority, as in cases of independent application, to employ them or not, as he might determine. Indeed, as conclusively shown by the evidence, the only person who had the right to employ labor upon the work was the foreman in charge, who frequently refused to accept men sent to him by the office, and that nothing was paid for time consumed in going from Los Angeles to the place of prospective employment.

Upon these facts, as to which there is no controversy, a majority of the commissioners

GROSJEAN v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRAN-CISCO et al. (Civ. 2684.)

found that McGillivray at the time he received the injuries which caused his death was an employé of petitioner, and that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment as such employé. In our opinion, there is no evidence to support this finding. As appears from the facts, the relation of the Los Angeles office of petitioner to the foreman on the ground in charge of the work, having sole power to engage laborers, was identical with that of an employment office in finding work for those seeking employment. As was done in this case by Swartz, they are informed as to wages, terms, and conditions upon which, if satisfactory, employment may be obtained by applying to the person in charge of work at a designated place. But until such application is made, and the party accepted, the relation of employer and employé is not established. The information as to wages, terms, and conditions under which petitioner was employing men upon the Ridge Route, coupled with the statement made by Swartz that deceased could secure a job there if he proved satisfactory to the foreman in charge of the work, no doubt induced him to undertake the trip in the hope of obtaining employment; but, in the absence of proof that he applied to the foreman or entered upon service, it is insufficient to establish the relation of master and servant, without which compensation for injury or death cannot be awarded. Deceased knew that success in obtaining employment depended upon the foreman who, as shown by the uncontradicted evidence, was vested with full and arbitrary power in determining whom he would or would not employ. Hence, until he had reported to the foreman and there was some word or act on his part manifesting an acceptance of his proffered service, he could not be said to be an employé of the Highway Commission. Indeed, upon arriving at the camp and finding conditions unsatisfactory, he might, at his option, conclude that he would not apply for work. He was traveling upon his own time, for his own benefit, was not performing, and had never performed, any service for petitioner. The fact that he, instead of providing his own means of conveyance and cost of transportation, availed himself of the proffered offer of petitioner to advance the cost thereof, is an immaterial factor in the consideration of the question, since "the law operates upon a status, i. e., that of employer and employé, and affixes certain rights and obligations to that status." North Alaska S. Co. v. Pillsbury, 174 Cal. 1, 162 Pac. 93, L. R. A. 1917E, 642. Since the status did not exist, the provisions of the Compensation Act are not applicable.

The award is annulled.

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ¶56—
RULES OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—SUSPENSION OR FAILURE TO OBSERVE.

Rules of Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco, § 12, providing that any rules might be amended or repealed by the affirmative vote of three members at any meeting, provided notice in writing of such intended amendment or repeal had been given at a previous meeting, was merely a rule of procedure for the guidance or protection of the members of the board, which they could suspend or ignore on occasion, and in respect to their action in so doing only the members themselves had a right to complain.

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ¶56—
RULE OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—SUSPENSION.

Rules of Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco, § 12, providing that any rules might be amended or repealed by the affirmative vote of three members at any meeting, provided notice in writing had been given at a previous meeting, was effectually suspended by the board through its unanimous action in passing amendment to another rule without the formality of the notice in writing of its proposed enactment.

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ¶141(1)—
RULES OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—CHANGE—NOTICE TO TEACHER.

Rules of board of education of city and county of San Francisco, § 47, requiring principals when officially notified of any changes or amendments to the rules to cause them to be inserted in the copy belonging to each teacher, was complied with sufficiently where the principal of a teacher directed her attention to a new rule regarding absence of teachers shortly after its passage, and where the teacher then read the rule.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ¶8—CHARTER—
OPERATION AS GENERAL LAWS.

The charter of the city and county of San Francisco, in creating the duties and relations of the superintendent of schools and the board of education, is to be regarded as a state law of equal dignity with the general laws of the state, so long as in school matters it is not in conflict with them.

5. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ¶141(5)—
DISMISSAL OF TEACHER—SUPERINTENDENT OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—RIGHT TO OBJECT.

A school-teacher of the city and county of San Francisco, dismissed from her position, cannot object, on application for mandamus for reinstatement, that the superintendent of schools was disqualified to sit or act as a member of the board of education in hearing and determining charges which he had, as prosecutor, laid before the body; the fact being that he did not sit or act as a member of the board in the final determination of the charges.

6. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS — 53(2)—
BOARD OF EDUCATION — DISQUALIFICATION OF SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS.

In relation to the acts of such inferior and quasi judicial tribunals as boards of education, boards of supervisors, town councils, and other governing bodies of public subdivisions or municipal corporations, the rules relating to the disqualification of officers, as the superintendent of schools, ex officio a member of the board of education, have but a limited application.

7. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS — 141(5)
— REMOVAL OF TEACHER — OBJECTION TO BOARD OF EDUCATION AS TRIBUNAL — LATE CHARACTER.

Where a school-teacher of the city and county of San Francisco, when meeting charges before the board of education, did not object to any passion or prejudice of the board, but did object on appeal from the decision of the board to the superintendent of schools, the objection was too late, even if it had been valid instead of general.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Application for writ of mandate by Eily S. M. Grosjean against the Board of Education of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and others. From judgment for defendants on demurrer to the application, plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

C. W. Eastin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Georgé Lull, City Atty., Milton Marks, Asst. City Atty., and Edward F. Moran, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the defendants' favor after an order sustaining their demurrer to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's application for a writ of mandate.

The plaintiff, prior to May 12, 1917, had been a teacher in the public schools of San Francisco for many years, holding diplomas and certificates which entitled her to be a teacher therein and to be retained in such position unless dismissed therefrom for "insubordination, immoral or unprofessional conduct," after the presentation of charges and a hearing thereon as provided by law. It appears affirmatively from the plaintiff's petition that such charges were presented and a hearing had thereon before the said board of education, which thereupon made an order for the plaintiff's dismissal. It is the regularity and legality of this action on the part of said board which the plaintiff attacked by her petition and which she assails upon this appeal.

It sufficiently appears upon the face of the plaintiff's petition that the alleged dereliction of duty which furnished the basis of the charges which were preferred against her was that of insubordination, consisting: First in violations of the rules of the board of education, by repeated absences from her place in the particular school to which she had been assigned; and, second, in insubordination, by failing or refusing to report at the office of the superintendent of schools when required to do so in order to explain such absences. The charges presented against the plaintiff to the board of education by the superintendent of schools on April 30, 1917, specifically asserted that the plaintiff had been absent from her duties without permission for 17 school days out of a possible 20 during four weeks in the months of March and April, 1917, the dates of such absences being March 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th, after which a vacation intervened from March 26th to April 9th; then followed absences on April 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 24th, 25th, 26th, and 27th. Prior to April 10, 1917, section 86 of the rules of the board of education read as follows:

"Teachers desiring to be absent from duty for more than one calendar week must give notice thereof to the board, stating the cause and duration of such absence. Such notification, made upon official blanks, and approved by the principal, must be sent to the board. In cases of sudden illness, or other emergency, teachers may absent themselves temporarily without permission for a term not to exceed five days."

On April 10th the board of education adopted the following resolution, purporting to change this particular rule:

"Whereas regularity in attendance is a prime duty of the teacher; therefore be it

"Resolved, that section 86 of the rules be and it is hereby abolished and the following substituted therefor:

"In cases of serious sickness or death in the family and of illness grave enough to keep a teacher at home or in a hospital, teachers may absent themselves without permission for a term not to exceed five days. Where teachers wish to absent themselves for other reasons they must notify the board, stating the cause and duration of such absence, and obtain permission therefor, to be certified to them by the secretary of the board of education."

[1] It is the contention of the appellant that the foregoing change in said rule 86 of the board was not legally made, and hence ineffectual, for the reason that its adoption was in alleged violation of section 12 of the rules of the board, which provides as follows:

"Sec. 12. Any rules adopted by the board may be amended or repealed by the affirmative vote of three members at any meeting, provided notice in writing of such intended amendment or repeal has been given at a previous meeting."

We perceive no merit in this contention. The section above quoted is merely a rule of parliamentary procedure adopted for the guidance, and it may be protection, of the members of the board, and which they had power to suspend or ignore when occasion required, and, in respect to their action in so doing, no one but the members of the board themselves would have a right to complain. Hutcheson v. Storrie (Tex. Civ. App.) 48 S. W. 785; Greeley v. Hamman, 17 Colo. 30, 28 Pac. 460; Cooley, Const. Lim. (7th Ed.) p. 113; Heiskell v. Mayor, etc., 65 Md. 125, 4 Atl. 116, 57 Am. Rep. 311.

[2] Besides we think the rule referred to was effectually suspended by the board of education through its unanimous action in passing the amendment to rule 86 without the formality of the notice in writing of its proposed enactment required by section 12. People v. Rochester, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 11; Nelson v. City of Omaha, 84 Neb. 434, 121 N. W. 453.

[3] It is next contended by the appellant that she was not legally notified of the change thus made in rule 86 of the board, and was therefore not bound by it. This contention is predicated upon section 47 of the said rules, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 47. Principals, when officially notified of any changes or amendments to these rules, shall immediately cause them to be neatly inserted in the copy of the rules belonging to each teacher in their respective schools."

While it is conceded by the respondent that the record does not affirmatively show that this requirement was complied with, it is pointed out that the plaintiff nowhere alleges that she was not personally made acquainted with the fact and substance of the change in the rule within a day or two after such change was made. On the contrary, the plaintiff sets forth in her petition the full text of the charges made against her, wherein it appears that her principal directed her attention to the new rule regarding absences of teachers shortly after its passage, and that she then read it. This statement the plaintiff nowhere denies; and since the rule imposing upon principals the duty of pasting copies of changes made in the teachers' books of rules has for its only purpose the giving to such teachers notice of the text of changes thus made, this purpose was fully subverted by the plaintiff's reading of the rule.

[4] This brings us to a consideration of the charges which were presented against the plaintiff, and the procedure thereon, to which the plaintiff and appellant offers several more or less specific objections. The charges were presented by the superintendent of schools acting under the express authority and duty conferred upon him by the terms of the city charter, which in chapters I to VI of article VII thereof provides a system of government of the public schools of San Francisco in amplification of the provisions of the Political Code. We perceive no valid objection to the assignment of this specific duty to the superintendent of schools, who is made by the charter an ex officio member of the board of education. The charter in creating these duties and relations is to be regarded as a state law of equal dignity with the general laws of the state so long as in school matters it is not in conflict with them. Stern v. Council, etc., 25 Cal. App. 685, 145 Pac. 167.

Turning now to the substance of the charges themselves, we find that the plaintiff was therein charged with having been absent from her duties four days in the middle of March, 1917, without excuse; that she was again absent during all of the school days of the week commencing April 9, 1917; and was again absent during all of the school days of the following week excepting Monday, if school was held on that day; and was again absent on all of the school days of the succeeding week, again excepting Monday, all of which absences were without permission or excuse. It would be a very strained construction of rule 86 of the board of education as it read prior to April 10, 1917, which would permit teachers without the excuse of illness or other emergency to absent themselves from their place and duty for three successive weeks with the exception of two separate intervening days, without being liable to the charge of dereliction of duty; even, therefore, if rule 86 had not been validly amended on April 10, 1917, as the plaintiff charges, these unexplained absences would have been a violation of both the letter and spirit of the original rule. The change in the rule effected by its valid amendment on the latter date puts the matter, however, beyond dispute, since the amendment requires that teachers wishing to absent themselves from their places for any other reasons than serious sickness or death in their families, or illness of themselves grave enough to keep them at home or in the hospital, must notify the board of education of the cause and duration of such absences, and obtain permission therefor. Under this amended rule the plaintiff by her absences after April 10, 1917, or at least after the rule as changed had been read by her within a brief time thereafter, had subjected herself to the charges which were preferred against her. These charges further specify that on April 18, 1917, the board of education by letter of that date directed the principal of her school to notify the plaintiff to report to the office of the superintendent of schools, but, owing to her absence, this notice was not conveyed to her until April 23d, which was one of the Mondays when she was at school. She did not so report, nor attempt to do so until after the close of school hours on that day, when she did attempt to report, but failed to find the superintendent in his office. On the following Monday she called the superintendent on the telephone, when he told her that he had prepared charges against her. On that day she again absented herself without permission for the remainder of the week.

The foregoing facts form the basis of the charges which the superintendent presented to the board on April 30, 1917. Upon their presentation the board suspended the plaintiff, and fixed the date of hearing thereon for May 12, 1917, of which the plaintiff had due notice. She appeared before the board on that day, and pleaded not guilty to the charges, but apparently offered no objection to the right of the superintendent to present, or of the board to hear, such charges upon any of the grounds of bias, prejudice, or interest which she now urges against the legality of the proceeding. Upon the hearing upon said charges, and after the taking of evidence pro and con thereon without objection on the plaintiff's part, the board made its findings sustaining said charges and dismissing her from her position as a teacher in the public schools. The plaintiff appealed to the superintendent of schools within the time and in the manner provided by the school laws, which appeal was denied by the superintendent on June 4, 1917. To the charges thus presented, the hearing thus held, the findings and order thus made, and the appeal thus taken and determined, the plaintiff presented certain objections in her petition, and has reiterated these upon this appeal.

[5, 6] The chief of these objections, aside from those already noted and disposed of, relate to the alleged disqualification of the superintendent to present, and of the members of the board of education to hear and determine, said charges by reason of the asserted bias and prejudice of these officials. As to the alleged disqualification of the superintendent of schools to present charges, there is no merit in the plaintiff's claim, since the charter expressly imposes the duty of presenting such charges upon that particular official, and any bias or prejudice which he might have could not affect his right and duty to prepare and present the charges in question. The more serious part of the objection is that relating to the alleged disqualification of the board of education to act in the hearing and determination thereon. The first part of this objection embraces the asserted disqualification of the superintendent of schools to sit or act as a member of the board in the hearing and determination of charges which he has himself in the character of a prosecutor laid before that body. Such an objection might in a proper case prove effectual, but not in the case at bar, since the plaintiff's petition affirmatively shows that the superintendent of schools, while ex officio a member of the board, did not in fact sit or act as a member of the board, in the final determination thereon. But aside from this we think the authorities quite consistently hold that in relation to the acts of such inferior and only quasi judicial tribunals as boards of education, boards of supervisors, town councils, and other governing bodies of public subdivisions or municipal corporations, the rules relating to the disqualification of regular judicial tribunals or officers have but a limited application. In the recent case of Federal Construction Co. v. Curd, 177 Pac. 469, this subject was quite fully discussed in a case not distinguishable in principle from the case at bar, and in which the court declared it to be the settled rule "that the interest of one or all of the members of boards of trustees, city councils, or other municipal bodies charged with the making or rectifying of assessments for street or other improvements may have, arising from the fact of their ownership of property directly affected by the proposed improvement, does not create such a disqualification to sit or act in the premises as to render their action void as not constituting due process of law." Other cases bearing upon the same subject and applying the same rule to officials sitting upon the hearing of charges against municipal officers are the following: Riggins v. Richards, 97 Tex. 229, 77 S. W. 946; State v. Com. Council, 90 Wis. 612, 64 N. W. 304; McQuillin on Municipal Corp., vol. 2, § 565.

[7] Aside, however, from these considerations, the plaintiff's petition discloses that the plaintiff's objection to the action of the board of education or any of its members, in proceeding to try her upon the charges presented by the superintendent of schools upon the ground of their or any of their disqualification by reason of bias or prejudice, was made for the first time after the trial, decision, and order for her dismissal, and in her appeal to the superintendent for a reversal of such decision and order, and that her objection then taken was merely the general one "that the said findings, decision, and order were the result of passion and prejudice on the part of said board of education." Such an objection came entirely too late, even had the same been valid, since it is a general rule of law applicable to the alleged disqualification of judicial officers that the objection upon that ground must be presented at the inception of the hearing, and must be supported by affidavits. This rule and the reasoning which supports it also applies to the appeal taken by the plaintiff to the superintendent of schools, against whom she makes for the first time in her petition a similar charge, but to whom she committed her cause upon appeal without objection as to his personal qualification to hear and act upon the same. Our conclusion upon this branch of the case is that the board of education and the members thereof were not disqualified to hear, entertain, and determine the charges presented against the plaintiff, or to enter the order for her dismissal from the school department based thereon.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the other points presented by the appellant upon this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

VARCOE v. LEE et al. (S. F. 7980.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 8, 1919.)

1. NEW TRIAL ⇨70—GROUNDS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In negligence action, based on reckless driving of automobile at excessive speed, evidence that automobile was brought to a stop within 10 feet after it struck child does not warrant setting aside verdict for plaintiff on ground that it demonstrates that automobiles was traveling at a speed of 10 miles or less, since jury may have disbelieved that automobile came to a stop within 10 feet, or that it could not be stopped within that distance if traveling more than 10 miles an hour, or may have disbelieved both propositions.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨706(7)—USE OF STREETS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—CONDUCT OF CHILD.

A child who, after waiting for wagons and street cars to pass, ran, instead of walked, across street, was not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1004(1)—DISCRETION—DAMAGES.

Appellate court's power over excessive damages exists only when the facts are such that the excess appears as a matter of law, or is such as to suggest at first blush passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury.

4. DEATH ⇨99(3) — EXCESSIVE DAMAGES—DEATH OF CHILD.

Verdict of $5,000, given parent for death of child killed by automobile, is not excessive as a matter of law, or such as to suggest passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1050(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In a negligence action, based on driving of automobile at excessive speed, the admission of traffic ordinance limiting speed to 15 miles an hour was harmless, where Motor Vehicle Act, § 22, subd. "b," which was applicable to case, limited the speed at place where accident took place to 15 miles an hour.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1064(2)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In action for child's death by automobile, instruction that that portion of the street at which the accident took place was a business district, if on weight of the evidence, was harmless, where it was a matter of common knowledge, and was an undisputed fact, that such street at such point was a business street.

7. EVIDENCE ⇨1—JUDICIAL NOTICE—APPELLATE COURT.

An appellate court can properly take judicial notice of any matter of which any court of original jurisdiction may properly take notice.

8. EVIDENCE ⇨3—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

That trial judge has actual knowledge of a fact, or that fact is a matter of common knowledge and notoriety, does not warrant him taking judicial knowledge thereof, where fact is not indisputable.

9. EVIDENCE ⇨1—"JUDICIAL NOTICE"—DEFINITION.

"Judicial notice" is a judicial short cut, a doing away, in the case of evidence, with the formal necessity for evidence, because there is no real necessity for it.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Judicial Notice.]

10. EVIDENCE ⇨5(1) — JUDICIAL NOTICE—MATTERS OF COMMON KNOWLEDGE.

The power of judicial notice as to matters of general knowledge is to be used with caution, and if there is any doubt whatever, either as to the fact itself or as to its being a matter of common knowledge, evidence should be required.

11. EVIDENCE ⇨5(1) — JUDICIAL NOTICE—MATTERS OF COMMON KNOWLEDGE—TEST.

Where it is sought to avoid or excuse production of evidence, because the fact to be proven is one of general knowledge and notoriety, the test is whether the fact is one of common everyday knowledge in the particular jurisdiction, which every one of average intelligence and knowledge of things about him can be presumed to know, and whether it is certain and indisputable.

12. EVIDENCE ⇨1—JUDICIAL NOTICE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

There is no error or impropriety in requiring evidence as to a fact, even though it be a matter of judicial cognizance.

13. EVIDENCE ⇨10(1) — JUDICIAL NOTICE—CHARACTER OF STREET.

In an action being tried by superior court of city and county of San Francisco, relating to an automobile accident on Mission street, between Twentieth and Twenty-Second streets, the court will take judicial notice that such portion of Mission street is a business district; its character as a business street being well known to people of San Francisco.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Stella Varcoe, substituted for J. J. Varcoe, deceased, against Cuyler Lee and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Redding, Boalt & Pier and John T. Ryan, all of San Francisco (Joseph D. Redding, and Fletcher G. Flaherty, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Marcel E. Cerf, C. H. Sooy, and H. W. Glensor, all of San Francisco, and U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. (William F. Herrin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Wm. P. Mealey, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, George Lull, City Atty., and Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, amici curiae.

John W. Stetson, of Oakland, for California State Automobile Ass'n.

David R. Faries and Ivan Kelso, both of Los Angeles, for Auto Club of Southern California.

OLNEY, J. This is an action by a father to recover damages suffered through the death of his child, resulting from her being run over by an automobile of the defendant Lee, driven at the time by the other defendant, Nichols, the chauffeur of Lee. The automobile was going south on Mission street in San Francisco, and was approaching the crossing of Twenty-First street, when the child, in an endeavor to cross the street, was run over and killed. The cause was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict of $5,000 for the plaintiff. From the judgment upon this verdict, the defendants appeal.

The alleged negligence, upon which plaintiff's right to recover is predicated, consisted in the speed at which it is claimed the automobile was proceeding. In the opening brief for the appellants it was contended, first, that the evidence demonstrated that the automobile was not proceeding at a negligent rate of speed; second, that the child was guilty of contributory negligence; and, third, that the amount of damages is excessive. None of these contentions requires particular consideration.

[1] The contention that the evidence demonstrated that the machine was not traveling at a negligent rate of speed is based on testimony that it was brought to a check stop 10 feet after it struck the child, and that a machine of the weight of that involved could not be brought to a stop in 10 feet if it were proceeding more than 10 miles an hour. On the other hand, there was testimony that the machine was going at a high rate of speed, from 30 to 40 miles an hour. It cannot be said that the testimony relied on demonstrates a speed of 10 miles or less, so that the verdict of the jury to the contrary must be set aside, assuming that a speed of 10 miles an hour could not under the circumstances of the case be considered negligence. The jury may well have disbelieved, either that the car came to a stop in 10 feet, or that it could not be stopped within that distance if traveling more than 10 miles an hour, or it may have disbelieved both propositions.

[2] The claim that the child was guilty of contributory negligence is based on the fact that she ran across the street, instead of walking, and was looking the other way when she got in front of the car. There was testimony that she was seen waiting on the left-hand side of the street, with relation to the chauffeur, for some wagons and a street car going north to pass, and that as soon as they passed she started to run across the street. Not improbably she ran across, thinking it the safest way to get across. Certainly there is nothing to justify taking from the jury the question as to whether or not her conduct amounted to contributory negligence, particularly in view of her youth.

[3,4] As to the claim that the verdict of $5,000 is excessive, "our power over excessive damages exists only when the facts are such that the excess appears as a matter of law, or is such as to suggest at first blush, passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury." Bond v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 270, 286, 113 Pac. 366, 373 (48 L. R. A. [N. S.] 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50). The present case hardly comes within this rule.

In appellants' reply brief a further question is raised for the first time. As we have stated, the claim of negligence is based upon the speed at which the machine was going. On this point the testimony was sharply conflicting. The plaintiff offered, and the court over the objection of the defendants admitted, a copy of the San Francisco traffic ordinance specifically providing that Mission street between certain limits, which include the point of accident, is a heavily traveled street and the speed of vehicles shall not exceed 15 miles an hour. When he came to charge the jury, the trial judge instructed them that, if they found that the defendant Nichols was running the automobile along Mission street at the time of the accident at a greater speed than 15 miles an hour, he was violating the city ordinance, and also the state Motor Vehicle Act, and that such speed was negligence in itself. The trial judge then read to the jury the portion of subdivision "b" of section 22 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1913, p. 639), which provides that it shall be unlawful to operate a motor "in the business district" of any incorporated city or town at a greater speed than 15 miles an hour, and defines (see section 1) a business district as "territory * * * contiguous to a public highway, which is at that point mainly built up with structures devoted to business." Having read this definition, the court proceeded with its charge as follows:

"That is the situation on Mission street between Twentieth and Twenty-Second streets, where this accident happened, so that is a business district and the maximum legal rate of speed on that street at the time of the happening of this accident was 15 miles an hour."

In connection with the admission in evidence of the ordinance mentioned, and the giving of the foregoing instructions, it is contended by appellant, first, that the state law superseded the municipal ordinance and rendered the latter inapplicable; and, second, that the instruction that Mission street at the point in question was a business district and therefore the maximum legal speed there was 15 miles an hour was a charge as to a question of fact and an invasion of the province of the jury.

On the first point, as to whether or not the state law superseded and rendered inoperative the city ordinance, elaborate briefs have been filed by third parties interested in the question so presented. By reason, however, of our views upon the second point we need not decide it. It is manifest that the jury was not concerned with the reason why a speed in excess of 15 miles an hour was illegal. They were concerned only with the proposition that it was in truth illegal. If it were, they were not misled in the discharge of their function, no matter how erroneous the reason given may have been.

[5] The situation is that either the city ordinance or the state law applies, or both. If the ordinance applies, either alone or concurrently with the state law, no question arises, for the provisions of the ordinance specifically cover the place of accident. If it does not apply, but the state law does exclusively, and under the latter's provisions a speed at the point of accident in excess of 15 miles an hour was illegal, there was still no prejudicial error. We are brought, therefore, to the second point, that the trial judge erred in charging the jury that the location of the accident was in "a business district" as those words are defined in the state act, with the consequent result that 15 miles an hour was the maximum legal speed.

So far as the record itself goes, there is little to show what the character of Mission street between Twentieth and Twenty-Second streets is. The defendant Nichols himself refers to it in his testimony as part of the "downtown district," undoubtedly meaning thereby part of the business district of the city. The evidence shows incidentally that at the scene of the accident there was a drug store, a barber shop, a haberdashery, and a saloon. If there had been any issue or question as to the character of the district, the record in this meager condition would not justify the taking of the question from the jury, as was undoubtedly done by the instruction complained of.

[6] The actual fact of the matter is, however, that Mission street, between Twentieth and Twenty-Second streets, is a business district, within the definition of the Motor Vehicle Act, beyond any possibility of question. It has been such for years. Not only this, but its character is known as a matter of common knowledge by any one at all familiar with San Francisco. Mission street, from its downtown beginning at the water front to and beyond the district of the city known as the Mission, is second in importance and prominence as a business street only to Market street. The probabilities are that every person in the courtroom at the trial, including judge, jury, counsel, witnesses, parties, and officers of the court, knew perfectly well what the character of the location was. It was not a matter about which there could be any dispute or question. If the court had left the matter to the determination of the jury, and they for some inconceivable reason had found that it was not a business district, it would have been the duty of the court to set aside the verdict. We are asked now to reverse the judgment, because the court assumed, without submitting to the jury, what could not be disputed, and what he and practically every resident in the county for which the court was sitting knew to be a fact. If error there was, it is clear that, upon the actual fact, there was no prejudice to the defendants.

It would have been much better if counsel for the plaintiff or the trial judge himself had inquired of defendants' counsel, before the case went to the jury, whether there was any dispute as to the locality being a business district within the meaning of the state law. There could have been but one reasonable answer, and, if any other were given, the matter could have been easily settled beyond any possibility of question. But this was not done, and we are now confronted by the question whether either this court or the trial court can take judicial notice of the real fact.

[7] An appellate court can properly take judicial notice of any matter of which the court of original jurisdiction may properly take notice. Pennington v. Gibson, 16 How. 65, 14 L. Ed. 847; Salt Lake City v. Robinson, 39 Utah, 260, 116 Pac. 442, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 610, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 61; 15 Ruling Case Law, 1063.

In fact, a particularly salutary use of the principle of judicial notice is to sustain on appeal, a judgment clearly in favor of the right party, but as to which there is in the evidence an omission of some necessary fact which is yet indisputable and a matter of common knowledge, and was probably assumed without strict proof for that very reason. Campbell v. Wood, 116 Mo. 196, 22 S. W. 796.

The question, therefore, is: Was the superior court for the city and county of San Francisco, whose judge and talesmen were necessarily residents of the city, entitled to take judicial notice of the character of one of the most important and best-known streets in the city? If it were, the court was authorized to charge the jury as it did. Section 2102, Code Civ. Proc.

[8] It should perhaps be noted that the fact that the trial judge knew what the actual fact was, and that it was indisputable, would not of itself justify him in recognizing it. Nor would the fact that the character of the street was a matter of common knowledge and notoriety justify him in taking the question from the jury, if there were any possibility of dispute as to whether or not that character was such as to constitute it a business district within the definition of the statute applicable. If such question could exist, the fact involved—whether the well-known character of the street was sufficient to make it a business district—was one for determination by the jury. But we have in this case a combination of the two circumstances. In the first place, the fact is indisputable and beyond question. In the second place, it is a matter of common knowledge throughout the jurisdiction in and for which the court is sitting.

[9] A consideration of the reasons underlying the matter of judicial notice and its fundamental principles leaves, we believe, but little doubt as to its applicability here. Judicial notice is a judicial short cut, a doing away, in the case of evidence, with the formal necessity for evidence, because there is no real necessity for it. So far as matters of common knowledge are concerned, it is saying there is no need of formally offering evidence of those things, because practically every one knows them in advance, and there can be no question about them. The rule in this respect is well stated in 15 R. C. L. 1057, as follows:

"It may be stated generally with regard to the question as to what matters are properly of judicial cognizance that, while the power of judicial notice is to be exercised with caution, courts should take notice of whatever is or ought to be generally known, within the limits of their jurisdiction, for justice does not require that courts profess to be more ignorant than the rest of mankind. This rule enumerates three material requisites: (1) The matter of which a court will take judicial notice must be a matter of common and general knowledge. The fact that the belief is not universal, however, is not controlling, for there is scarcely any belief that is accepted by every one. Courts take judicial notice of those things which are common knowledge to the majority of mankind, or to those persons familiar with the particular matter in question. But matters of which courts have judicial knowledge are uniform and fixed, and do not depend upon uncertain testimony; as soon as a circumstance becomes disputable, it ceases to fall under the head of common knowledge, and so will not be judicially recognized. (2) A matter properly a subject of judicial notice must be 'known'; that is, well established and authoritatively settled, not doubtful or uncertain. In every instance the test is whether sufficient notoriety attaches to the fact involved as to make it safe and proper to assume its existence without proof. In harmony with that view it has been said that courts must 'judicially recognize whatever has the requisite certainty and notoriety in every field of knowledge, in every walk of practical life.' (3) A matter, to be within judicial cognizance, must be known 'within the limits of the jurisdiction of the court.'"

The three requirements so mentioned—that the matter be one of common and general knowledge, that it be well established and authoritatively settled, be practically indisputable, and that this common, general, and certain knowledge exist in the particular jurisdiction—all are requirements dictated by the reason and purpose of the rule, which is to obviate the formal necessity for proof when the matter does not require proof.

[10] It is truly said that the power of judicial notice is, as to matters claimed to be matters of general knowledge, one to be used with caution. If there is any doubt whatever, either as to the fact itself or as to its being a matter of common knowledge, evidence should be required; but, if the court is of the certain opinion that these requirements exist, there can properly be no hesitation. In such a case there is, on the one hand, no danger of a wrong conclusion as to the fact—and such danger is the reason for the caution in dispensing with the evidence—and, on the other hand, purely formal and useless proceedings will be avoided.

Little assistance can be had by a search of the authorities for exactly similar cases. The one perhaps nearest to it that we have found is State v. Ruth, 14 Mo. App. 226. What may be a proper subject of judicial notice at one time or place may not be at another. It would be wholly unreasonable to require proof, if the fact became material, as to the general location in the city of San Francisco of its city hall before a judge and jury made up of residents of that city and actually sitting in the building. But before a judge and jury in another county proof should be made. The difference lies in the fact being one of common knowledge in one jurisdiction and not in the other. Similarly it has been held repeatedly that courts will judicially notice the general doctrines of any religious denomination prevalent within its jurisdiction, and yet it was held by an Ohio court, and properly held, in the early days of Christian Science, that notice would not be taken of the doctrines of that sect. Evans v. State, 9 Ohio St. C. Pl. Dec. 222, 6 Ohio N. P. 129. Now that the sect has grown to large numbers, and its general doctrines are a matter of common knowledge, it is as proper to notice them as to notice those of older denominations. As is well said by Wigmore (4 Wigmore on Ev. § 2580):

"Applying the general principle (ante, section 2565), especially in regard to the element of notoriety, courts are found noticing, from time to time, a varied array of unquestionable facts, ranging throughout the data of commerce, industry, history, and natural science. It is unprofitable, as well as impracticable, to seek to connect them by generalities and distinctions; for the notoriety of a truth varies much with differences of period and of place. It is even erroneous, in many, if not in most instances, to regard them as precedents. It is the spirit and example of the rulings, rather than their precise tenor, that is to be useful in guidance."

[11, 12] The test, therefore, in any particular case where it is sought to avoid or excuse the production of evidence because the fact to be proven is one of general knowledge and notoriety, is: (1) Is the fact one of common, everyday knowledge in that jurisdiction, which every one of average intelligence and knowledge of things about him can be presumed to know? and (2) is it certain and indisputable? If it is, it is a proper case for dispensing with evidence, for its production cannot add or aid. On the other hand, we may well repeat, if there is any reasonable question whatever as to either point, proof should be required. Only so can the danger involved in dispensing with proof be avoided. Even if the matter be one of judicial cognizance, there is still no error or impropriety in requiring evidence.

[13] Applying this test to the facts of the case, the matter is not in doubt. The character of Mission street is as well known to San Franciscans as the character of Spring street to residents of Los Angeles, or of State street to residents of Chicago, or of Forty-Second street to residents of New York, or of F street to residents of Washington. It is a matter of their everyday common information and experience, and one about which there can be no dispute.

The conclusion follows that the charge of the trial court that Mission street, between Twentieth and Twenty-Second streets, was a business district, was not error. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; MELVIN, J.; WILBUR, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment, and also in the opinion, except upon the question of judicial notice, a determination of which question appears to be considered by the majority opinion as essential to a conclusion that the trial court did not err in instructing the jury that Mission street, at Twenty-First street, was a "business district," within the meaning of the provision of the Motor Vehicle Act limiting speed in such a district to not exceeding 15 miles an hour. I am not satisfied that the opinion does not carry the doctrine of judicial notice to an unwarranted extent. It seems to me, after a careful consideration of the record, that the instruction referred to may fairly be upheld upon the theory that there was no question in the trial court as to the place of the accident being within such a district, and that this was something practically conceded on all hands. Certainly every scrap of evidence tending to throw any light whatever on the matter so tended to show, and the trial court apparently took the matter as granted. No complaint whatever was made as to these instructions until the closing brief of appellants was filed in this court. I do not think they should now be held erroneous.

LARIQUE v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2947.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 5, 1919. Rehearing Denied May 5, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR  609—FURTHER TRANSCRIPT—TIMELY DEMAND AND SHOWING.

Where petitioner's demand upon reporter for further transcript was not made until after trial judge had regularly allowed and settled transcript, and demand upon judge for allowance and settlement of further reporter's transcript was not made until after certified transcript had been filed in Supreme Court, petitioner, without any special showing, is not entitled to settlement of an additional statement based upon reporter's certificate; the trial court's authority to settle transcript having been exhausted.

Application by John Lapique for a writ of mandate to compel L. H. Valentine, Judge of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, to certify to the correctness of a reporter's transcript. Proceeding dismissed.

John Lapique, of Orange, in pro. per.
H. L. Dunnigan, Haas & Dunnigan, and J. J. Wilson, all of Los Angeles, for respondents

CONREY, P. J. Application by John Lapique for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent judge to certify to the correctness of a reporter's transcript made pursuant to the demand of said Lapique, against whom judgment had been entered in an action wherein he was defendant, from which judgment he has an appeal pending in the Supreme Court. After alternative writ issued and an answer filed by the respondents, this matter has been submitted upon evidence taken by this court.

The judgment was entered on the 18th day of December, 1917. Within 10 days thereafter, Lapique served and filed his notice of intention to move for a new trial, and filed his notice to the clerk requesting a reporter's transcript.

The petition herein alleges that the court reporter made a transcript and certified to the truth and correctness thereof; that thereafter, on July 2, 1918, petitioner believed said transcript to be full, true, and correct, and that on that day respondent judge, who tried the case, made an order settling and allowing said transcript as a part of the record, but that said order was made without notice having been given as required by section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure; that on or about August 1, 1918, petitioner found that said reporter's transcript was defective, and on August 15, 1918, he demanded of the reporter a further transcript, in response to which the reporter did, on the 29th day of August, 1918, certify a further reporter's transcript; that on August 30, 1918, a notice was served on plaintiffs' attorneys and filed, stating that said reporter's transcript would be presented for allowance and settlement before the court on the 4th day of September, 1918; that on the 4th day of September the matter was continued until the 5th of September, 1918, and on the 5th of September was continued until the 6th day of that month; that at the hearings thereof Haas & Dunnigan, attorneys for the plaintiffs, did not appear; that on the 6th day of September, 1918, the trial judge refused to certify to the truth and correctness of said reporter's transcript on the grounds, "first, that the order appealed from is not an appealable order, and, second, that the transcript is not complete in that it does not set forth the title of the court and cause"; that said reporter's transcript is a full, fair, and correct transcript of the various proceedings described in the demand for transcript.

The evidence received herein shows that, as stated in the petition, an order of settlement was made by the judge on July 2, 1918, and that the same was made without notice; that on the 3d day of July, 1918, Lapique filed in the superior court an affidavit setting forth the fact that said order of July 2, 1918, had been made without notice, and thereupon an order was made, which was duly served upon the plaintiffs' attorneys, requiring them to appear before the court on the 6th day of August, 1918, at 9:30 a. m., to show cause why the reporter's transcript, "settled and allowed by the trial court without notice on the 2d day of July, 1918, should not be allowed to stand, settled and allowed by the trial court on July 2, 1918," in said action; that at the time specified in said action to show cause the matter was continued to Tuesday, August 13, 1918, at 9:30 a. m. The minutes of the court for

August 13th showed that at the time to which said matter had been continued John Lapique appeared in court in propria persona, plaintiffs' attorneys not appearing, and "order to show cause granted by the court [Judge Valentine], and reporter's transcript settled and allowed by the court." Under that date a statement of such settlement and allowance, signed by the judge, appears at the end of the transcript. The evidence herein further shows that the reporter's transcript, certified, settled, and allowed as above stated, was filed in the Supreme Court on the 23d day of August, 1918. (Supreme Court No. L. A. 5837.)

It thus appears that petitioner's demand upon the reporter for a further transcript of the proceedings in question, which demand he alleges that he made on the 15th day of August, 1918, was not made until after the trial judge, after due notice and on request of the petitioner, had regularly allowed and settled the transcript which had been duly and regularly certified by the reporter, and that petitioner's demand upon the lower court and the judge thereof for allowance and settlement of such "further reporter's transcript" was not made until after the original duly certified transcript had been filed in the Supreme Court, where the appeal then was and now is pending.

The court's duty, as well as its authority, to settle a transcript, had been exhausted. If the order of settlement was made through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect of the party who demanded the transcript, it may be that, upon application made as required by section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, he might have been relieved from such order. No such application appears to have been made. Petitioner seems to have relied upon the mistaken theory that, without any special showing of reasons for relief in the matter, he was entitled in the ordinary course of procedure to demand the settlement of an additional statement based upon the reporter's certificate to the correctness of a document containing matter additional to that contained in the settled transcript.

Petitioner's contentions herein are without merit, and the proceeding is dismissed.

CUNEO v. CUNEO. (Civ. 2776.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. April 4, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE $\S$ 152 — FINALITY OF JUDGMENT—ENTRY IN DIVORCE SUIT.

In divorce suit entry upon minutes of court reading: "Plaintiff's prayer for a divorce is denied. Defendant's prayer for divorce is denied"—without the making and filing of findings upon issues tendered by the pleadings, and without such findings having been waived, is not final judgment.

2. JUDGMENT $\S$ 256(1)—FINDINGS TO SUPPORT—NECESSITY.

Where issues are tendered by the pleadings and findings thereon are not waived by the parties, there can be no rendition of judgment until such findings are made and filed with the clerk.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 130 — DECISIONS APPEALABLE—ORDER AS FINAL JUDGMENT.

Order denying motion for execution for alimony, made as court's entry upon minutes reading: "Plaintiff's prayer for a divorce is denied. Defendant's prayer for divorce is denied"—where findings upon the issues tendered by the pleadings were not waived by the parties and were not made and filed with the clerk, is not appealable; not being an order made after final judgment under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963, inasmuch as such entry is not a final judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Anna Cuneo against John Cuneo. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for an order directing clerk to issue an execution for sum claimed to be due plaintiff as alimony, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Leon E. Prescott, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Joseph J. Bullock, of Redwood City, and Phil. J. Strubel, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. In this action for divorce an order was made shortly after the filing of the complaint, requiring the defendant to pay to plaintiff's attorneys a certain sum on account of counsel fees, and further providing that defendant "pay forthwith to plaintiff personally the sum of $50 per month for the support and maintenance of the plaintiff pending this action, and the same sum every month thereafter pending this action, until the further order of this court." The action was subsequently brought to trial upon plaintiff's complaint, the allegations of which were denied by defendant's answer, and upon the cross-complaint of defendant; each party to the action seeking a decree of divorce against the other. On November 23, 1917, the following order was entered in the minutes of the court:

"This cause having been heretofore submitted to the court for consideration and decision, and now the court having considered the same and being fully advised herein, it renders the following decision: Plaintiff's prayer for a divorce is denied. Defendant's prayer for a divorce is denied."

On February 28, 1918, plaintiff made a motion for an order directing the clerk of the lower court to issue an execution in said action in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant for the sum of $150, claimed to be due her as alimony for three months, commencing December 16, 1917, and ending March 15, 1918. On March 18, 1918, the court made an order denying the said motion of plaintiff, from which latter order plaintiff attempts to prosecute this appeal.

[1-3] The entry in the minutes of the court on November 23, 1917, is not a final judgment in the action. Issues were tendered by the pleadings, and there is no showing that findings were waived. Consequently there could have been no rendition of judgment until such findings were made and filed with the clerk. Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 488, 26 Pac. 1074, 23 Am. St. Rep. 491. The record does not disclose that this has been done. The order from which this appeal is attempted to be taken is therefore not an order made after final judgment, and is not an appealable order under section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appeal is dismissed.

CLOVIS FRUIT CO. v. CALIFORNIA WINE ASS'N. (Civ. 2648.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 10, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 9, 1919.)

SALES $\S$ 106 — NOTICE OF CANCELLATION—REASONABLE TIME.

In suit for defendant's alleged breach of contracts to purchase wine grapes raised by plaintiff's assignors, plaintiff's claim that defendant did not seasonably exercise his option to cancel contracts after brandy tax was raised was untenable in absence of showing of loss or prejudice to plaintiff by such delay.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the Clovis Fruit Company, a corporation, against the California Wine Association, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco (Alfred Sutro, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Short & Sutherland, of Fresno, and Carl E. Lindsey, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. Plaintiff, as assignor of 22 claims arising under as many separate contracts made by defendant with plaintiff's assignors for the purchase of grapes, brought suit against defendant for the alleged breach of the contracts. Plaintiff had judgment for $4,932.32, and defendant appeals.

The complaint consists of 22 separate causes of action. For the purposes of this appeal they may be said to be identical, as they grow out of similar action taken by defendant with regard to each of said contracts. The substance of each cause of action, of the answers thereto, and of the findings on the issues, is, it is conceded, correctly stated in defendant's opening brief, as follows: On a certain date plaintiff's respective assignor, mentioned in the particular cause of action, made an agreement with the defendant for the sale of the crops of wine grapes over a period of years at a fixed price per ton, grown on the respective vineyard of each assignor. In the vintage season of 1915, between August 15th and November 15th of that year, each respective assignor, it is alleged, raised and produced a certain tonnage of wine grapes, which he offered to deliver to defendant, but defendant refused to receive or to pay for the same. Each agreement is alleged to have been in full force and effect, and never to have been canceled, terminated, or ended. An assignment of each respective agreement to the plaintiff is alleged, and it is then alleged that plaintiff, by reason of the premises stated in each cause of action, has been damaged in a certain sum.

The answers to the causes of action may also, for the purpose of this appeal, be said to be identical. So far as material here the issues raised by the answer may be stated as follows: Defendant denied that any assignor offered to deliver any of the 1915 grapes to it, or that, in violation of the agreement, it refused to receive or pay for the grapes. It also denied that the agreement was in full force and effect, or that it had not been canceled or terminated or ended.

As a further and separate defense it averred that in each contract sued on it is provided that, should the United States laws be so modified that the tax on brandy used in fortifying should be greater than 6 cents per proof gallon, then the defendant might, at its option, cancel the contract by giving written notice of such cancellation to each respective assignor of plaintiff; that by the terms of the act of Congress of October 22, 1914, the United States laws were so modified that the tax on brandy used in fortifying was increased from 6 cents per proof gallon to 55 cents per proof gallon, and that on or about April 21, 1915, the commissioner of internal revenue of the United States ruled that on and after January 1, 1916, the tax on brandy used in fortifying would be increased to $1.10 per proof gallon, and that thereupon, and prior to the alleged tender of any grapes by each respective assignor of the plaintiff to the defendant, and prior to knowledge by the defendant of any assignment of the contract to plaintiff, defendant canceled or terminated the contract of each assignor by giving each assignor written notice of cancellation, and that each assignor accepted the notice, and thereafter treated the contract as canceled or terminated and of no force or effect.

The trial was by the court without a jury. The court found for the plaintiff, and made findings in accordance with the allegations of the complaint; it also found the averments of the separate and special defense of the answer to be true, except that it found that the defendant did not give notice of cancellation of the contracts within a reasonable time after the act of October 22, 1914, was passed, and that the contracts were therefore not canceled, but were in full force and effect.

At the trial plaintiff offered no evidence to sustain its allegation of a tender and offer of performance, taking the position that such evidence was unnecessary because of the fact that it appears from the matter set forth in defendant's further and separate defense that such an offer would have been futile. Against the objection of the defendant the court accepted this view, and at the conclusion of plaintiff's case denied defendant's motion for nonsuit. Thereupon in support of the allegations of its separate defense the defendant introduced evidence, from which it appeared that the plaintiff's various assignors had been given written notice, under date of June 1, 1915, of the cancellation of the contract.

It is conceded that an averment of performance will not be supported by proof of a legal excuse for nonperformance. Estate of Warner, 158 Cal. 441, 445, 111 Pac. 352. It is also conceded to be a general rule of pleading that a defendant may plead inconsistent defenses, and that where there are several answers an admission made in one is not available to destroy the efficacy of the averments or denials of the others. Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 308, 46 Pac. 1076. These fundamental rules of pleading were ignored in the trial of this case, but the consequence of the failure to observe them, and several minor questions involving the correctness of rulings upon matters of evidence, need not be here considered, in view of the conclusion we have reached on a question which goes to the merits of the case.

The principal question raised by the appeal is whether or not the defendant within a reasonable time exercised its option to cancel the contracts after the concurrence of the event giving it the right to do so. On this phase of the case the evidence is without conflict. Summarized, it shows that each of the contracts in question provided that if the tax on brandy used in fortifying wines should be increased from 6 cents a gallon the defendant might at its option terminate the contract by giving notice to that effect; that by an act of Congress of October 22, 1914, the tax on such brandy was increased from 6 to 55 cents per proof gallon; that on June 1, 1915, defendant gave written notice of cancellation of the contract. The contracts called for deliveries of grapes for the years from 1913 to 1917. It was agreed that the vintage season each year is from August 15th to November 15th, from which it is evident that no delivery of grapes could be made before the first-mentioned date.

What is a reasonable time in any case depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. Smith v. Pelton Water Wheel Co., 151 Cal. 394, 90 Pac. 934; Salmon Box Co. v. Helena Box Co., 147 Fed. 408, 77 C. C. A. 586. In the case of Colfax County v. Butler County, 83 Neb. 803, 120 N. W. 444, it is held that a reasonable time, when no time is specified, is a question of law, and depends upon the subject-matter and the situation of the parties.

Time, in the abstract, is not essential. It is material so far only as, when associated with other circumstances, it may produce injury or unjust consequences. The great object of the rule of law on this subject is to prevent injury or wrong; and the main question in each case should be, Is there any just cause, because of delay, to object to the cancellation? Hogan v. Tucker, 116 Ky. 918, 77 S. W. 197, 199. Here, while the notice of cancellation was given about 7 months after the occurrence of the event giving rise to the right of cancellation, it was yet 2½ months before the commencement of the vintage or crushing season and about 5 months before its close; and there is no evidence in the record to show that any of plaintiff's assignors were prejudiced because the notice was not sooner given. No witness testified that had earlier notice been given the assignors of plaintiff could have disposed of their grapes to better advantage than they actually did. Uncontradicted evidence introduced by the defendant was to the effect that according to the custom in Fresno county (the place in which these contracts were to be executed) contracts for the sale of grapes are made each year during the vintage season; and, indeed, the first witness called by the plaintiff, one of its assignors, testified that he made no attempt to sell his 1915 crop of grapes until September of that year. For aught that appears in the record the defendant may have had a very good reason for not sooner giving the notice of cancellation, which reason may have related to the mutual interest of the parties. It certainly does not appear that the delay was for any unfair purpose. But however that may be, plaintiff cannot base its claim that the notice was not timely upon a mere surmise or some possibility which has no foundation in fact. To substantiate its position that the notices were not seasonably given, plaintiff must base the same upon some competent evidence showing the assignors of plaintiff to have been injured or to have suffered loss or prejudice. This the plaintiff has not done, and the finding of the trial court that the notice of cancellation was not given within a reasonable time is not sustained by the evidence. The judgment is reversed.

SAN FRANCISCO BAR ASS'N v. McCLELLAN. (Civ. No. 2504.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 11, 1919.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT — DISBARMENT PROCEEDINGS — CONFLICTS IN EVIDENCE—RESOLVING IN FAVOR OF ACCUSED.

In a disbarment proceeding, a conflict in the evidence should be resolved in favor of accused.

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT — DUTY OF ATTORNEY—ACCOUNTING.

It is the duty of an attorney to notify his client with reasonable diligence of the collection by him of money due his client, and to promptly pay over the same upon settlement of his fee, and under no circumstances is he warranted in falsely stating that the money has not been received.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT — DISBARMENT—GROUNDS.

Conduct of accused in failing to notify his client of collection of money due client until two months after receipt of money, while blameworthy, held not to require disbarment.

Proceedings by the San Francisco Bar Association for the disbarment of Clifford McClellan, an attorney and counselor at law. Accusation dismissed.

Frank S. Brittain, Nathan Moran, and Bert Schlesinger, all of San Francisco, for bar Ass'n of San Francisco.

Edward Lande, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding instituted by the Bar Association of San Francisco for the disbarment of Clifford McClellan, an attorney and counselor at law.

The accusation contains three separate charges:

(1) That the accused misappropriated funds belonging to his client in the course of professional employment.

(2) Willful concealment and denial on his part of the moneys collected.

(3) The making of a false and fraudulent claim to a portion of the money received.

The accused denied all the charges.

[1] The evidence presented upon the first and third counts of the accusation is voluminous. Under it a conflict exists which should be resolved in favor of the accused. No useful purpose, therefore, would be subserved by narrating or closely analyzing it.

In support of the second count, however, and the one mainly relied upon for the penalty sought to be imposed, the evidence shows that the accused was employed by one Elizabeth Douglas, a widow, to collect the proceeds of an insurance policy on the life of her deceased husband. Payment of the policy was at first refused by the insurance company, but finally the accused received a check in settlement of the claim for the sum of $1,189.75. The check was received by him on November 20, 1917, and he deposited the same in his personal bank account, but failed to advise his client that he had received payment until some two months later, when demand was made upon him for a settlement, after his client had received information that the claim had been paid. The demand was made by attorneys employed by Mrs. Douglas, and a settlement was had between them and the accused, whereupon the amount agreed upon was paid, which amount, Mrs. Douglas testified, was satisfactory to her.

[2] Accused does not deny that he failed to advise his client of the receipt of the money, but he seeks to justify his tardiness in turning over the amount on the ground that his accounts with her were confused, and that he was ignorant of the exact amount to which he was entitled, and that the stress of business prevented him from informing himself upon the subject. There is also testimony to the effect that the accused informed his client that he had not collected the money at a time when it was in his possession. This the accused denies. It is true that the accused was entitled to a portion of the fund collected as compensation for his services, the amount of which had not been definitely fixed and determined. While the retention of this portion was justified it did not free him from his duty of advising his client that the collection had been made. It is the plain duty of an attorney to notify his client with reasonable diligence of the collection by him of money due his client, and to promptly pay over the same upon the settlement of his fee, and under no circumstances is he warranted in falsely stating that the money has not been received.

[3] The conduct of the accused is blameworthy for its laxity in this particular; yet we do not feel from a careful review of the evidence that it calls for the drastic measurement of disbarment. His delay, however, as shown by the evidence, was a gross neglect to fulfill his obligation, and constituted unprofessional conduct, which calls for the censure of this court. It is to be hoped that the bringing of these proceedings by the Bar Association of San Francisco, prompted by a high sense of duty, may prove a warning to the accused, and cause him to so acquit himself in the future as to avoid the slightest appearance of infidelity to professional duty.

The accusation is dismissed.

DAMIANO v. BUNTING et al. (Civ. 2652.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 4, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 2, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS — 239 — LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDER—TORTS.

A cause of action exists against the stockholder of a corporation under the laws of this state upon a corporate liability arising out of a tort.

2. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL — 57 — SURVIVAL OF STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—SURVIVING DEATH OF STOCKHOLDER.

A stockholder's liability for a corporate tort survives the death of the stockholder.

3. CORPORATIONS — 264 — ACTION AGAINST REPRESENTATIVES OF DECEASED STOCKHOLDERS—LIMITATIONS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 359, which limits the time of beginning actions against the directors and stockholders of corporations to recover a penalty to three years after liability accrues, and provides that no other section of the title shall be applicable to its provisions, section 353, as to suits against personal representatives of decedents on causes of action which survive within year after beginning of administration, has no application.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — 70(3) — LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS FOR CORPORATE TORT—LEGISLATIVE POLICY—REVIEW BY COURT.

In an action to enforce liability for corporate tort against the representatives of a deceased stockholder, Code Civ. Proc. § 359, expressly limiting such action to three years, may not be disregarded, on the ground that the policy is unwise.

5. CORPORATIONS — 264 — ACTION AGAINST STOCKHOLDER FOR CORPORATE TORT.

An action against a stockholder for corporate tort resulting in personal injuries must be brought within three years from the time of such injuries, under Code Civ. Proc. § 359, and such time limit cannot be extended to three years after the recovery of judgment against the corporation for such injuries.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Donahue, Judge.

Action by Giuseppe Damiano against Fieda O. Bunting, as executrix of the estate of John A. Bunting, deceased, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

James A. Bacigalupi and Edmund Nelson, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas C. Huxley, of Oakland, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in defendants' favor after the order sustaining their demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend. The following are the facts of the case as shown by said complaint:

On May 13, 1913, one John A. Bunting was the owner of 180,000 shares of a total issue of 200,000 shares of a mining corporation known as the Birchfield Mining Company. On said May 13, 1913, the plaintiff was an employé of said corporation, and was injured in an accident occurring in the course of his employment. John A. Bunting died on May 1, 1916. Thereafter, and on May 17, 1916, the defendants were appointed the executors of his estate. Notice to creditors was duly ordered and published May 27, 1916. On February 27, 1917, the plaintiff herein presented his claim against said estate for the sum of $10,900.32, alleged to be due upon the proportionate statutory liability of said John A. Bunting, deceased, as a stockholder in said corporation. The claim being rejected, the plaintiff commenced this action on March 31, 1917.

To his complaint setting forth the foregoing facts the defendants demurred upon the general ground, and also upon the grounds that the cause of action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also by the provisions of section 359 of the same Code. The court sustained the defendants' said demurrer generally and without leave to amend. The judgment followed, from which the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1] Three questions are presented upon this appeal, the first being as to whether a cause of action exists against the stockholder of a corporation under the laws of this state upon a corporate liability arising out of a tort. This question has, we think, been settled in favor of the existence of such liability on the part of a stockholder for the torts of the corporation by the case of Miller & Lux

v. Kern County Land Co., 134 Cal. 586, 66 Pac. 856, and by the case of Lininger v. Botsford, 32 Cal. App. 386, 163 Pac. 63, upholding such liability.

[2] The second question which arises herein is as to whether the cause of action upon such stockholder's liability survives the death of the stockholder. This question was also determined in favor of the survival of such cause of action in the case of Lininger v. Botsford, supra, and to the reasoning and conclusions of that case we adhere.

[3] The third and final question arising herein is as to whether this action is barred by the provisions of section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure relied upon in the defendants' demurrer, and which reads as follows:

"This title does not affect actions against directors or stockholders of a corporation, to recover a penalty or forfeiture imposed, or to enforce a liability created by law; but such actions must be brought within three years after the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts upon which the penalty or forfeiture attached, or the liability was created."

The foregoing section of the Code of Civil Procedure is one of the sections embraced in chapter 4 of title 2 thereof, which relates to the time of commencing civil actions. Section 353 of the same chapter and title contains this provision:

"If a person against whom an action may be brought die before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof, and the cause of action survive, an action may be commenced against his representatives, after the expiration of that time, and within one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration."

[4] It is the contention of the appellant herein that the provision of the Code last above quoted takes his case out of the operation of the first above quoted section of the Code, and gives him an extension of the period within which he otherwise must have commenced his action, arising out of the fact of the death of John A. Bunting a few days before the three-year period of limitation would have expired. This contention, however, is answered by the case of King v. Armstrong, 9 Cal. App. 368, 99 Pac. 527, in which Mr. Justice Shaw, of the Second appellate district, quite clearly points out that section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure is so explicit in its terms expressive of the inapplicability of any of the other provisions of the title of that Code of which it is a part to actions against stockholders of corporations to enforce the liability created by law as to leave no room for any other construction. The conclusion arrived at in this case is fully enforced by the reasoning of the Supreme Court in the case of Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 34 Pac. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87, wherein the court, with direct reference to the application of section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the liability of stockholders of corporations in this state, says:

"It must be remembered that the right to pursue the stockholder at all does not exist at common law, but is solely the creature of the written law; and that it must be exercised upon the conditions and within the limits which the written law prescribes. The invocation by respondent of the clause of the state Constitution declaring the liability of stockholders of corporations does not strengthen his position; for the statement of a right in a Constitution is always subject to reasonable statutory limitations of the time within which it may be enforced, unless otherwise declared in the Constitution itself; and three years is certainly not an unreasonable period of limitation. We see, therefore, no reason for disregarding the plain language of section 359. We need not inquire into the policy of the section; but, as certificates of stock of many corporations pass frequently from hand to hand, it may well be assumed that the Legislature intended to protect temporary stockholders from the power of officers of corporations and their creditors, to indefinitely extend the enforcement of liabilities created while they happened to be holders of stock. If the policy be unwise or bad, it is for the Legislature to change it."

See, also, Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Pac. Coast St. Co., 103 Cal. 594, 37 Pac. 499.

[5] In the reply brief of appellant it is attempted to be argued that, regardless of the liability of said stockholder arising at the time of the plaintiff's injuries, he is entitled to rely upon a liability which was created by the alleged fact that appellant had in an action commenced by him against the corporation recovered a judgment for damages for his said injuries within the period of three years prior to the commencement of the instant action. It suffices to say that the cases of Hunt v. Ward and Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Pac. Coast St. Co., supra, furnish a complete answer to this contention. Judgment affirmed.

INGRAHAM v. INGRAHAM. (Civ. 2653.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 5, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE $\hookrightarrow$ 109—REFUSAL TO HAVE MATRIMONIAL INTERCOURSE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In divorce suit based on Civ. Code, § 96, as to persistent refusal to have matrimonial intercourse being desertion, plaintiff had the burden of showing that health or physical condition of defendant did not make refusal reasonably necessary.

2. DIVORCE $\hookrightarrow$ 150(2)—FINDINGS—NECESSITY.

In divorce suit based on Civ. Code, § 96, as to persistent refusal to have matrimonial intercourse being desertion, there must be a finding as to whether just cause exists for refusal.

3. DIVORCE $\hookrightarrow$ 179—OBJECTION TO COMPLAINT—AVAILABILITY ON APPEAL.

In suit for divorce, general allegation as to desertion, in the absence of a demurrer for a definite statement of facts, is not subject to the objection for the first time on appeal that it does not inform defendant that the desertion was intended to be established under the first provision of Civ. Code, § 96.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by Ida Ingraham against George A. Ingraham. Plaintiff was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce on the ground of willful desertion, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

M. L. Rawson, of San Leandro, and Geo. Ingraham, of Oakland, for appellant.

John W. Stetson and A. T. Shine, both of Oakland, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce, on the ground of willful desertion, and defendant appeals. The original complaint alleged that—

"Defendant willfully and without cause or provocation deserted and abandoned plaintiff, with intent to desert said plaintiff, and ever since said time has continued to live separate and apart from plaintiff without her consent, and against her will, and with intent to desert and abandon her, and without fault of plaintiff."

An amended and supplementary complaint was filed, setting forth the ground of desertion in the same form, and adding a second count, based on allegations of extreme cruelty. Defendant answered, denying the allegations of the complaint, and at the same time filed his cross-complaint, alleging willful desertion and extreme cruelty on the part of plaintiff.

The trial court found for the plaintiff on the ground of willful desertion alone, and decree followed. The finding as to willful desertion is couched in almost the identical language of the allegation hereinbefore quoted. Appellant attacks this finding upon the ground that the testimony introduced in the action, and on which the finding is based, is not sufficient to support the judgment or decree in that regard.

"Willful desertion is voluntary separation of one of the married parties from the other with intent to desert." Section 95, Civ. Code. Sections 96, 97, and 98 of the same Code set forth the different classes of facts which may manifest such desertion. Devoe v. Devoe, 51 Cal. 543. Section 96 is as follows:

"Persistent refusal to have reasonable matrimonial intercourse as husband and wife, when health or physical condition does not make such refusal reasonably necessary, or refusal of either party to dwell in the same house with the other party, when there is no just cause, for such refusal, is desertion."

The proof adduced at the trial of this action established the fact that the plaintiff and defendant, for several years, and up to the time of the commencement of the action, continued to live in the same house, but occupying separate rooms. The desertion complained of by the plaintiff consisted of the gradual, and finally the persistent, refusal of the defendant to have any matrimonial intercourse with the plaintiff as husband and wife. The corroboration in this regard was merely the testimony of other witnesses that the parties occupied separate bedrooms in the house, and was not of the character and degree required by the Code section relating to corroboration in divorce cases. We are not unmindful of the fact that the secrets of the bedchamber are very frequently hard to substantiate by other witnesses than the parties themselves. Nevertheless, the parties to a divorce action are not thereby relieved from the necessity of complying with the mandate of the law.

From a careful reading of the lengthy record, the trial appears to have been conducted by the parties on the theory that extreme cruelty was the real issue between them. Near the conclusion of the trial, the court gave an intimation that the finding should be on the ground of desertion, predicated on the failure of defendant to grant the marital rights that the plaintiff was entitled to. The court reached the conclusion, and so stated, that "the testimony shows no adequate cause for an entire cessation of sexual relations, and the testimony fairly shows it."

[1, 2] From our examination of the lengthy record we must disagree with the learned judge of the court below. There was no testimony, nor were any facts elicited, tending to show that the health or physical condition of the defendant did not make his refusal to have reasonable matrimonial intercourse reasonably necessary. The burden of establishing this fact rested on plaintiff. Hayes v. Hayes, 144 Cal. 625, 78 Pac. 19. There must be a finding in such cases as to whether or not just cause for such refusal exists. Mayr v. Mayr, 161 Cal. 134, 118 Pac. 546. In the instant case plaintiff did not meet the burden imposed on her, and her case was not assisted by that of defendant, whose own testimony was against such a finding.

The finding of the court in the language of the complaint is not therefore a sufficient finding on the facts attempted to be proved. Devoe v. Devoe, supra. Furthermore, had the court used appropriate language in the finding to cover the facts required by the first portion of section 96, supra, the evidence would not be sufficient to support it.

[3] The general allegation of the complaint hereinbefore set forth, in the absence of a demurrer for a definite statement of the facts, is not now subject to the objection, for the first time on this appeal, that it does not inform defendant that the desertion was intended to be established under the first provision of section 96. Sheridan v. Sheridan, 134 Cal. 88, 66 Pac. 73.

As the case must be reversed for failure of the proof to support the finding as to the desertion, we will not comment in detail on the evidence relied on by respondent to corroborate the testimony of plaintiff as to her residence. Suffice to say that we are of the opinion that it is sufficient under the liberal rule laid down in MacDonald v. MacDonald, 155 Cal. 674, 102 Pac. 927, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 45. On a retrial of the case the corroborating evidence should appear in proper order and sequence. The appellate court should not have to minutely examine the testimony of a multitude of witnesses, that it may, here and there, pick out fragments of proof, which, when pieced together, will support a finding of the trial court.

No other points made on the appeal require examination.

The judgment and decree are reversed.

LUTGE v. DUBUQUE FIRE & MARINE INS. CO. (Civ. 2716.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 15, 1919. Rehearing Denied May 14, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court June 12, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1001(2)—REVIEW—VERDICT—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.

Whatever the appellate court may think as to the preponderance of the evidence, it may not substitute its own opinion for that of the jury wherever there is a fair, reasonable ground for a difference of opinion.

2. INSURANCE — 235 — FIRE INSURANCE — CANCELLATION OF POLICY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action on fire policy, defended on ground that policy had been canceled, and involving issue of whether the receipt signed by insured upon receiving payment for small loss which had occurred some time prior to the fire in question contained words, "Said policy is hereby surrendered for cancellation," evidence held sufficient to support verdict for plaintiff.

3. NEW TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 104(1)—GROUNDS—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE.

A trial court does not abuse its discretion in refusing a new trial applied for on the ground of newly discovered evidence, where the new evidence is merely cumulative.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Richard Lutge against the Du-buque Fire & Marine Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Courtney L. Moore, Coogan & O'Connor, and Perry Evans, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thos. A. Allan and Geo. K. Ford, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment rendered against it in a suit to recover upon an insurance policy issued by defendant company covering loss by fire. The facts of the case are briefly these: The plaintiff was the owner of a building in San Francisco which was insured against fire by defendant. The policy had been in force for some years. The fire which caused the loss upon which suit is brought occurred on August 7, 1915. Prior to that time, to wit, on July 10, 1915, a small fire on the premises had occurred. The insurance company settled the claim therefor by paying the plaintiff $18, and it is claimed by the defendant that upon making this payment the policy was canceled by attaching to the draft sent to plaintiff a receipt which contained the statement, just above where plaintiff placed his signature, "Said policy is hereby surrendered for cancellation," and that Lutge by signing the receipt containing this statement consented to the cancellation of the policy. This is the one issue between the parties, and the appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the implied finding of the jury that the policy had not been canceled prior to the loss, and, further, that the trial court abused its discretion in denying to the defendant a new trial.

[1, 2] Appellant's argument upon the weight of the evidence has much force, but it is one that should properly be addressed to a jury. Whatever we may think as to the preponderance of the evidence, we may not substitute our opinion for that of the jury wherever there is a fair, reasonable ground for a difference of opinion. It is true that the claim of the appellant that the words purporting to cancel the policy were a part of the receipt at the time it was signed by the plaintiff is upheld by the testimony of the clerk in defendant's employ who prepared the draft, by the testimony of the general agent of the defendant company who signed it, and by the testimony of an insurance broker to whom it was sent by the defendant, and who in turn delivered it to plaintiff. There is the further testimony of the insurance broker to the effect that he specifically called plaintiff's attention to the fact that the insurance policy was canceled, and that plaintiff replied that he did not care. On the other hand, the plaintiff denied that the words "surrendered for cancellation" were on their receipt when he signed it, or that he had any notice of any kind that the policy was canceled, or that he consented to the cancellation in any way. There are the additional circumstances that the insurance company did not accompany its receipt alleged to have embodied the agreement for cancellation with any letter calling attention to the cancellation; that the policy was in the possession of the plaintiff at the time of the fire, and had never been surrendered, and its surrender had not been demanded by the defendant; that the defendant company had not offered, prior to the loss, to return to plaintiff the unearned premium paid upon the policy; that, after the loss occurred, plaintiff employed an insurance adjuster to present his claim, who notified the defendant of the loss and presented the preliminary proofs of loss on August 25th; that five days thereafter the defendant replied to this letter, making some technical objection to the proofs, but not intimating in any way that the policy had been canceled, and it was not until September 14th that the defendant asserted that the policy had been canceled and denied liability thereunder. We cannot, under such a condition of the evidence, hold that there was no substantial conflict in the evidence, and that the jury rendered a verdict which was unsupported by the evidence.

[3] The only other point made by appellant is that the motion of the defendant for a new trial should have been granted. The affidavits filed upon the motion are all to the effect that the printed receipt had been altered and the words "surrendered for cancellation" made a part thereof before it was signed by the plaintiff. The statements in the affidavits constituted material and valuable evidence for the defendant, but such evidence was merely cumulative, and it should have been produced upon the trial. Defendant did produce evidence upon this very question in the testimony of the clerk of the defendant company who prepared the draft, in the testimony of the general manager who signed it, and in the testimony of the broker who delivered it to the plaintiff. Defendant therefore anticipated that this would be an issue in the case, and, after the decision has been adverse to it, it may not retry the case in order to produce other and perhaps stronger evidence upon a question which was contested at the trial, when such evidence was available to the defendant at the time of the trial. A trial court does not abuse its discretion in refusing a new trial applied for on the ground of newly discovered evidence where the new evidence is merely cumulative. *People v. Selby S. & L. BRADLEY v. BRADLEY et al. (Civ. 2670.)

1. DIVORCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 245(2)—DECREE FOR ALIMONY—APPLICATION FOR MODIFICATION—MATTERS CONSIDERED.

Upon a motion to modify the alimony provisions of a final decree of divorce which has not been appealed from, only such facts as have arisen or become known to the party since its entry may be made the basis of the attack, and as to all other matters the judgment or decree is final after the period for appeal has expired.

2. DIVORCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 286—DECREE FOR ALIMONY—MODIFICATION—APPEAL.

Upon defendant's appeal from an order granted upon his motion modifying the alimony provisions of a divorce decree, the defendant cannot be granted relief by the appellate court for the reason that the conditions of the parties have changed since the entry modifying the order was made, since those matters may only be taken advantage of by being first brought to the attention of the trial court upon proper motion for modification.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Suit by Emma Bradley against Richard Bradley for divorce and alimony, in which the Bradley Company was also made a defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants moved the court for an order modifying the final decree, and from an order reducing the alimony, defendant Richard Bradley appeals. Affirmed.

Richard Bradley, in pro. per.

Charles Baer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from an order modifying a final decree of divorce between the parties hereto in so far as the provisions of said decree undertook to provide for the future maintenance of the plaintiff and respondent upon this appeal.

By the terms of the original final decree the plaintiff was granted a divorce from the defendant upon the ground of cruelty, and the defendant was directed to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $100 per month so long as she remained unmarried, and was further directed to give reasonable security for the payment of said sum. The decree recited that the defendant had, by virtue of the interlocutory decree, furnished a bond in the sum of $4,000 as and for such security, and said bond was by the final decree to remain in full force and effect. This decree was entered on October 7, 1915. On November 24, 1916, the defendant moved the court for an order modifying said final decree by the elimination therefrom of its provision respecting the plaintiff's further maintenance and support. Upon the hearing on said motion, affidavits and counter affidavits and also oral testimony pro and con were presented by the respective parties, going with much detail into the past and existing financial relations and abilities of the respective parties. These, it is almost needless to say, were strongly and decidedly in conflict as to almost every matter which was asserted or disputed therein. The trial court, having considered these, concluded to modify its former final decree by reducing the former amount of $100 to the sum of $85, to be paid monthly to plaintiff by the defendant. It is from the order making this modification that the defendant has prosecuted this appeal.

[1] In his briefs upon appeal, which the defendant has presented in propria personam, he attempts to discuss many matters which were the subject of controversy upon the main trial of the cause and which were concluded by the findings and decrees of the court therein, from which no appeal was taken. The appellant seeks to justify his attempt to reopen these matters by the claim that, the terms of the final decree as to the property rights of the parties and as to alimony being subject to future modification, these matters therein treated may always be relitigated. But this is not the rule, since upon a motion to modify a final decree of divorce in these respects which has not been appealed from it is only such facts as have arisen or become known to the party since its entry which may be made the basis of an attack upon its provisions. As to all other matters it is as final as any other final judgment or decree after the period for appeal has expired. In so far as the appellant's briefs have relation to facts arising since the entry of said final decree tending to show a change of condition in the defendant's financial ability to make the required payments, the evidence educed upon the motion for a modification of the decree was, as we have seen, in sharp conflict. The court had the parties before it, and not only read their conflicting affidavits, but both heard and saw their examination, and, having done so, saw fit to make the modification in the decree, which, in so far as it went, was in the defendant's favor. We are unable to say from the state of the record before us that the court in any way abused its discretion in the form or substance of the modifying order.

[2] The appellant finally contends that he is entitled to some measure of relief from the court for the reason that, since the entry of the modifying order herein appealed from, the court has had occasion to pass upon the merits of certain other appeals between the parties hereto involving certain aspects of their property rights and interests, and that this court should now take those matters into consideration in passing upon this appeal, but it is apparent that this cannot be done, since the matters concluded by those appeals were not before the trial court at the time its modifying order herein appealed from was made. This is not, therefore, the forum wherein the appellant may obtain relief depending upon any conclusions arrived at in those cases; for any advantage which he might derive therefrom could only be gained through a renewal of his effort to have said final decree modified in the trial court based upon such change in conditions as may have arisen or been established since the making of the present modification of said original decree.

Order affirmed.

AHLMAN v. BARBER ASPHALT PAVING CO. et al. (Civ. 1916.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 22, 1919. Rehearing Denied April 21, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court May 19, 1919.)

1. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 396(7)—FINDING OUTSIDE OF ISSUES—COMPLAINT.

In action to quiet title and to restrain issuance of bonds on plaintiff's property for street work, where complaint inferentially alleged improvement district was described so as to be capable of identification, which was not denied, finding that description of district was not sufficient to identify it or was indefinite was outside of the issues.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 219(2)—REVIEW—FINDING OF FACT NOT IN ISSUE.

Though the finding of a fact not in issue is sometimes upheld on the theory the parties have waived the point by failure to object to evidence, the rule cannot be extended to the justification of a finding in favor of a party contrary to his allegation, which allegation is not denied by his adversary.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 488, 489(5)—ASSESSMENT FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT—FAILURE TO OBJECT BEFORE CITY COUNCIL.

Appeals, by property owners assessed with the cost of a street improvement, to the city council, contemplate the correction of errors in the assessment, such as an improper charge for the cost of making it, and, if a property owner fails to avail himself of the privilege accorded him, he will be precluded thereafter from urging the objection, the presumption being that if he had objected the error would have been corrected.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 513(3)—STREET IMPROVEMENT—ASSESSMENT—REMEDY FOR ERROR.

If proceedings to assess the cost of a street improvement on property owners were defective, in that a lot in the improvement district was omitted from the assessment, the remedy of an owner was by appeal to the city council, whereon the owner should have specified and designated the lot or lots claimed to have been omitted.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 488, 489(5)—STREET IMPROVEMENT—ISSUANCE OF BONDS—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

Under Bond Act Feb. 27, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 33), a property owner who did not pursue the course specified in section 4 of the act, providing a simple procedure whereby the owner may prevent the issuance of any bond for the assessment on his lot, cannot complain of issuance of the bonds, which created no new liability, and merely provided for payment in installments and after a period of years.

6. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 404(2)—FINDING—CONCLUSION OF LAW.

In suit by a property owner to restrain the issuance of bonds on his property for street work in the city, the finding that no sufficient legal resolution of intention was passed was a conclusion of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; W. A. Beasley, Judge.

Action by G. T. Ahlman against the Barber Asphalt Paving Company, Louis Lightston, as treasurer of the city of San Jose, and S. J. Farrell, as superintendent of streets of the city. From judgment for plaintiff and an order denying their motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Judgment and order reversed.

William H. Johnson, of San Jose, for appellants.

Beggs & McComish, of San Jose, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an action to quiet title and to restrain the issuance of bonds upon plaintiff's property for street work in the city of San Jose. Similar actions were brought against the defendants by four other property owners. By stipulation, the actions were consolidated and tried together.

The only pleadings in the record before us are the complaint of the plaintiff, Ahlman, and an amendment thereto, and the answer of defendant the Barber Asphalt Paving Company. Respondent in his brief states that said answer was adopted by the other defendants, and we will so consider it, although there is a reference in appellants' specifications to a separate answer of the defendants Lightston and Farrell.

There is no denial in the answer of plaintiff's allegation of ownership of the property in question.

Paragraph 5 of the complaint alleges that the defendants and each of them claim some interest in or lien upon said property, but that such claims are wholly without right. The answer denies this allegation, and alleges that defendant, the Barber Asphalt Paving Company, does claim a lien upon said property, and that its claim is neither wholly nor at all without right. The court found in accordance with the allegation of the complaint.

Paragraph 6 alleges that "on April 14, 1913, the common council of the city of San Jose passed a resolution purporting to be a resolution of intention, and on April 16, 1913, the same was approved by the mayor of said city, wherein and whereby it was resolved that Market street, from San Carlos street to First street, in said city, be improved by constructing thereon a pavement consisting of two inches of asphalt," etc.; "that said resolution provided that the cost of said work should be charged against a district, and described the district, which district included the land of the plaintiff hereinbefore described, and said resolution further provided that 10-year serial bonds, bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, should be issued by the city treasurer to represent each assessment of $25 or more; that no sufficient or legal resolution of intention was ever passed for the doing of said work; that the said resolution did not sufficiently describe the work to be done, or which was done thereunder, nor did it comply with the conditions of the charter * * * or of the Vrooman act, so called, or of the said bonding act of 1893." The answer denied this allegation, and a copy of the resolution of intention was attached and made a part of the answer "for all particulars therein and thereby appearing," and there was also annexed "the notice of street work" posted and published by the superintendent of streets pursuant to said resolution of intention. The finding (III) adopted the allegation of the complaint down to and including the following: "That said resolution provided that said work should be charged against a district, and described the district," and continued: "But the description of the district as given in said resolution of intention was not sufficient to identify the same, but was indefinite, and such that it could not be located upon any particular land or lands within the city of San Jose; that said resolution purported to include the land of plaintiff herein described"; and "that no sufficient or legal resolution of intention was ever passed for the doing of said work, nor did it comply with the conditions" of the charter or of said street bonding act.

Paragraph 9 of the complaint alleged: "That on June 9, 1913, the mayor and common council passed a resolution ordering said work to be done in accordance with the plans and specifications passed and adopted * * * on February 17, 1913; that said resolution was posted from June 23 to June 27, 1913." The answer alleged that it was declared in said resolution "that the public interest and convenience required to be done the street work in said resolution and in said resolution of intention described," and a copy thereof was made a part of the answer. There was no finding of the court upon this point.

It is alleged in paragraph 10 that on June 20, 1913, the mayor and common council gave notice inviting proposals for the doing of said work, which was posted from June 23 to June 27 and not otherwise. Defendants made this notice a part of the answer, and alleged that it was "conspicuously posted near the chamber door of said mayor and common council on the 23d day of June, 1913, and was so kept posted thereafter for five consecutive days." The finding was in the language of the complaint.

Allegation 11 is that the defendant corporation put in a bid offering to do said work for certain specified prices. The answer amplified the allegation by enumerating the contents of said bid and stating that it was accompanied by a bond, etc. The finding followed the allegation of the complaint.

Paragraph 12 alleged the acceptance of said bid by the city authorities, the passage of the resolution awarding the contract to the corporation defendant, and that said company entered into a contract to do said work according to the resolution of intention and said plans and specifications. The answer went into further details and attached a copy of the notice of award. It then proceeded to set out the various steps taken by defendant preliminarily to doing the work, and alleged that it did perform the work to the satisfaction of said superintendent of streets. The finding was in the language of the complaint.

Paragraph 13 alleged that "the superintendent of streets made his warrant, diagram, and assessment whereby the land of plaintiff * * * was assessed for the sum of $951.69; that the total sum assessed upon said district contained large items, "which are not legally chargeable upon said district, or the lands embraced therein." The answer went into details concerning the preparation of the diagram and the assessment, and denied the allegation concerning illegal charges. The finding was in the language of the complaint, and as to the last portion thereof it was: "That the sum of $25.00 for making said assessment" was not legally chargeable upon the district or the lands embraced therein.

In paragraph 14 it was alleged that the assessments were not uniform or equal, which allegation was denied by the answer. As to this there was no finding.

There is no reference in the answer to the remaining allegations of the complaint. As to these the court found: That within the time allowed by law certain owners of property within the district appealed to the mayor and common council from said assessment and specified the particulars in which it was alleged to be illegal, which are fully set out; that said appeal came on for hearing, but was denied by the mayor and common council. There was then a finding that prior to August 4, 1873, the portion of Market street in question had been constructed, repaired, and fully improved and duly accepted by ordinance, which provided "that thereafter the roadway of said portion of said street should be kept open and in repair by said city, and that the expense thereof should be paid from the general fund"; and that said ordinance has never been repealed. It was then found that it was not true that said diagram showed said land to be all within said district; that it was not true that the superintendent of streets estimated benefits arising from said work upon said lots within the district nor that he assessed the total sum upon the several pieces within said district; "but it is true that no assessment district was described in said resolution of intention * * * with sufficient certainty to identify the same."

The judgment was that plaintiff was the owner in fee of the property referred to free and clear of all claims of the defendants or either of them; that neither of the defendants has any claim of lien upon said property; and that plaintiff is entitled to recover from the Barber Asphalt Company his costs, taxed at $34.65.

1. The portion of finding No. 3, "that the description of the district as given in said resolution of intention was not sufficient to identify the same, but was indefinite," etc., is attacked by appellants.

In this connection the claim of respondent is not only that the description is indefinite, but that if it may be accepted at all, and the description contained in the resolution of intention had been properly delineated upon the diagram of the assessment district, there would have been included in said district a lot of land which is shown to have been excluded from the assessment.

Said description commences as follows: "Beginning at a point 160.45 feet westerly from the intersection of the westerly line of Market street with the southerly line of San Carlos street; running thence southerly 69.19 feet to a point; thence southwesterly 150.07 feet to a point; thence southerly a distance of 214.4 feet," etc. The last two calls in the description are: "Thence southerly along the easterly line of the west branch of Market street to its intersection with the northerly line of San Carlos street; thence southwesterly to the point of beginning." In respondent's brief is a diagram of the portion of the district in question, which we here reproduce:

"The heavy solid line," says the brief, shows the boundary of the district as shown on the diagram. The dot and dash line (B-C-D-E) shows where the boundary would have run if the description found in the resolution of intention had been followed. The dotted line (E-W-X-Y-Z) shows where the line would have run if traced backwards from the point "E" in the northerly line of Auzerais avenue, which is the first point definitely fixed by a physical description. Neither of these lines coincide with the boundaries shown on the diagram.

"The plat we furnish herewith shows that there is no assessment on the parcel of land bounded on the northerly side by the southerly line of San Carlos street and a portion of the line C-D; on the westerly side by a portion of the line D-E; on the southerly side by the northerly line of lots 6 and 5; and on the easterly side by a portion of the westerly line of lot 2."

R. C. McComish, one of the attorneys for plaintiff, testified:

"I am familiar with First street, in this city, I know the course of that street. It is about 30 degrees west of north. It runs northwest and southeast and varies from north to south about 30 degrees. I am familiar with San Carlos street, in this city. It runs at right angles to First street."

Irryng L. Ryder, city engineer, testified:

"I know First street varies to the west. Take the monument line, generally speaking, throughout the town, not for this particular street, but in the neighborhood of the angle, San Carlos street, there may be a variation of from one-half of a minute out, due to the variation of the monument, the general direction of the street. The streets are, generally speaking, at right angles to one another, but not absolutely; the variation of San Carlos between First and along past Market street is not more than one minute, at any rate, from a right angle to First street."

W. E. McIntyre testified on behalf of defendants:

"I assisted in preparing the description relative to the Market street improvement. I was city engineer at the time. In connection with the map I could answer as to the intention of the description; with the map the intention and the resolution is perfectly apparent. I am familiar with the resolution of intention. Beginning the description at the intersection of the southerly line of San Carlos street with the westerly line of Market street, the description at that point had to be referenced out, * * * and then the point begins 160.45 feet westerly from that point of intersection. * * * As I understood it, not knowing the technicality of law, the descriptions in cases of law, I understood westerly would naturally mean along the street line. * * * I made the diagram that was finally used by the superintendent of streets for the purpose of making the assessment. San Carlos avenue runs 30 degrees south of west."

The foregoing constitutes all the evidence in the record as to the description of said assessment district. It must be apparent that plaintiff's showing was quite meager. His diagram was not produced at the trial, nor, of course, introduced in evidence. It simply represents his deductions from the testimony of his own attorney, and has been submitted in his brief for the inspection of this court. It is apparent that, according to the diagram which was made by the city engineer and upon which the assessment was based, the starting point of the description was located on the southerly line of San Carlos street. This point was deemed to be 160.45 feet "westerly" from the intersection of said line with the westerly line of Market street. Respondent, however, claims that this point is not due west from said intersection, but that to satisfy said call you must go across San Carlos street to obtain the starting point as indicated on his diagram.

Following strictly the language of the description, we would probably have to agree with respondent's contention, although we consider it a fair conclusion from the whole record that the intention was to select said point in the southerly line of said San Carlos street as the starting point for the description of the district. We may add, further, that if an error was made in the description as claimed by respondent, it is, at least, doubtful whether it was of a prejudicial nature.

[1, 2] But, be that as it may, the finding as to the description is outside of the issues and is contrary to the allegation of plaintiff's complaint. While the complaint does not allege that the district was described so as to be capable of identification, we deem it susceptible of no other construction. Such is the necessary implication from the averment "that said resolution described the district."

While the finding of a fact not in issue is sometimes upheld upon the theory that the parties have waived the point by their failure to object to the evidence—in other words, because they have treated the case as though it were a material finding—the rule cannot be extended to the justification of a finding in favor of a party contrary to his allegation, which allegation is not denied by his adversary.

[3] 2. Appellants attack the finding of the court that the sum of $25 "for making said assessment" was not legally chargeable upon the district. The evidence disclosed that the item "was paid to the San Jose Abstract Company for search of record on the property to ascertain the exact frontage of the lots." It is not disputed that respondent's portion of this was one dollar, and such amount was added to his assessment. Several contentions in reference to it are made by appellants, but we may refer to one only, which is that respondent cannot question the validity of the assessment on this ground, for the reason that he did not present it to the council on his appeal to that body. In said appeal he urged seven different and distinct grounds, but did not even suggest that the assessment was too large or that it contained any improper or illegal item. Of course, it must be presumed that if he had called the attention of the council to the fact that his assessment was thus excessive to the extent of one dollar, that tribunal would have relieved him from the burden of this charge. Such appeals contemplate the correction of errors like this, and it is entirely just and right that, if a property owner fails to avail himself of this privilege thus accorded him by the law, he should thereafter be precluded from urging the objection.

The point is, indeed, covered by the decision of the Supreme Court in Boyle v. Hitchcock, 66 Cal. 129, 4 Pac. 1143, where it was held that "an objection to a street assessment in San Francisco, that it included an amount, as incidental expenses, for engineering and printing, is waived by a failure to appeal to the board of supervisors."

[4] 3. Another point made in favor of the judgment is that a lot in the district was omitted from the assessment and for this reason the whole assessment was void. There is no specific finding as to this, the court basing its judgment upon the ground, substantially, that no district was created, since it could not be identified from the description. But if the point may be considered at all, it is sufficient to say that there is no such allegation in the complaint nor is there any evidence to support it. It is true that plaintiff's said diagram includes apparently a lot that was not assessed, but this diagram, as we have said, constitutes no part of the record. Besides, if such error was committed, the remedy was by appeal to the council. Buckman v. Landers, 111 Cal. 347, 43 Pac. 1125. It is true that an appeal was taken to said council and in support thereof it was alleged "that various parcels of property within the district upon which said work has been made a charge have not been assessed to pay their proportionate share of the cost of said work," but respondent should have specified and designated the lot or lots which he claimed were thus omitted. Moreover, the record does not show that he offered any evidence in support of this claim, the transcript simply showing that "the proceedings relative to the Market street paving was offered in evidence on appeal to the council; that said proceedings included all the records and proceedings in the office of the superintendent of streets connected with the assessment and were offered in evidence without argument." Manifestly, we cannot assume that any of those proceedings showed that any lot was improperly omitted from said assessment. In a matter of this kind it is as much incumbent upon the property owner to present evidence to the council to support his claim as it is to make the appeal. If he does not offer any such evidence, he must abide by the finding against him.

[5] 4. Another point urged in the briefs is as to whether the bond act of February 27, 1893 (Stat. 1893, p. 33), under which admittedly the bonds involved herein were issued, is applicable to the city of San Jose.

There is no dispute that said city is operating under a freeholders' charter (Stats. of 1897, p. 592); that this charter provides a system of street improvements and the collection of the costs thereof; that the improvement of streets is a municipal affair (Byrne v. Drain, 127 Cal. 663, 60 Pac. 433); and that municipal affairs are regulated and controlled by the charter where it provides therefor, and not by general laws passed by the Legislature (California Constitution, art.

11, § 6; Byrne v. Drain, supra). Said charter provides:

"An act of the Legislature of the state of California entitled 'An act to provide for work upon streets, lanes, alleys, courts, places, and sidewalks, and for the construction of sewers within municipalities,' approved March 18, 1885, as since amended, and as hereafter shall be amended, is hereby adopted as a part of this charter, and shall have the same force and effect as if incorporated at length herein, except where the provisions of said act conflict or are inconsistent with the provisions of this charter."

Said act of 1885, commonly known as the "Vrooman Act," as it existed at the date of the adoption of the San Jose charter, did not provide for the issuance of bonds for the payment of street assessments, although this scheme was thereafter included therein by amendment. The contention of respondent is therefore that the provisions of the Vrooman Act as they existed on March 5, 1897, became a part of said charter as though they had been expressly incorporated therein (Ramish v. Hartwell, 126 Cal. 443, 58 Pac. 920; 2 Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Construction, 787); but that subsequent amendment to said Vrooman Act cannot be so regarded, notwithstanding the said language of the charter, for the reason that the charter cannot be amended in that manner (article 11, § 8), and the provision in the statute must yield to the rule laid down in the Constitution. The conclusion is reached that said bond act as a part of the general law is no part of said charter. Byrne v. Drain, supra; Fritz v. San Francisco, 132 Cal. 373, 64 Pac. 566; Sunset Telephone Co. v. Pasadena, 161 Cal. 265, 118 Pac. 796.

It is further claimed that said bond act was not adopted as a part of the charter by virtue of the reference in section 4, c. 1, art. 8, as follows:

"If bonds are to be issued pursuant to an act of the Legislature entitled 'An act to provide a system of street improvement bonds to represent certain assessments for the cost of street work and improvement within municipalities, and also for the payment of such bonds,' approved February 27, 1893, and any assessment less in amount than $50 remains unpaid for thirty days from the date of the warrant, or for five days after final decision on appeal, as provided in section 11 of said act, the mayor and common council may, by resolution, order such assessment paid from the street contingent fund, and the superintendent of streets shall thereupon release said assessment on the books of his office as upon payment in other cases."

There is force in the contention that such reference to the bond act is not sufficient to make it a part of the charter. There is certainly no clearly expressed intention to adopt it, such as is found in reference to the Vrooman Act. Moreover, if the reference thereto be deemed sufficient to constitute it a part of the charter, then it would include said act as it stood in 1897. Said act at that time authorized the issuance of bonds only upon a finding by the council upon estimates of the engineer that the cost would be greater than $1 per front foot along each line of the street. Stat. 1893, p. 33. The complaint alleges that there was no such estimate or finding, and this was not denied. It would seem, therefore, that justification is not shown for the issuance of the bonds.

However, we are satisfied that the plaintiff is in no position to complain of the issuance of the bonds. Section 4 of said Bond Act provides a simple procedure whereby the property owner may prevent the issuance of any bond for the assessment on his lot. This course was not pursued. As stated in German S. & L. Soc. v. Ramish, 138 Cal. 126, 69 Pac. 92:

"The bond creates no new liability, and in effect provides for what by some would be regarded as more favorable payment, because in installments and after a period of years. However this may be, the lot owner cannot complain, since he may pay the assessment and prevent the issuance of the bond."

Of course, if plaintiff had made this objection, his land would still be subject to the assessment under the other provisions of the Vrooman Act.

It would be an unjust construction of the law that would permit the property owner to escape his obligation to pay for the improvement altogether, because a mistake may have been made in granting him the favor of payment for the benefit in installments. He is at least put to his election to choose which method of collection shall be pursued.

5. We have not noticed specifically the finding of the court that said Market street had been previously "constructed, repaired, and fully improved to the satisfaction of the mayor and common council," and accepted by an ordinance duly passed with a provision that it should thereafter be "kept open and in repair by said city," for the reason that respondent at the oral argument disclaimed reliance upon that finding.

[6] We may add that the finding that "no sufficient legal resolution" of intention was passed is manifestly a conclusion of law and it requires no specific consideration.

The proceedings awarding the contract were in all respects regular and there is no claim of fraud of any kind. The paving company performed its contract fully and justly; it improved and regraded the street to the satisfaction of the city; and it hardly seems right that it should lose any compensation for its services by reason of the technical objections that have been made to the assessment.

We think the judgment and order should be reversed. It is so ordered.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 2, 1919.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION — 19 — NECESSITY OF INCLOSURE—STATUTES.

In a suit to quiet title as against one who claimed by adverse possession, evidence that defendant had inclosed his land for less than five years is admissible as showing possession, Code Civ. Proc. § 325, as amended by St. 1877-78, p. 99, relating to adverse possession by one claiming title not founded on a written instrument, not requiring that the land claimed should be inclosed for five years before the commencement of the action, but merely that the land must have been occupied and taxes paid for such period.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION — 114(1) — EVIDENCE—POSSESSION BY PLAINTIFF—STATUTES.

In a suit to quiet title as against one who claimed by adverse possession, evidence held insufficient to show that plaintiff had been seised or possessed of the property within five years before the commencement of the action, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 318.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; William M. Finch, Judge.

Action by the Truckee River General Electric Company against John Anderson and others to quiet title. Decree for plaintiff as to all the land, except that of defendants Bliss and Ferris, and plaintiff appeals; the appeal being prosecuted by the United States, which during the pendency of the action had acquired plaintiff's rights. Affirmed.

John W. Preston and Ed. F. Jared, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Tuttle & Tuttle, W. J. Prewett, and Prewett & Chamberlain, all of Auburn, for respondents.

HART, J. Plaintiff commenced the action against John Anderson and a number of others to quiet its title to a tract of land in Placer county, containing about 54 acres. As to all of the defendants, except Bliss and Ferris, the action was either dismissed by plaintiff or default was taken against them for failure to appear. The decree of the court was in favor of plaintiff for all the land mentioned in the complaint, except that defendant Bliss was found to be the owner of a parcel thereof amounting to about one-fifth of an acre, and defendant Ferris of a parcel thereof amounting to about seven-eighths of an acre. It is stated in appellant's brief:

"During the pendency of the action, the rights of the plaintiff were acquired by the United States of America, and this appeal is now prosecuted by the government."

The land in controversy is situated on Lake Tahoe and along the bank of the Truckee river near its source, which, throughout the record and in the briefs is spoken of as the "mouth of the Truckee river." Each of the defendants, Bliss and Ferris, claimed title by adverse possession. The findings of the court were in their favor, and it was also found that the action against defendant Bliss was barred by the provisions of section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

There was documentary evidence received tending to prove title in the plaintiff corporation to the 54 acres, which included the two parcels awarded to Bliss and Ferris, the inception of said title being a patent from the United States to Central Pacific Railroad Company, dated April 18, 1870.

The Ferris Title.

C. B. Ferris testified that he had been living on the property claimed by him since 1896. The tract has a frontage of about 150 feet on the lake front, and it runs back from the lake about 80 feet. The witness testified:

"The improvements on the property are a house and a boathouse and a small garage on the hill above the house, and I have a wharf, a boat landing. The property that would be between the house and boathouse and wharf and the county road, I have used for a little of everything; piling wood, lumber, and whatever became necessary to put in there. * * * Below the wharf I have a toilet and outhouse. The toilet is probably 40 feet from my south-west line, and the ground in that distance I have used for a little of everything—storage, hauling boats, boat repairing."

The witness built a fence around the property, either in 1907 or 1908—he was pretty positive it was in June, 1908—and it has been maintained ever since. He stated that he had resided continuously on the property, winter and summer. It was stipulated at the trial that for the years 1908 to 1912, both inclusive, the taxes on the whole property were assessed to and paid by appellant, and that the parcel claimed by Ferris was assessed to him, and the taxes were paid by him, during the same period of time.

It is contended by appellant that, as Ferris did not occupy the land under color of title, but was a mere squatter, he would be subject to the provisions of section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and must prove that the land "has been protected by substantial inclosure," and "has been usually cultivated or improved," and it is claimed that neither of these requirements has been met.

The complaint was filed on October 3, 1912, which was four years and four months after the construction of the fence in June, 1908. Section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as adopted in 1872, read as follows:

"For the purpose of constituting an adverse possession by a person claiming title, not founded upon a written instrument, judgment, or decree, land is deemed to have been possessed and occupied in the following cases only:

"1. Where it has been protected by a substantial inclosure.

"2. Where it has been usually cultivated or improved."

In 1878 (Stats. 1877-78, p. 99), the section was amended by re-enacting the above language and adding thereto the following:

"Provided, however, that in no case shall adverse possession be considered established under the provision of any section or sections of this Code, unless it shall be shown that the land has been occupied and claimed for the period of five years continuously, and the party or persons, their predecessors and grantors, have paid all the taxes, state, county, or municipal, which have been levied and assessed upon such land."

It will be noted that, as originally enacted, there was no provision in the section that the land in dispute should have been (1) "protected by a substantial inclosure," or (2) "usually cultivated or improved" for any period of time, nor did the amendment change those terms of the section. The five-year period provided by the amendment applies only to the occupancy and claim of the land and to the payment of taxes.

In Gray v. Walker, 157 Cal. 381, 108 Pac. 278, our Supreme Court said:

"The requirement of the statute that the land be 'usually cultivated or improved' means that it should be cultivated or improved in the manner or to the extent usual in the case of similar property. Allen v. McKay, 120 Cal. 332, 52 Pac. 828. If so improved, it is not necessary that it should be either cultivated or inclosed. Daniels v. Gualala M. Co., 77 Cal. 300, 19 Pac. 519."

In the case of Allen v. McKay, above cited, it was held that an instruction was properly given which stated that "a piece of property is said to be usually improved, or improved in the usual manner, when it is improved as similar property is improved," and in the Daniels Case it was held that the right of way of a railroad company, "improved in the usual manner of railroads with reference to their roadbed and right of way," constituted adverse possession, "though the land was not protected on all sides by a substantial inclosure."

[1] Inasmuch as section 325 does not require that the land should be inclosed for the period of five years before the commencement of the action, testimony tending to show that it was inclosed for a shorter period will be admitted as a fact tending to show possession. As it was stipulated that defendant, Ferris, for a period of five years prior to the commencement of the action, had paid the taxes assessed against the parcel of land claimed by him, and in view of the testimony showing acts of possession on his part, we conclude that the judgment in his favor should be affirmed.

The Bliss Title.

In 1879 or 1880, one John Branch, a fisherman on Lake Tahoe, squatted on the property claimed by defendant Bliss, and built a house upon it. He lived upon it until 1900. In 1881, or 1882 he built a fence with cedar posts around the tract "for the purpose of having a garden; he only kept his garden two or three years; the ground was not very good"—as testified by a witness. There was also a woodshed and a boathouse built upon the property. The place was commonly known in the neighborhood as "the Johnnie Branch Place," and was reputed to be his property. Branch died some time between 1900 and 1904.

In 1900, J. H. Pomin bought from Branch the house and his boats—"everything he had, lot and house," Pomin testified. This transaction was evidenced by the following document, which was admitted in evidence over plaintiff's objection:

"This is to certify that I, John Branch, do this 3d day of August, 1900, for the sum of one hundred and fifty ($150.00) dollars, which money has been paid me this day, and in consideration of which sum, I do transfer and sell to J. H. Pomin all right, title, and interest in the houseboats, fixtures, and whatsoever property is contained in said building or buildings on lot occupied by said buildings. The said property being located at the mouth of the Truckee river (west bank). This includes each and all property of whatsoever description formerly owned by me (Jno. Branch). Witness my signature. [Signed] John Branch. Witness: H. W. Wills. Tahoe City, Cal., August 3, 1900."

On the 14th day of November, 1912, H. W. Wills went before a notary public and acknowledged that John Branch had signed and executed said instrument.

Pomin testified that, when he bought the place, he had it rented for a couple of years; that the renter came on the place in 1901 or 1902, and stayed during one summer; that it was vacant for three or four years.

W. S. Bliss, a civil engineer, made a survey of the Branch property for his brother, the defendant Bliss, in 1907 or 1908, seven or eight years before the trial. He stated that he followed the outside boundaries of the land as shown by the old fence; that there was a fence there, but he did not know whether it was all standing or not.

The defendant Duane L. Bliss, Jr., was sworn as a witness and identified a deed, executed June 13, 1907, and acknowledged

June 20, 1907, by J. H. Pomin, which conveyed to the witness:

"Lot known as the John Branch property, county of Placer, state of California, located at the mouth of the Truckee river, west bank, together with the buildings on said lot and all fixtures or contents therein."

Over the objection of the plaintiff, this deed was admitted in evidence. The witness testified:

"At the date of this deed I was living at Tahoe. I personally took possession of this property, and had an Italian carpenter that worked at the tavern. He and his family lived there; paid me $5 a month. I haven't any way of getting the exact record of when he went into that property, but some time during the summer of 1907. He was there five or six or eight months. I think the next winter after he went in, after he ceased to occupy it, William Gifford occupied it in the spring of 1908. Gifford occupied it as a tenant. He or his people continued there until this spring. [The trial was had on October 18, 1915.] It was April, I believe, when he was ejected. I brought a suit in ejectment or unlawful detainer. During the time I have been in possession of this property, either by myself or through my tenants, I have always claimed it as my own absolutely. There has never been any interruption of my occupation or possession of it. I have paid the taxes upon the property ever since I have had it."

Tax receipts, showing the payment of taxes by the witness for the years 1908 to 1912, both inclusive, were received in evidence. The assessment for the year 1908 was for "Lot Tahoe." For 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912, the assessment was for "lot at mouth of Truckee river." In the last two receipts there is also included another lot owned by Mr. Bliss. He testified that during the time covered by the first three receipts the lot in question was the only property he owned at Tahoe.

It was shown by the assessment roll of Placer county that, in 1907 and 1908, the 54 acres, together with dam and water rights, were assessed to M. F. Vandall, the grantor of the plaintiff. In the years 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912, the property was assessed to the plaintiff; reference to the dam and water rights being omitted from the assessments of 1911 and 1912. The property claimed by defendant Bliss is a portion of lot 9 of section 7, township 15 north, range 17 east, and the government plat shows that the lot contained 17.38 acres, and that it is situated in the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of said section 7. The assessment to plaintiff and its grantor in the above-named years, so far as the property in dispute is concerned covered "the fractional N. W. ¼ of the N. E. ¼ of section 7," etc.

Section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows:

"No action for the recovery of real property, or for the recovery of the possession thereof, can be maintained, unless it appear that the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor, was seized or possessed of the property in question, within five years before the commencement of the action."

A similar statute of Minnesota was considered in Seymour v. Carli, 31 Minn. 81, 16 N. W. 495, and the court said:

"The title of the owner of a freehold estate is described by the terms 'seizin,' or 'seizin in fee'; yet in a proper legal sense the holder of the legal title is not seized until he is fully invested with the possession, actual or constructive. When there is no adverse possession, the title draws to it the possession. * * * An actual possession in hostility to the true owner works a disseizin, and, if the disseizor is suffered to remain continuously in possession for the statutory period, the remedy of the former is extinguished."

[2] The facts in this case, as above detailed, show that it was impossible that plaintiff could have been "seized or possessed of the property in question, within five years before the commencement of the action," and sustain the finding of the court below that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the provisions of said section. Consequently it becomes unnecessary to consider the points raised by appellant in its attack upon the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

SPORGIS v. BUTLER. (Civ. 1944.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 14, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1011(1)—FINDINGS BY TRIAL JUDGE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Court findings on conflicting evidence will not be reviewed, unless there is no sufficient evidence or inferences that may be drawn therefrom to sustain the findings.

2. DAMAGES $\S$ 185(1)—INJURIES—EVIDENCE—FINDINGS.

In an action for personal injuries, where the claimed injuries of plaintiff were of a subjective nature, and depended for proof so entirely upon plaintiff's own testimony and statements that it became specially incumbent on the trial court to thoroughly test his credibility, accuracy, and good faith as a witness, findings as to plaintiff's injuries held not contrary to the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Karl Sporgis against Drury Butler. Judgment for plaintiff for less relief than demanded, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas H. Christiansen, of Sacramento, for appellant.

J. W. S. Butler and B. F. Van Dyke, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff as the result of his collision, while riding a bicycle, with an automobile driven by the defendant. The accident occurred in July of 1915, and the case was tried in December of 1916 by the court sitting without a jury. Findings and judgment were given in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $400; but from this judgment the plaintiff has appealed, bringing up all of the testimony under the alternative method.

In its brief plaintiff contends that the findings with respect to the extent of the plaintiff's injuries are not justified by the evidence, and that the evidence without substantial conflict shows that plaintiff sustained permanent injuries which will make him a cripple for life, and that he has been and will be in the future prevented from working at his trade as a carpenter, and that consequently the judgment awarded him by the court in the sum of $400 is wholly inadequate and insignificant, and that the court "was biased and prejudiced against the appellant, and that as a result thereof he did not have a fair trial."

[1] In this case the not unusual duty was imposed upon the trial judge of making his findings from evidence of a very conflicting character, and the only power that this court has in the premises is to determine whether or not there is in the record any sufficient evidence or any reasonable inferences that may be drawn therefrom to sustain the findings; for under the law of the land the trial tribunal to which the plaintiff chose to submit his case is the sole and exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses and of the value and effect of their evidence.

[2] In this case the claimed injuries of the plaintiff were of a subjective nature, and depended for proof so entirely upon plaintiff's own testimony and statements that it became specially incumbent upon the trial court thoroughly to test the credibility, accuracy, and good faith of the plaintiff as a witness. The following is some of the testimony which is sufficient to justify and sustain the findings in this case:

First, in regard to the violence of the collision which plaintiff claims was the cause of his "invisible" injuries: Plaintiff himself testified that, while he was riding his bicycle on the public highway, defendant came at the rate of 30 miles per hour in his automobile directly behind him, striking the bicycle and—

"throwing me off the wheel and on the front part of his machine. After I was knocked off the wheel, I was on the ground between the pavement and the wheel. The left-hand wheel of the front part of the machine caught me in the middle of the back, and the machine went about 15 feet, between 10 and 15 feet, before it stopped. The automobile dragged me under the wheel on top of the pavement for a space of 10 or 15 feet. I was lying on my face toward the pavement."

On the other hand, three disinterested witnesses on behalf of the defendant testified in substance that the car—

"did not travel at all after hitting the bicycle. Possibly it moved a foot, but not more than that. The plaintiff was not dragged one foot, probably, or I would not call it that. I would say, now, he was not dragged at all."

Second, as regards the visible and tangible evidence of the effect of the collision plaintiff testifies:

"I was visibly injured up from my wrist to the middle between the shoulder and elbow—torn off the skin part of the flesh like with a scraper about three inches in width."

Immediately after the accident, appellant, at his own request, was taken to the office of his family physician, who testified as a witness on his behalf at the trial that—

"He had an abrasion on the right arm, the forearm, extending from 2 or 3 inches above the wrist up to a little above the elbow about 2 or 3 inches wide—it looked red and raw, just took off the superficial lesion of the skin, a little deeper cut."

Also:

"A small abrasion on the left hand, back of the hand and fingers as near as I can remember. There were no abrasions or bruises on the back—no skin wound at all; without an abrasion of the skin at all. Q. Has there been any change in the condition of his back from the end of say 3 months of the time of the injury? A. No. From then on the symptoms were subjective, what we call subjective symptoms to me. Nothing that demonstrates to any one else—unless there was a tenderness to the pressure. Q. By the Court: In your opinion, is the patient suffering continual pain now at the present time? Well, that, of course, is a subjective inference. I have no reason to think that he is; that he does not feel weak and feel some sensation there. I do not know if it would be an out-and-out pain. * * * A long time after the injury I got an X-ray that shows that all the vertebrae is in line, of proper position; no evidence of bones having been broken."

Plaintiff also produced at the trial as a witness on his behalf Dr. E. W. Twitchell. In his brief counsel states that Dr. Twitchell's testimony was largely founded on hypothetical questions. But Dr. Twitchell at the trial testified that he had—

"made an examination of the plaintiff in this case, which extended for an hour or more.

* * * I made what I believe was a very thorough examination. * * * To be frank, I am not able to state exactly what is the matter with his back. I have examined him carefully, but I was not able to make any definite finding; that is, rather nothing which evidenced any anatomical changes—anything which I could demonstrate to anybody else. Q. You found no condition which indicated that there had been an injury to his back? A. No. If he had come to me, if a person, like anybody, and said nothing to me, and I examined him, after I got through, I would not be positive sure there was anything wrong with him. * * * I found no deformity; no anatomical changes; no swellings; no bruises; no scars. * * * No apparent injury to the muscles or nerves."

On behalf of the defendant, Dr. C. B. Jones testified that as the result of an examination of the appellant at the time of the trial:

"I found the man extremely well developed muscularly, so far as the movements are concerned of the body. Every joint seems to be an absolute normal movement. The spinal column is movable in every direction, twisting and bending. Bends backward and forward, both lateral movements. The muscularity of the spinal column is more or less sensitive; he holds it in tension considerably. By directing his attention to other parts, I was able to get him to relax the muscles. They relaxed the same as a normal back. Just as he was bending forward, leaning over in the position the muscles tightened up, he could not relax, did not relax himself. In moving other parts of his body, the muscles that were held tense became relaxed giving perfect movement of the spinal cord. In manipulating the spinal column by the hands, I could find no displacement of the vertebrae, the vertebral column itself. I could get extreme bending in the lumbar region and in the cervical region—those two movements of the spinal cord. * * * I watched the man as he walked, I saw no limping or lameness of any character which sustains my conclusion of my examination. * * * I found no chronic sign. This indicates there is an absence of inflammatory condition of the spinal cord."

Dr. Jones was then asked by respondent's counsel a hypothetical question framed by the plaintiff's attorney and based upon a large number of subjective symptoms narrated by the plaintiff as a part of his testimony, such as the violent and terrific character of the collision, his suffering great pain in the small of his back, his inability to walk at all for 2 weeks and his ability for the ensuing 3 months to walk only with great difficulty and with great pain, and the continued existence of this pain and weakness in the back and his inability to bend his back either forward, backward, or sidewise without severe pain and suffering, his inability to walk except very slowly and for short distances and with great pain, etc. Assuming these conditions to exist, the doctor stated that he would—

"expect him to be suffering from an injury to the back. Q. Taking now the basis of this hypothetical question, and add to it the further facts that after a physical examination of the back there were no physical signs of injury. No physical signs of any injury to the bones or muscles, what, then, would be your opinion as regarding the nature of this injury? A. From my examination I would term the condition as I find there is what we call traumatic spine. If he was hurt in a railroad accident, they would call it a railroad spine. It is an indefinite injury in which it is impossible to find any spot or definite lesion. The characteristics of these injuries are, the fact is there is a psychic condition as well as the injury. Of course we know that a man that is injured, we know that condition has something to do—there is a psychic condition—the mental attitude mixed with the injury. From my past experience, and from the history of such cases, and the authorities which we go by, we find that individuals of this character are cured, either by receiving a certain amount or sum for their injury, or else by not receiving a certain amount. When they find out they cannot, there is no further recourse for them, they will go back to work, either immediately or very shortly afterwards and be cured of their injuries."

Furthermore, Dr. Twitchell, plaintiff's own witness, testified:

"I regard him (plaintiff) as a man of what we call a neurotic type, that is rather characteristic of his nationality. He is from a province in Russia, a province, a country where I am in the habit of seeing that decided mental action is due to shocks of any sort, mental and physical shocks. Q. Is that condition such that, after this suit is over, he will improve? A. I should say that a suit of this kind would have a very profound impression upon an individual of his type—that is to say, genuinely affects his condition without any connivance on his part. Q. Is the condition such a condition that after this suit is over he is very liable to improve? A. That would depend likewise on the conditions, if the court disappointed him, he would be that sort of an individual who would be very much disappointed—gross disappointment, that sort of thing. Q. Doctor, so far as you are able to discover, there is nothing in his injury, physical condition, that would cause him to get worse as a result of his injury; it would be more the result of his disappointment? A. Yes; I should say so. I would not expect him to get worse because of the condition, on account of his physical condition, so much as I would on account of the other."

There is nothing in the record to justify or warrant appellant's charges that the plaintiff did not have a fair trial as a result of bias or prejudice on the part of the court, or that the record discloses any bias or prejudice. In asking questions of the witness, the court acted with a due and proper sense of the responsibility cast upon him by the duty of his office to try the case according to all the evidence available to him from the witnesses on the stand. There is no evidence to show that by any act or conduct of the judge the witnesses were coerced or attempted to be coerced into telling anything except what they believed to be the truth.

The findings attacked were therefore not contrary to the evidence, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

MacFARLAND v. WALKER et al.
(Civ. 2714.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 1, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡672 — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—JUDGMENT ROLL.

Where appeal is upon judgment roll alone, review is confined to facts presented by findings and admitted by pleadings.

2. DEEDS ⚡95—CONSTRUCTION.

The intent of parties to a deed should be obtained, if possible, by giving every word in deed its usual meaning.

3. DEEDS ⚡95 — CONSTRUCTION — TECHNICAL WORDS.

Under direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 1645, technical words in a deed should, unless clearly used in a different sense, be given meaning by which they would be understood by persons in profession or business to which they relate.

4. DEEDS ⚡96 — CONSTRUCTION — RECITAL.

Under direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 1068, it is only when operative words of grant are doubtful that recourse may be had to its recitals for purpose of construction.

5. DEEDS ⚡121 — CONSTRUCTION — "GRANT."

Civ. Code, § 1068, relating to construction of grants, applies to quitclaim deeds, since "grant" includes all sorts of conveyances.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Grant.]

6. DEEDS ⚡92 — CONSTRUCTION — STATUTE.

Civ. Code, § 1070, providing that, if several parts of a grant are irreconcilable, the former part prevails, must be construed with section 1068, providing when recitals in grant may be referred to, and section 1069, requiring grants to be interpreted in favor of grantee.

7. DEEDS ⚡100 — CONSTRUCTION — STATUTE.

Under direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 1066, grants are interpreted as are other contracts, and, under section 1647, may be explained by circumstances under which they were made and matter to which they relate.

8. MINES AND MINERALS ⇨55(7)—MORTGAGES ⇨304 — QUITCLAIM DEED—CONSTRUCTION.

Where conveyance reserved mineral rights, and grantees gave a mortgage back, a subsequent deed to grantees reciting grantees' desire to have mortgage released and quitclaiming grantor's interest in premises, released not only the mortgage, but also conveyed reserved mineral rights to grantees, especially where such construction was not challenged for nearly 50 years.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨907(1)—PRESUMPTIONS—JUDGMENT ROLL.

Ordinarily, where case is appealed upon a judgment roll, facts necessary to support trial court's findings will be presumed to have been presented to it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; George D. Murray, Judge.

Suit to quiet title by A. C. MacFarland, administrator of the will annexed of the estate of Thomas A. Scott, deceased, against Jesse Walker and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. MacFarland, of Sacramento, for appellant.

G. W. Hunter, L. M. Burnell, and J. S. Burnell, all of Eureka, for respondents.

BRITTAİN, J. The plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll alone after trial of a suit to quiet title to certain minerals or mineral rights, and the right to enter upon the defendants' lands, there to dig, bore, and mine for the subterranean substances. He maintains the findings do not support the judgment, because he claims all of the elements of adverse possession on the part of the defendants do not appear, and because a certain instrument set forth in the findings was, as he urges, merely a release of mortgage, and not a conveyance of the minerals and mining rights.

In 1869 the plaintiff's testator, by an attorney in fact, conveyed certain lands in Humboldt county to the predecessors in interest of the respondents by deed in terms a grant, reserving and excepting therefrom the subterranean oils and minerals and the right to enter upon the grantees' lands to dig, bore, or mine for the subterranean minerals, paying to the grantees such damages as they might sustain by reason of such entry. Upon the day the grant was made the grantees mortgaged to the grantor the land conveyed to secure the payment of a promissory note payable August 31, 1870, for $1,880, with interest at 10 per cent. During the month of August, 1870, before the note became due, the instrument in question was executed. It recites the fact of the making and recordation of the mortgage, giving the book and page of record, and describes the lands, making no reference to the reservation in the original deed. It further recites that—

"Whereas the said John Walker and Jesse Walker are desirous of having their said tract of land relieved from the operation of said mortgage; now, therefore, I, —, in consideration of the premises and of the sum of one dollar, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, remise, release, and forever quitclaim unto the said John Walker and Jesse Walker their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, the aforesaid premises and all the right, title and interest, both in law and equity, which I have in and to the same."

The appellant maintains that by the reservation in the original grant the grantor created two separate and distinct estates in the land, one being of the surface, or soil, and the other of the oil and similar substances below the surface, together with the right to remove them. Murray v. Allred, 100 Tenn. 100, 43 S. W. 355, 39 L. R. A. 249, 66 Am. St. Rep. 740; Kincaid v. McGowan, 88 Ky. 91, 4 S. W. 802, 13 L. R. A. 289. He argues that the clear intent of the instrument is indicated by the recital, "Whereas the said John Walker and Jesse Walker are desirous of having their said tract of land relieved from the operation of said mortgage," and that "nowhere in the instrument can be found the slightest evidence of intention to reconvey any oil lands."

The case of Barnstable Savings Bank v. Barrett, 122 Mass. 172, relied upon by the appellant, was a case where the operative words indorsed on the back of the mortgage itself were:

"Having received full payment and satisfaction of the within mortgage, I do hereby cancel and discharge the same, and release and forever quitclaim unto the within named G., his heirs and assigns, all my right, title and interest in and to the within described premises. To have and to hold," etc.

At the time the mortgagee's interest under the mortgage was the only interest he had, although he theretofore had another mortgage on a portion of the land, which he had assigned to one Flagg several months prior to the release. The mortgagee's assignment to Flagg was not seasonably recorded, and to defeat Flagg's interest it was sought to extend the instrument beyond its clear meaning. The court properly held this could not be done.

In Donlin v. Bradley, 119 Ill. 412, 10 N. E. 11, immediately after the description of the land in the deed in question was the provision, "This deed is made for no other purpose except to release a certain trust deed," describing it. The court held that the deed was limited to the purpose stated.

In Barr v. Foster, 25 Colo. 28, 52 Pac. 1101, where the quitclaim deed specifically referred to the interests of the grantors arising out of a certain contract, it was held that it did not release a deed of trust, of which the grantors were the beneficiaries. In each of these cases the operative words of quitclaim themselves contained a limitation upon the interest conveyed.

[1-3] The appellant maintains that, if the language of the instrument is given its full and most stringent construction, it cannot by any means refer to the oil rights. A serious argument presented by able counsel in support of the two constructions to be given the instrument demonstrates, if not its ambiguity, at least a repugnance between the recital and the operative words. Since the appeal is upon the judgment roll alone, this court is limited to a consideration of the facts presented by the findings and admitted by the pleadings. The court is confined to those fundamental rules of construction, which all lawyers find so easy to state, and which the reports of adjudicated cases show no two lawyers on opposite sides of a controversy can agree to apply in the same way. The first of these rules is to ascertain the intent of the parties by taking the instrument by the four corners, and, if possible, giving effect to every word in it in accordance with its usual meaning. In the Civil Code are codified the rules of interpretation. Technical words are to be interpreted as usually understood by persons in the profession or business to which they relate, unless clearly used in a different sense. Civ. Code, § 1645. The operative words in this instrument, "remit, release, and forever quitclaim all my right, title and interest, both in law and in equity," whether considered as technical words of conveyancing or words understood in their ordinary and popular sense, are the most apt which could have been selected to convey to the Walkers both the equitable interest of the mortgagee and the legal interest in the minerals and mining rights. These words, standing alone and constituting the entire operative clause of the instrument in themselves, are entirely unambiguous. If they had been written without any recital having been made, there could be no question as to their legal effect. No evidence could have been introduced and no inference drawn to limit them simply to a release of the mortgage. They were not coupled in the operative clause with a limitation to the mortgage interest as were the operative clauses in the Barnstable Savings Bank case, in Donlin v. Bradley, and in Barr v. Foster, cited by the appellant.

[4-6] The appellant maintains that, notwithstanding the lack of ambiguity in the operative words of the instrument, the intent of the grantor was shown by the recitals in the preamble. If his contention were sound, no matter how broad was the language used, it would not be extended beyond the clear intent of the parties. Civ. Code, § 1648. It is only when the operative words of grant are doubtful that recourse may be had to its recitals to assist in the construction. Civ. Code, § 1068. The recitals in an instrument may be operative in the sense that they may bind either or both parties to the truth of the facts stated, or they may be examined for the purpose of resolving an ambiguity in the operative words of the grant itself, but where the words of grant are clear, the recitals cannot be resorted to for the purpose of imparting an ambiguity to the entire instrument by which clear words of grant may be limited in their effect. It may be contended that a quitclaim deed is not a grant, and that section 1068 of the Civil Code applies only to technical grants. But the word "grant" includes all sorts of conveyances, including quitclaim deeds. Faivre v. Daley, 93 Cal. 664, 29 Pac. 256. If several parts of a grant are absolutely irreconcilable, the former part prevails (Civ. Code, § 1070), but this section must be read in connection with section 1068, and with section 1069, which provides that it is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee.

[7, 8] Grants are to be interpreted as other contracts (Civ. Code, § 1066), and they may be explained by the circumstances under which they were made and the matter to which they relate (Civ. Code, § 1647). An examination of the surrounding circumstances in making the instrument in question supports the conclusion that, under the rules of construction of the language of the instrument, the operative words must be given their full significance.

The appellant maintains that the external circumstances show the instrument was intended merely as a release. An examination of all the circumstances before the court gives little support to this contention. Thomas R. Bard, as the attorney in fact of Thomas A. Scott, of Philadelphia, in 1869 was authorized to bargain and sell Scott's lands in Humboldt county, to make deeds of quitclaim, special warranty, and general warranty, to accept mortgages, to collect moneys due Scott, and to compound the same, to execute and to satisfy of record releases of mortgages, and to give acquittances and releases. When the instrument in question was executed under this power, Bard knew that he was authorized to make quitclaim deeds and to release mortgages. He also knew that on the same day the mortgage was made he reserved what the appellant maintains was a legal estate out of the mortgaged premises, consisting of rights under the surface of the lands mortgaged. He knew, therefore, that his principal had both legal and equitable interests in the lands. The instrument was made before the mortgage debt became due. It is significant that it does not recite the fact of payment of the debt. It does recite that the owners were desirous of having the lands relieved from the operation of the mortgage, and in consideration of that desire, and for a further consideration, Bard used the language necessary to convey both the legal and the equitable interests of his principal. He did not use the language he was expressly authorized to use in the event of the payment of the mortgage debt.

These transactions occurred nearly 50 years ago. The original grant from Scott to the Walkers was made in November, 1869. The instrument in question was made in 1870. Scott lived for 21 years after the instrument in question was executed. During that period the Walkers dealt with the property in all respects as their own. Deeds between the original grantees and from the original grantees to their successors were executed and recorded, and a few months before Scott's death successors of one of the Walkers in terms leased to one Graham a portion of the lands included within the original deed for the express purpose of drilling, digging, boring, and removing petroleum, oil, and similar substances therefrom. Scott died in 1891. Between that time and 1903 numerous other conveyances and leases of the lands and parts of them were recorded, some of them reserving in the grantors named in these latter conveyances, and others transferring to the grantees named therein, the oil and similar products with the right to extract the same. All these instruments, some 15 in number, were matters of public record more than 12 years before the plaintiff was appointed the administrator of the estate of Scott with the will annexed. His appointment was not until 23 years after the death of Scott. The appointment was made in 1914, and this suit was brought shortly thereafter. Notwithstanding the appellant's claim that during this period of half a century Scott and his estate have held an estate in the lands of which they could not be divested by nonuser, that interest in the lands was never assessed, at least before 1909, to either Scott or Scott's estate. The entire interest in the property was assessed to the holders claiming under the instrument in suit, and all taxes were paid by them. Their property was fenced and held by them openly as their own. Even though all the elements of adverse possession of such an estate as the appellant claims do not appear, for the reason that the clock would not begin running until Scott or his representatives were denied the right to exercise the privileges reserved in the original deed, in view of the notice imparted by the recordation of the instruments during a long period of years showing the adverse claims of the Walkers and their successors, coupled with the fact that at the expiration of 45 years after the instrument in suit was executed the plaintiff, as the representative of Scott's estate, deemed it necessary to bring a suit to quiet those adverse claims, the principle that equity does not look with favor upon stale claims might well be applied. Whether this principle would be conclusive or not, the dealings of the Walkers and their successors with the land after the execution of the instrument in suit and the silence on the part of Scott and the representatives of his estate in regard to the clouds upon his title, if he still retained title, would indicate that the parties to the instrument had themselves considered the operative words to mean exactly what they say.

[9] Respondent urges that, apart from any question of construction of the instrument or of adverse possession, the court made the ultimate findings of fact of ownership in the defendants and lack of ownership in the plaintiff, and that these findings fairly sustain the judgment. This rule directly applies to the present case, unless the findings of the probative facts regarding possession and the construction of the instrument in suit are at variance with the finding of ownership in the defendants. McArthur v. Goodwin, 173 Cal. 499, 160 Pac. 679. In support of the construction given to the instrument in suit by the lower court, there may have been additional facts before the lower court not presented by the judgment roll. Ordinarily the existence of whatever facts might be necessary to support the finding of ownership in such a case would be presumed to have been presented to the lower court in support of its action. Upon the facts before this court, Scott's title was divested in 1870, since which time the defendants and their predecessors in interest have been, as they still are, the owners of the lands in fee.

Judgment is affirmed.

CRENSHAW BROS. & SAFFOLD v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (Civ. 1950).*

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, April 8, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 5, 1919.)

1. CARRIERS — 150, 158(3)—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY—LOSS OR DAMAGE FROM NEGLIGENCE.

A provision in a bill of lading that amount of any loss or damage for which carrier shall be liable shall be computed on basis of value of property (being bona fide invoice price to consignee, including freight charges if prepaid) at place and time of shipment under the bill of lading, whether or not such loss or damage occurs from negligence, is not void as against sound public policy.

2. CARRIERS — 115—DAMAGE TO SHIPMENTS—REFRIGERATION.

Loss to fruit from imperfect refrigeration was damage for which a carrier was liable under a provision in bill of lading that the amount of "any" loss or damage for which it was liable should be computed on basis of value of property at place and time of shipment.

3. CARRIERS — 135—INJURIES TO SHIPMENT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Under a bill of lading providing that amount of any loss or damage for which carrier was liable should be computed on basis of value of property being bona fide invoice price to consignee, including freight charges if prepaid at place and time of shipment, the extent of damages is measured by the actual loss, which is determined by the difference between the invoice price, with the freight and refrigeration charges added, and the selling price, and it is immaterial what the fruit might have sold for at point of destination.

4. COURTS — 97(5) — PRECEDENTS — FEDERAL QUESTIONS.

The interpretation of a uniform bill of lading issued in accordance with a schedule of freights and fares filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, in pursuance of acts of Congress relating to interstate shipments (see U. S. Comp. St. § 8604a et seq.), and the consideration of liability of shipper thereunder, involve federal questions concerning which the decisions of the federal courts are supreme.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by Crenshaw Bros. & Saffold, a partnership consisting of John A. Crenshaw, Ira A. Crenshaw, J. B. Saffold, and C. G. Hilderley against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, of Stockton, for appellant.

L. T. Hatfield, of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover damages for breach of contract in relation to the shipment of three separate and distinct consignments of grapes from three different points in California to Tampa, Fla. Briefly stated, the damage claimed was due to imperfect refrigeration, rough handling of the fruit, and unnecessary delay in transportation. The court found in favor of plaintiff, and the appeal is taken from the judgment on a bill of exceptions. Only one question is open for consideration in this court, and that is, What is the measure or standard by which the amount of compensation is to be determined? Every other question was waived by appellant in the court below, and, of course, on principle as well as authority, we must accord full significance to that waiver.

[1] The controversy revolves about this provision in the bill of lading:

"The amount of any loss or damage for which any carrier is liable shall be computed on the basis of the value of the property (being the bona fide invoice price, if any, to the consignee, including freight charges, if prepaid) at the place and time of shipment under the bill of lading. * * * whether or not such loss or damage occurs from negligence."

There is no dispute that the transaction involved interstate commerce, or that appellant had filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission its schedule of rates, fares, and charges for transportation as required by the interstate commerce law. Nor is it claimed that any fraud or want of good faith characterized the execution of the contract between the parties for the shipment of the fruit. Respondents, however, do make the contention that said provision is void because against sound public policy.

A detailed consideration of the various objections to the legal operation and effectiveness of the provision is not required since the validity of such contract has been so directly and positively affirmed by the courts, including the Supreme Court of this state and the United States Supreme Court, that the question is no longer open to discussion. Of course, the circumstances and conditions of each particular case must be regarded in the interpretation of the contract, but it cannot be regarded as unlawful or inoperative.

In Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 33 Sup. Ct. 391, 57 L. Ed. 683, a box of household goods was lost in transportation, and the shipper sued to recover its value. The main defense was that the liability was limited to the sum of $5 per hundred-weight, the value agreed upon at the time and place of shipment. Many cases are reviewed in the opinion, and the court declares:

"But when a shipper delivers a package for shipment and declares a value, either upon request or voluntarily, and the carrier makes a rate accordingly, the shipper is estopped, upon plain principles of justice, from recovering, in case of loss or damage, any greater amount. The same principle applies if the value be declared in the form of a contract. * * * The ground upon which such a declared or agreed value is upheld is that of estoppel."

It is not important that in the case at bar the agreement did not specify the value. It left that to be ascertained, but limited it to a particular time and place. The same principle would manifestly apply as though the parties had stated the exact value. Indeed, as we shall see hereafter, there is no controversy as to the value of the property at the time and place of shipment. Nor is there any dispute that the shipper had the option to demand, on the condition of paying a greater rate, a more favorable contract as to the liability of the carrier.

In Georgia, Florida & Alabama Ry. Co. v. Blish Milling Co., 241 U. S. 190, 36 Sup. Ct. 541, 60 L. Ed. 948, while the main questions discussed were whether the plaintiff's exclusive remedy was against the initial carrier and whether the action was barred, the court declared:

"But the parties could not waive the terms of the contract under which the shipment was made pursuant to the federal act; nor could the carrier by its conduct give the shipper the right to ignore these terms which were applicable to that conduct and hold the carrier to a different responsibility from that fixed by the agreement made under the published tariff and regulation."

In Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Olivit Bros., 243 U. S. 574, 37 Sup. Ct. 468, 61 L. Ed. 908, the validity of such provision was conceded by both parties, the controversy being over the questions as to the meaning of the phrase "lawful holder" in what is known as the Carmack Amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act (Act Cong. Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 20, 24 Stat. 386, as amended by Act Cong. June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, pars. 11, 12, 34 Stat. 595 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8604a, 8604aa]), whether there was any evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and whether plaintiff was entitled to recover the freight paid by it; the court, however, after quoting said provision from the bill of lading, said:

"Some of the bills of lading do not contain this provision, but it was agreed at the trial that the proper measure of damages was to be computed upon the basis of the value of the property at the place and time of shipment, and that such measure should be read into all of the bills of lading. As plaintiff further says, to recover the damages sustained by it based upon this value, plaintiff must receive from defendant the difference between this value and the proceeds of the sale and the freight paid.

In this we concur, and therefore there was no error in including in the recovery such freight."

Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Ry. Co. v. Texas Packing Co., 244 U. S. 31, 37 Sup. Ct. 487, 61 L. Ed. 970, involved the shipment of poultry, the goods having been damaged by reason of the negligence of the carrier, and sold by the shipper at the point of destination. One of the vital questions considered was whether the trial court erred in giving to the jury the following instruction:

"If you find for the plaintiff you will assess the damages at the difference between the invoice price of said poultry, to wit, the sum of $22,238.56, and the value of said poultry at the time the same was delivered to plaintiff or its agents, the Western Cold Storage Company in Chicago, by the carrier, with 6 per cent. interest per annum, from January 15, 1911."

The court declared:

"We think that in taking this sum as the basis of computing damages the trial court did but enforce the stipulation in the bills of lading. * * * We think the court properly charged the jury to take the difference between this invoice price and the value of the poultry at the time the same was delivered in Chicago in arriving at the amount of damages. * * * Apart from the stipulation of these bills of lading, the ordinary measure of damages in cases of this sort is the difference between the market value of the property in the condition in which it should have arrived at the place of destination and its market value in the condition in which, by reason of the fault of the carrier, it did arrive. New York, Lake Erie & W. R. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 616 [13 Sup. Ct. 444, 37 L. Ed. 292]. The stipulations of these bills of lading changed this rule in the requirement that the invoice price at the place of shipment should be the basis for assessing the damage."

The case of Boston, Maine Railroad v. Piper, 246 U. S. 439, 38 Sup. Ct. 354, 62 L. Ed. 820, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 469, is not opposed to the foregoing. Therein it was held that a provision exonerating the carrier from losses incurred by the shipper in consequence of the negligence of the former is illegal and not binding upon the shipper, and "is not within the principle of limiting liability to an agreed valuation which has been made the basis of a reduced freight rate."

In no decision, to which our attention has been called, has the subject received more careful and thorough consideration than in Zoller Hop Co. v. Southern Pacific Co., 72 Or. 262, 143 Pac. 931, decided by the Supreme Court of Oregon. Therein it is said:

"It is reasonable and natural that the care and risk involved in the carriage of goods should be in proportion to their value. It is proper and legitimate that, the greater the risk and responsibility, the greater should be the recompense to the one incurring them. The converse is equally true, so that consequent damages are reduced in proportion to the lesser responsibility for the goods. The risk and the rate have a logical and corresponding relation to each other, based upon the value of the property intrusted to the carrier. If it is lawful to agree in advance upon a more or less conventional value of the chattels for the purpose of securing cheaper rates in favor of the shipper, it is quite as proper to use the same value as a basis upon which to compute damage for the breach of the contract. * * * It accords with sound doctrine, therefore, that at the outset the parties may in good faith fix upon the value of the property for all contingencies likely to arise in the transaction, and this does not in any way relieve the carrier from the results of his own negligence."

In 10 Corpus Juris, 57, it is said:

"Before the enactment of the Carmack Amendment the greatest confusion existed as to whether a limitation of the carrier's liability for loss or injury to a specified value was valid in case the shipment was lost or injured by reason of the negligence of the carrier. * * * The effect of the Carmack Amendment is, of course, to make the rule uniform in all jurisdictions of the United States, so far as interstate shipments are concerned, and to render valid a limitation of the character under consideration, whether the loss or injury was due to the carrier's negligence or not."

Furthermore, it is said that even in states where such a contract is held void under statutes prohibiting carriers from limiting their common-law liability, "a contract for an interstate shipment, made in a state where such a statute is in force, is valid under the Carmack Amendment, inasmuch as the decisions of the federal courts prior to the amendment held such contracts valid."

Our own Supreme Court has also directly upheld the validity of such agreement.

In Pierce v. Southern Pacific Co., 120 Cal. 156, 52 Pac. 302, 40 L. R. A. 350, it was declared that effect must be given to the contract of the parties making the invoice price at the point of shipment the measure of damage, "and where no invoice price was actually made out and agreed upon, that expression must be understood as indicating the actual value of the trees at the point of shipment, when loaded and ready for transportation."

The question was fully considered in Donlon Bros. v. Southern Pacific Co., 151 Cal. 763, 91 Pac. 603, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811, 12 Ann. Cas. 1118, involving the shipment of horses, and the court said:

"The contract is one in which the valuation of the property was agreed to for the purpose of fixing transportation charges and as measuring the responsibility of appellant. It was not a contract limiting liability. It was a contract dealing primarily with value—the value of the horses shipped. That was agreed to, and, of course, the agreed valuation must be deemed to be the actual valuation of the property—its actual valuation for all purposes of the contract."

[2] Nor do we understand how this covenant in the contract is affected in the least by the fact that there was a separate and distinct charge for the refrigeration. The charge was distinct, but the refrigeration itself was inseparably connected with the transportation of the fruit, and was an essential part of the transaction. The loss from imperfect refrigeration was damage for which the carrier was liable on that bill of lading, and the condition to which we have reference applied "to any loss or damage for which the carrier is liable." The fact that there was only one rate for the refrigeration does not derogate from the validity of the contract, since the difference in the rate for the transportation would be a sufficient consideration to uphold it.

Another important question is involved in the construction and application of this provision of the contract.

As to the first count in the complaint the court found that the grapes were sold to the best advantage for the sum of $980; that the amount of the freight charge was $496.12 and of the refrigeration was $95; that the invoice value was $783; that if the fruit had arrived in time and uninjured, it could have been sold for $1,957.50. The court concluded that the plaintiffs suffered damage to the extent of the difference between said $1,957.50 and $980, to wit, the sum of $977.50, for which judgment was allowed.

As to the second count, the court found that the fruit was sold for the sum of $1,097.75, and that if it had been received on time and in a marketable condition it would have brought the sum of $1,860. It was also found that the invoice price was $930, the freight charge $494.97, and the refrigeration charge the sum of $95. The damage allowed was therefore the sum of $762.25.

In reference to the third shipment, it was found that it was sold for $1,133.75; that if there had been no breach of the contract, it could have been sold for $2,557.50; that the invoice price was $1,255.50, the charge for transportation was $494.97, and for refrigeration was $95. The court allowed as damages the difference between the selling price and what it would have brought, to wit, the sum of $1,423.75.

[3] It is the claim of appellant that, in any event, under said provision of the bill of lading the extent of the recovery is measured by the actual loss, which is determined by the difference between the invoice price with the freight and refrigeration charge added and the selling price, and that it was entirely improper for the court to consider what the fruit might have sold for at the point of destination. Under this view, for the first-mentioned shipment, the account would stand as follows:

Actual cost of fruit.....	$ 783 00
Freight paid.....	591 12
	$1,374 12
Fruit brought.....	980 00
Loss	$ 394 12

For the second cause of action we would have:

Cost	$ 930 00
Freight paid.....	589 97
	$1,519 97
Fruit brought.....	1,097 75
Loss	$ 422 22

The third would stand as follows:

Cost	$1,255 50
Freight paid.....	589 97
	$1,845 47
Fruit brought.....	1,133 75
Loss	$ 711 72

Another view of the construction of said provision, which supports the conclusion of the lower court, suggested by respondents, is that said invoice price simply provides the maximum amount to be recovered in case of loss, but does not prevent the recovery of the difference between the selling price and what the goods could have been sold for if there had been no injury, provided such difference does not exceed said invoice price. Such seems to be the view taken by the Supreme Court of this state in the very recent case of Olcovich v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada (Sup.) 176 Pac. 459. Therein it is said:

"While there are late cases holding that the measure of damages under such a bill of lading as that herein is the difference between the cost price at the shipping point and the selling price of the injured freight at the point of destination, * * * we prefer to follow the general view above stated."

The general view to which the court thus refers is expressed in the earlier part of the opinion as follows:

"While the exact question has never been determined in this state, in the case of a partial loss with such a contract it has been determined, in harmony with the general view, that the loss is limited by the value stated and agreed upon in the bill of lading in the case of a total loss. Pierce v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. If this limit is valid as to a total loss, there seems to be no reason why it should not also be considered as a limitation upon the damage in the case of a partial loss."

It is declared further that the authorities are not in accord as to the question, but the Supreme Court approved the view announced in 10 Corpus Juris, § 612, and 3 Sutherland on Damages, 3391.

In the Pierce Case, supra, it is to be observed that the bill of lading provided "that the actual invoice cost at point of shipment will be taken as measure of damages," language of somewhat different import from that to be construed herein. It was also held that it was error for the lower court to permit the market value of the trees at Riverside, the point of destination, to be shown, and that the injury should have been limited to what was the value in Florida, the shipping point. It was therefore in effect held that the value in Florida was not only the measure of the damages that could be recovered, but that it was the only basis upon which such damage could be computed. It may be added that obviously it would have made no difference in the result in that case whether said value was considered as the measure of the recovery or the basis upon which the damages should be computed, since there was a total loss.

In Corpus Juris, supra, the rule is stated as follows:

"The parties may, by express provisions to that effect, stipulate that in case of partial loss, the damage shall be proportioned on the basis of the sum named as the maximum limit; but where this is not done the question becomes one of construction, and very generally the view is entertained that such stipulations are to be considered as permitting recovery for the damages actually done, the amount recoverable not to exceed the amount agreed on as compensation for a total loss."

As stated in Sutherland, supra:

"Where a statute authorizes a limitation of liability by contract and a contract is made limiting liability for loss of live stock to the actual cost at point of shipment and in no event to exceed a stipulated sum per head, the measure of damages for injuries to the animals in transit due to negligence is the amount that each has depreciated in value, but in no event to exceed the actual cost at point of shipment as shown by the market value there or the stipulated value."

An examination of the cases cited by Corpus Juris and Sutherland, supra, in support of the text shows that the phraseology of the respective bills of lading is somewhat different from the language involved herein, and it lends itself more easily to the construction that the invoice price was intended to be the measure rather than the basis of the amount recoverable.

It may be said, also, of the Olcovich case, supra, that it arose prior to the adoption of the uniform bill of lading in 1908. The corresponding provision, though, in the bill of lading involved in said case was:

"The amount of any loss or damage for which the carrier becomes liable shall be computed at the value of the property at the place and time of shipment"

—being substantially the same in that respect as the bill of lading herein. Said decision undoubtedly, therefore, favors the conclusion of the trial court in this case, since the damages awarded for each shipment are less than the amount of the invoice value and freight.

However, we cannot reconcile this view with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Texas case, in 244 U. S. 31, 37 Sup. Ct. 487, 61 L. Ed. 970, supra.

[4] The interpretation of the uniform bill of lading issued in accordance with the schedule of freights and fares filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission in pursuance of the act of Congress and relating to an interstate shipment, and the consideration of the liability of the shipper thereunder, involve federal questions concerning which the decisions of the federal courts are supreme. Southern Railway Co. v. Prescott, 240 U. S. 632, 36 Sup. Ct. 469, 60 L. Ed. 836; Georgia, Florida & Alabama R. R. Co. v. Blish Milling Co., 241 U. S. 190, 36 Sup. Ct. 541, 60 L. Ed. 948; A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Harold, 241 U. S. 371, 36 Sup. Ct. 665, 60 L. Ed. 1050.

In the Prescott Case it is said:

"Viewing the contract set forth in the bill of lading as still in force, the measure of liability under it must also be regarded as a federal question. As it has often been said, the statutory provisions manifest the intent of Congress that the obligation of the carrier with respect to the services within the purview of the statute shall be governed by uniform rule in the place of the divers requirements of state legislation and decisions"—citing a large number of cases.

The case of Detroit & M. Ry. Co. v. Fletcher Paper Co., 248 U. S. 30, 39 Sup. Ct. 13, 63 L. Ed. —, involves an entirely different question.

Therein the suits were brought to recover the difference between the rates fixed by the Michigan Railroad Commission on logs carried wholly within the state and the higher rates that the defendant actually charged. The court held that the determination of the merits of the controversy depended upon the construction of the state laws, as to which the state "has the last word." It was expressly stated that the cases did not involve interstate commerce.

We see no escape from the conclusion that under the decisions of the highest court of the land the award of the trial court was too high.

To state it sententiously: The United States Supreme Court holds that under this form of contract the shipper can recover only his actual loss instead of his full compensatory damage.

It is not necessary, though, to reverse the case, since the findings of fact are complete.

The judgment is modified so as to provide that:

"Plaintiffs do have and recover of and from the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation, the defendant, the sum of $1,528.06, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, as follows: On the sum of $394.12 from the 21st day of October, 1913; on the sum of $422.22 from the 23d day of October, 1913; and on the sum of $711.72 from the 14th day of November, 1913" —and, as thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(40 Cal. App. 537)

MILEKOVICH v. QUINN et al. (Civ. 2709.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 3, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 2, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE ⇨252 — HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨272(1) — COMMUNITY PROPERTY — PROPERTY DIVISION.

Divorce dissolves the community, and, unless the parties agree to a division of the community property, it is the duty of the court, in divorce suit, to determine their respective interests.

2. DIVORCE ⇨245(2)—STIPULATION FOR DIVISION OF PROPERTY—FRAUD—SUBSEQUENT SUIT TO RECOVER SHARE OF COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

In a suit by divorced wife against her former husband for her share of community property kept from her by the fraud of the husband in making a property settlement before divorce, where the wife did not seek a new valuation for the purpose of redivision, but only the secreted one-half of the property, it was not necessary that she offer to return to the defendant property received under the settlement.

3. DIVORCE ⇨245(1) — FRAUD IN SETTLEMENT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS.

In suit by divorced wife against her former husband for her share of community property kept from her by husband's fraud in property settlement before divorce, which settlement was followed by the terms of the divorce decree, it was not necessary that the divorce decree be set aside in its entirety, if at all.

4. JUDGMENT ⇨443(1) — SETTING ASIDE — DECEPTION OF COURT—FALSE STATEMENTS.

False statements made upon the record, sworn to in an answer, will not warrant the setting aside of the judgment because the court was deceived by them.

5. DIVORCE ⇨245(3) — SUBSEQUENT SUIT FOR RELIEF FROM DECREE — COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PROPERTY AGREEMENTS SECURED BY FRAUD—INTRINSIC FRAUD.

In a subsequent suit by plaintiff in divorce, her complaint asking to be relieved from a portion of the decree relating to community property on the ground that she was deceived by defendant's answer and cross-complaint as to the amount of community property, and thereby induced to make a property settlement stipulation, does not show intrinsic fraud, since she does not ask relief based on a judgment founded on perjured testimony, but because she was induced by false statements to enter into a contract out of court precluding her from submitting to the court questions of fact on which she now seeks adjudication.

6. FRAUD ⚡1—DEFINING FRAUD.

Equity will not attempt to define just what form of deceit is fraudulent.

7. DIVORCE ⚡245(2) — PROPERTY SETTLEMENT—COMMUNITY PROPERTY — FRAUD AND DECEIT—ADJUDICATION—RELIEF.

Although a judgment entered into upon the stipulation of the parties is as sacred and unimpeachable as any other judgment, yet, where an agreement between husband and wife in settlement of community property previous to divorce expressly provided that its provisions be incorporated in the judgment, it withdrew from judicial consideration matters so stipulated, and the court has power to grant relief to the wife where such agreement was secured by the husband's fraud or concealment of community property.

8. DIVORCE ⚡245(2) — PROPERTY STIPULATION—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—FRAUDULENT STIPULATION—EQUITABLE RELIEF.

Where a fraudulent stipulation in a divorce suit effectually withdrew issues as to community property from consideration of the court, by an express provision that findings and decree should accord therewith, equity, regarding the substance rather than the form, will relieve against the part of the decree affected by the fraud.

9. DIVORCE ⚡245(2) — COMMUNITY PROPERTY—FRAUDULENT PROPERTY STIPULATION—SUBSEQUENT SUIT—DILIGENCE—FAILURE TO CROSS-EXAMINE DEFENDANT.

Where plaintiff in divorce suit was prevented from cross-examining defendant as to the amount of community property accumulated by the fraud of defendant misrepresenting the amount thereof in the answer and cross-complaint and his securing from her by such fraud a stipulation for property settlement, plaintiff was not guilty of lack of diligence in failing to cross-examine defendant as to the amount of such property so as to bar her from subsequent suit to secure her share of the community property.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. H. Graham, Judge.

Suit by Delia Milekovich against Patrick P. Quinn and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Judgment affirmed.

John L. McNab, Timothy Healy, and Byron Coleman, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Frank W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. Plaintiff and respondent in her suit sought to be relieved of that portion of a prior decree of divorce by which the property rights of the parties to the divorce suit are claimed by the appellants to have been finally adjudicated. The essential facts are admitted. In the interim between the divorce decree and the commencement of this action the plaintiff had remarried. When the divorce action was brought, a restraining order was made on the ex parte application of the plaintiff prohibiting the defendant in the divorce action, Patrick P. Quinn, from disposing of any portion of the community property. On the following day Quinn, upon an ex parte application, caused the restraining order to be set aside. Immediately thereafter he withdrew from his safe deposit box bonds of the par value of $45,000, and delivered them to one Brady for the purpose of secreting them from the knowledge of Mrs. Quinn, her attorneys and the court in which the divorce action was pending.

In her complaint for divorce the plaintiff made allegations concerning the community property, and, among other things, upon information and belief, that the defendant had securities of the value of $60,000, a part of the community property. In his answer the defendant denied all the substantial allegations of the complaint, and denied that he had securities of the value of $60,000, or of any sum or amount in excess of about $2,000, admitting, however, the ownership of other community property, to which further reference will be made. In the cross-complaint the defendant set up a cause of action against the plaintiff for divorce on the ground of willful desertion, and a second cause of action based upon alleged cruelty of the plaintiff. Upon receiving notice of the application for alimony during the pendency of the suit, Quinn made an affidavit expressly referring to the statements set forth in his answer and cross-complaint in regard to the community property and closing with the statement:

"In relation to said assertions about defendant's great wealth, defendant says that at the time of the great fire in San Francisco he had the home above mentioned, that the other lot of the community was unimproved, and that he had less than $3,000 in cash. Since that time he has earned the money necessary to erect the said flats amounting to $20,000 and has paid for all of the street work in connection therewith, amounting to $5,000, and to buy the Stevenson street property for $3,500, making a total accumulation made by the defendant in that time of $32,700, which defendant submits is all that he could be expected to accumulate in that short space of time in consideration of his age and bodily condition."

About the time the answer was filed and the affidavit served on plaintiff, negotiations were opened for the settlement of the property interests of the parties to the divorce suit. It does not appear whether negotiations were pending when the answer was filed or whether they were opened shortly after. The negotiations were carried on between the attorneys of the respective parties and extended over a period of from one to two months. During the negotiations some five or six offers of settlement of the property interests were made on behalf of Quinn, and they were successively rejected by Mrs. Quinn. On the trial of this case the rule excluding evidence of confidential communications between attorneys and clients was rigidly applied to the evidence of the attorneys of both parties. It appears, however, that no direct representation was made either by Quinn or by his attorney to Mrs. Quinn or any one in interest with her in regard to the amount of community property unless the representations made in the answer and cross-complaint and in the affidavit served upon Mrs. Quinn or her attorneys can be so construed. The only statement ascribed to the attorney for Quinn during the negotiations was, "Your client says one thing and my client says another." Whereupon the attorneys for both parties continued to deal in view of the community property known by the attorneys for the plaintiff to exist. Despite the fact that Mrs. Quinn repeatedly told her attorneys that she believed Quinn had some $60,000 worth of securities, Quinn's deposition was not taken, nor was any direct inquiry made of him, nor, so far as the record shows, of his attorneys in regard to the discrepancy between the belief of Mrs. Quinn and the statements of Quinn in his answer and cross-complaint. After rejecting many offers of settlement, the plaintiff entered into a stipulation which is attacked in the present suit. The property agreement embodied in the stipulation was made upon the assumption that under it each of the parties should receive one-half of the community property. The stipulation was for a division of all the community property. It provided that a certain lot was the property of Nellie Riley, a married daughter of the parties; that plaintiff Delia Quinn, now Delia Milekovich, should receive a lot in San Francisco, 60 by 120 feet, improved by a building containing six flats, and another lot 25 by 95 feet, together with the family dwelling house thereon and its contents, except personal belongings of the husband; that "all of the remainder of the community property of said community shall be awarded to and be the sole and separate property of the defendant Patrick P. Quinn including the following described real property," after which followed a description of a lot 75 by 95 feet, another lot 27 feet 6 inches by 85 feet, a lot in San Leandro, in Alameda county, "and also all personal property of every kind and description of said community other than the contents of said Ninth avenue dwelling house."

It is further stipulated that—

"The foregoing division of the community property is in absolute, entire, and complete satisfaction and discharge of all claims which either party to said action might assert against the other whether on account of property rights, interest in community property, or rights to maintenance, alimony, costs, and counsel fees."

In consideration of the "foregoing statements and compromise," the parties mutually released each other from all claims and demands and bound themselves to execute such conveyances as might be proper to effectuate the settlement. The stipulation closes as follows:

"It is furthermore stipulated and agreed that in case the above-entitled court shall make and enter any decree in the above-entitled action awarding a divorce to the plaintiff or to the defendant in said action that the said court shall find that all of the property hereinbefore referred to is community property of plaintiff and defendant, and shall divide the same between them in accordance with the terms of this stipulation."

The interlocutory decree, after adjudicating the divorce, adjudicated and decreed that the real property of the community belonged to and should vest in the respective parties, following the provisions of, but not referring to, the stipulation, and the decree contained the following statement:

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the foregoing division of the community property is an absolute, entire, and complete satisfaction and discharge of all claims which either party to said action might assert against the other whether on account of property rights, interest in community property, or right to maintenance, alimony, costs, and counsel fees."

The deeds to the real property were executed in accordance with the terms of the stipulation and decree. Shortly after discovering the fraud practiced upon her by Quinn, plaintiff commenced the present action. The other parties alleged to have been custodians of a portion of the bonds or their proceeds were joined as parties to the suit. In the complaint the history of the divorce action is set forth at considerable length, and it is alleged that, in reliance upon the statements made in the answer and cross-complaint, and in the affidavit of Quinn, the property settlement was made; that the statements were untrue, and the settlement would not have been made but for the statements. As stated before, the essential facts are admitted either directly in the pleadings of the defendants or by statements of the defendant Quinn on the witness stand. In the complaint it is not in terms stated that the plaintiff desires to subject herself to any order which might be made in a court of equity, nor that she desires to do equity. There is no allegation nor was there any evidence of rescission or attempted rescission. The plaintiff prayed judgment "canceling, annulling, and setting aside" the agreement in the divorce action, the deeds from the plaintiff to Quinn, from the plaintiff and Quinn to Mrs. Riley, from Quinn to the plaintiff, and the interlocutory decree "so far as it affects the property"; that it be further adjudged and decreed that certain real property is the separate property of the plaintiff, and that all other property described in the complaint and "now standing in the name of the defendant Patrick P. Quinn, as well as that standing in the name of defendant Nellie E. Riley, is community property," and that Nellie E. Riley and Quinn be declared trustees of a trust in which the interest of the plaintiff should be determined; that the defendant should be required fully to account and the court decree the plaintiff to be the owner of one-half of the property in the possession or under the control of Quinn or Mrs. Riley; that the exact value of the property "wrongfully and fraudulently concealed" be determined as of the time of the settlement of the property rights in the divorce action, and the plaintiff decreed to be entitled to one-half thereof; and for general relief.

The findings and decree were very lengthy and determined that the plaintiff is entitled to $22,500, the value of one-half of the bonds and securities, with legal interest from the date of the interlocutory decree; that the recitals in the decree that the remainder of the community property should be awarded to Quinn and that the division was in absolute, entire, and complete satisfaction were made by reason of a settlement made out of court and obtained by Quinn from the plaintiff through fraud, by which the plaintiff was prevented from presenting to the court and obtaining a judicial investigation of the true facts; that the stipulation be annulled; that the plaintiff, in addition to the recovery of $22,500, be given a lien upon all of the personal and real property owned and possessed by the defendant Quinn; that Quinn and Fred J. Riley are involuntary trustees for the plaintiff of the real and personal property described in the decree as belonging to Quinn; that the plaintiff is the owner of the lot containing the six flats; that the plaintiff has no right in the property standing in the name of Mrs. Riley; that Quinn is the owner of the lots he took under the stipulation, charged with the trust for the payment of the $22,500; that the defendant is the owner of a certain lot to which the plaintiff has no right. The decree further appointed a commissioner to take possession of and sell the property, subject to the trust.

The appellant maintains that many of the findings are not supported by the evidence, and calls particular attention to the finding to the effect that, by means of the false pretenses, representations, answer, affidavit, and wrong concealment with intent to cheat and defraud the plaintiff, Quinn prevented the plaintiff from obtaining a judicial investigation and trial of the issue of property, upon which argument is made that the fraud in the present case was intrinsic in nature and not such fraud as equity will relieve against. This argument is made more fully by the appellants in another connection and will be considered with the point upon which it is most fully developed by the counsel for the appellant. Objection is made to a finding against the defendant in the matter of his alleged meritorious defense to the divorce action, and it is argued either that no such finding should have been made, or that there was no evidence to support the finding. A portion of the appellant's argument is based upon the question of whether or not relief in such a case as this can be given without setting aside the entire divorce decree. The argument upon this point presented upon behalf of the appellant will be considered in connection with that contention. Objection is made to the finding that one of the parcels of land was the separate property of the plaintiff, and it is argued that in such a case as this, under the general rule that the parties must be replaced in the respective positions they occupied at the time of the fraudulent agreement, if for any reason they cannot be so restored, equity is powerless to relieve against an admitted fraud. This also is more fully argued under other points made on behalf of the appellant.

[1] Appellant maintains that, since the property in issue in this action was community property, there was no issue upon which a finding could be made and no evidence to support a judgment quieting the plaintiff's title to the undivided one-half interest in the fee in any of the property. It is argued that, since the community property is under the absolute control of the husband, and the wife during the existence of the community has only an inchoate right to any of the property, it is beyond the power of the court in this suit to determine her interest in the property of the community. The community no longer exists. If in a divorce case the parties agree to a division of the community property, it is unnecessary for the court to adjudicate upon their respective interests in the former community property. If no such agreement is made, it is the duty of the court in which the divorce proceeding is pending to determine the relative interests of the spouses in their common accumulation. In this case the parties did in form agree upon substantially an equal division of the community property between them. The wife claims in this suit that in entering into the former agreement she was deluded and defrauded of her one-half interest in the $45,000 worth of securities secreted by the husband. The lower court awarded to her this one-half interest, and declared that the property of the former husband was burdened with a trust to pay her the amount of the award. If there was jurisdiction in the court to grant relief to the defrauded wife, under a well-established rule the court might make any decree within those principles of good conscience and fair dealing which are recognized as controlling the discretion of the chancellor.

[2] Under the rule of rescission, the appellant contends that, since the plaintiff did not offer to return to the defendant the property received by her under the stipulation, she has failed to bring herself within the requirement that one who seeks relief at the hands of a court of equity must first do equity. It is further argued that, since the attack is upon the divorce decree, the decree must be set aside in its entirety, if at all, and because the parties cannot be restored to their original positions, a court of equity can give the defrauded wife no relief. The fallacy of the first of these contentions is that in this suit the wife was not seeking to have any new evaluation made of the property which had been divided, for the purpose of redivision, but was seeking only one-half of the property which had been secreted. Nothing would have been gained by undoing what had been done in regard to the property divided, and the law does not require idle things to be done. The result would have been the same if she had herself deeded back the property she received, or if the court, upon the evidence submitted to it, had decreed that she owned the property she had formerly received and was entitled to $22,500 more.

"It is not an invariable rule that rescission of a contract obtained by fraud will be denied merely upon the ground that the parties cannot be placed in statu quo. * * * Parties engaged in a fraudulent attempt to obtain a neighbor's property are not the objects of the special solicitude of the courts. * * * Restoration is not exacted on account of any feeling of partiality in regard to the fraudulent party. The law cares very little what his loss may be and exacts nothing for his sake." Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 389, 390, 80 Pac. 234, 238.

[3-5] In regard to the second contention under this point:

"The judgment is not under review, but an issue is being tried as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to have a court of equity interpose in her behalf. The judgment is not conclusive in such a case. The question to be determined is whether the adjudication was not procured by fraud or mistake. It may be said that in such a case the legal validity of the judgment is admitted, and it is because of its validity, or apparent validity, that the plaintiff requires to be relieved from it." Eichhoff v. Eichhoff, 107 Cal. 48, 40 Pac. 25, 48 Am. St. Rep. 110.

It is not necessary, under the rule announced in Green v. Duvergey, supra, that a divorce decree be set aside either in whole or in part. The sole question is whether or not, under the facts of the present case, the court had power to grant relief to the defrauded wife. This question is the one raised by the general demurrer of the defendant, his motion at the opening of the trial to exclude all evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint, and his attack upon the judgment here. All of his other contentions merge in the determination of this contention. In reliance upon United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93, Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159, and a long line of decisions announcing the same principle, the appellant maintains that no relief can be granted the plaintiff in this action because the admitted fraud was intrinsic and should have been uncovered in the original suit. Lengthy quotations are made in the appellants' brief from these cases. There could be no question in regard to the application of the rule if the fraud in the present case were intrinsic. The appellant forcefully argues that, because the plaintiff claims she was deceived by the statements in the answer and cross-complaint filed in the divorce suit, and in the affidavit made by Quinn, the fraud was necessarily intrinsic, and says that, "if a party may be allowed to litigate anew the matters in controversy on the ground that she relied on her adversary's pleading, then trials might be dispensed with altogether, for their functions would have ceased." This position of appellant cannot be maintained. The statement of its corollary shows its fallacy as applied to the facts here. If the statements made by Quinn had not been made in his pleading or in his affidavit filed in the suit, but had been made to the plaintiff out of court, under the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant, they might have furnished a reason for a court of equity relieving the plaintiff from the fraud practiced upon her. Can it be said that untrue statements by which the plaintiff was deceived lost anything of their effect by having been sworn to and filed in the pending divorce action? To answer this question in the affirmative would be to suggest a ready means for dishonest persons to accomplish fraudulent results. The rule is that false statements made upon the record will not warrant the setting aside of the judgment because the court was deceived by them. Here there is no contention made that the court was deceived, but that the respondent was deceived, and induced thereby to enter into the fraudulent agreement. The false statements were made. The lower court found upon evidence to that effect that the plaintiff relied upon the statements and entered into a contract which was made out of court. The plaintiff claimed the aid of a court of equity, not because the false statements were sworn to, but because they were false. She does not seek relief from the judgment because it was based on perjured testimony, but because she was induced by false statements to enter into a contract out of court by which she was precluded from submitting to the court the very questions which but for the contract would have been submitted to judicial investigation. In the leading case in this state, Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 Pac. 970, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159, where a judgment was rendered upon perjured evidence induced by bribery, the court, in holding that equity would not relieve from such a fraud, in its opinion asked and answered the question of what is an extrinsic or collateral fraud within the meaning of the rule.

"Among the instances given in the books are such as these: Keeping the unsuccessful party away from the court by a false promise of compromise, or purposely keeping him in ignorance of the suit, or where an attorney fraudulently pretends to represent a party and connives at his defeat, or, being regularly employed, corruptly sells out his client's interest. * * * In all such instances the unsuccessful party is really prevented, by the fraudulent contrivance of his adversary from having a trial; but, when he has a trial, he must be prepared to meet and expose perjury then and there." Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 139, 25 Pac. 971, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159.

In this case, by the fraudulent contrivance of Quinn, the lower court found the plaintiff was prevented from having a trial upon the issue raised by the pleadings in regard to the amount of the community property.

[6] It has too often been stated to require the citation of authority that equity will not attempt to put a fence around fraud nor to define just what form of deceit is fraudulent. The suggestion in Pico v. Cohn of certain things which had been determined to be collateral fraud was never intended to be and was not a recital of all of the devices in which dishonest men may engage to prevent the trial of issues of fact.

[7] It is argued that because the court found, pursuant to the fraudulent contract, that the division of community property in accordance with its terms was in absolute, entire, and complete satisfaction and discharge of all claims which either party might assert to the other, there was an adjudication beyond the reach of the court of equity because, as well stated by counsel for the appellant, a judgment entered into upon a stipulation of the parties is as sacred and unimpeachable as any other judgment. It is equally true that such a judgment is no more sacred than any other judgment. Counsel say:

"If the property rights of the parties to the divorce action had been withdrawn entirely from the case, a different question might have arisen. If the decree had been silent as to property, a different question might have arisen."

They were withdrawn. The stipulation, as has been shown, expressly provided that they be incorporated in the judgment as agreed upon, and the judgment expressly incorporated them. There was no trial upon the property issues. The stipulation itself shows there was no judicial examination of the facts regarding the property issues. These matters were as effectually withdrawn from any judicial consideration as if they had been expressly withdrawn by the stipulation. If the statement of counsel be true that a different case would have been presented if the stipulation had declared what was the fact—that the court was not to adjudicate upon the property issues, but to enter a decree in accordance with the agreement of the parties—it follows that all that a dishonest party litigant need do to make his fraudulent contract effective is to go one step further in his scheme of fraud and stipulate that the court in its decree shall follow the language of the fraudulent stipulation. Such a conclusion would be intolerable. The case falls within that class where chancellors have repeated in every conceivable way that the effort on the part of the fraudulent actor more securely to bind his victim is itself one of the most convincing evidences of fraud.

[8] As was said by the Supreme Court, speaking by Mr. Justice Crockett:

"It would be a reproach to the administration of justice if such transactions were beyond the reach of a court of equity, whose peculiar province is to strip off the flimsy disguises in which fraudulent actions are so often clothed, and to regard the substance, rather than the form." Perkins v. Center, 35 Cal. 721.

From the appellant's brief it appears that after this case was argued and submitted in the court below the Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, decided the case of Vrag-nizan v. Savings Union, etc., Co., 31 Cal. App. 709, 161 Pac. 507, and that the respondent relies upon that case. It is sought to distinguish that case from the present one because the fraudulent stipulation in that case expressly withdrew from the consideration of the court the issues in regard to community property. But in this case the fraudulent stipulation just as effectually withdrew those issues from the consideration of the court, and expressly provided that the court should find and make its decree in accordance with the fraudulent recitals in the stipulation. There is no difference in principle between the two cases.

[9] The appellant argues that, under the rule by which equity denies relief in those cases where the adverse party has been guilty of negligence or lack of diligence, the plaintiff in this case was armed with the strongest weapon—that of cross-examination of the defendant—and because she failed to exercise it she should be denied relief in this suit. In the larger object of defrauding the plaintiff the very purpose and effect of the stipulation was to cause her to lay down this strong weapon of defense. By reason of the fraudulent stipulation the plaintiff was deprived alike of her privilege of cross-examination of defendant and of her right to have a judicial determination in regard to the amount of the community property. Because of the defendant's fraud, he was subjected to examination in the present case, and the court did investigate the question of the amount of community property and determined that the plaintiff was entitled to one-half of that which, in this case, the defendant admitted he had fraudulently secreted.

The judgment is affirmed.

40 Cal. App. 407

DREISBACH et al. v. BRADEN, Sheriff,
et al. (Civ. 1909.)

1. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES ⚡137(2) — FAILURE TO DELIVER TO EXECUTION SALE PURCHASER—PLEADING.

In execution sale purchaser's action against sheriff for failure to deliver goods purchased, answer denying that sheriff "has failed and neglected, or failed or neglected, or refused, in any manner or at all, to deliver," held sufficient denial of failure to deliver, notwithstanding admission that actual possession was not delivered, where property was alleged to be incapable of actual delivery.

2. TRIAL ⚡404(1) — FINDINGS — CONSTRUCTION.

In execution sale purchaser's action against sheriff for failure to deliver, court held to have found that the property was taken possession of by the sheriff, where it found that allegations of a paragraph of the complaint were true, and where such paragraph of the complaint alleged that sheriff took possession of the property.

3. TRIAL ⚡404(1) — FINDINGS — CONSTRUCTION.

In execution sale purchaser's action against sheriff for failure to deliver property purchased, finding that property was delivered to purchaser was a sufficient finding upon the question whether the property was capable of manual delivery.

4. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES ⚡107—EXECUTION SALE — PROPERTY INCAPABLE OF MANUAL DELIVERY.

Where 50 tons of chrome ore were sold at execution sale, the sheriff was not required to make actual delivery to the purchaser where no request therefor was made by the purchaser at the time of delivery of the certificate of sale, under Code Civ. Proc. § 698, such ore being incapable of manual delivery within section 699.

5. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES ⚡107 — EXECUTION SALE—DUTY OF SHERIFF—DISPOSITION AS TO POSSESSION OF PROPERTY.

It is not the sheriff's duty to settle disputes arising after execution sales and delivery to purchaser of certificate of sale, between the purchasers and third parties, as to right of possession of the property.

6. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES ⚡22—EXECUTION SALE—ATTACHMENT OF GOODS.

In execution sale purchaser's action against sheriff for failure to deliver goods purchased, where the goods were situated in the shed of a third party claiming a lien thereon for transportation charges, but sheriff in attaching goods had placed deputy sheriff in charge thereof, such third party was not the custodian of the goods under the sheriff's authority.

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by F. M. Dreisbach and E. A. Dickey, copartners doing business under the name of Zenith Chrome Mining Company, against Louis A. Braden, as sheriff of the county of Plumas, state of California, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

C. L. Colvin, of Oakland, for appellants.

M. C. Kerr and H. B. Wolfe, both of Quincy, for respondents.

HART, J. The defendant Braden, as sheriff of Plumas county, and the National Surety Company, as the surety on his official bond, were sued by plaintiffs for the sum of $1,050, the alleged value of about 50 tons of chrome ore which they had purchased at an execution sale, and which they alleged the sheriff had not delivered to them, and for damages caused to them by his failure so to deliver said ore. Defendants had judgment, from which plaintiffs prosecute this appeal.

The first finding of the court was: That all the allegations in plaintiffs' complaint in paragraphs 1 to 11, inclusive, are true.

Said paragraphs of the complaint, briefly, are: That plaintiffs at all times mentioned were copartners under the name of Zenith Chrome Mining Company, and have complied with the laws of the state relative to copartnerships; that the defendant National Surety Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New York, and authorized to do business in the state of California; that defendant Braden is the sheriff of Plumas county, and that he executed an official bond, with the usual covenants, with the defendant National Surety Company as surety, which was duly approved as required by law; that on or about the 22d day of July, 1916, plaintiffs brought an action in the superior court of Plumas county against one C. W. Adams for the recovery of a sum of money alleged to be due and owing to them from said Adams; that at the time of filing said complaint plaintiffs filed the usual affidavit for the issuance of an attachment, and that an attachment was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff, which he served by attaching about 140 tons of chrome ore by taking the same into his custody and putting a keeper in charge thereof; that on the 31st day of July, 1916, the sheriff made a return on said writ in which he certified that he had levied upon and taken possession of said 140 tons of ore; that on December 13, 1916, a judgment was rendered in said action in favor of plaintiffs and against said C. W. Adams for the sum of $305 and costs; and on the same day execution was issued on said judgment, directing the sheriff to make the same out of property belonging to said Adams; that the sheriff levied upon about 90 tons of chrome ore, being a portion of the 140 tons attached, and on December 27, 1916, he sold the same after due and regular notice of such sale.

The court then found that defendant Braden, as sheriff, "did deliver the possession of all property sold under execution to said plaintiffs as required by law."

Appellants complain of this last finding, urging that it is contrary to the evidence, and also that it is insufficient as a finding upon further allegations of the complaint.

The twelfth paragraph of the complaint was that at said execution sale plaintiffs became the purchasers of the said 90 tons of chrome ore from the said sheriff; that at the time of the said purchase the property so purchased was in the possession and under the control of the sheriff; that plaintiffs, as such purchasers, paid the sheriff the full amount of the purchase price and demanded delivery of the property; that the sheriff did deliver to them about 34 tons of the property purchased by them; but failed and neglected to deliver about 50 tons thereof.

In the thirteenth paragraph it is alleged that plaintiffs were the highest bidders for the property so purchased at said sale, and that the sheriff delivered to them a certificate of sale of about 90 tons of chrome ore. Written demand upon the sheriff to deliver said property was alleged and his refusal so to do, and that he has converted 50 tons to his own use. There were allegations as to the value of the property and the amount expended by plaintiffs in pursuit thereof.

The answer of defendants contained the following affirmative allegations: That the sheriff "levied upon about 34 tons of chrome ore then upon and under the depot station of the Western Pacific Railway Company's depot at Keddie, Plumas county, Cal., then represented by plaintiffs to defendant Braden as the property of said C. W. Adams, and thereupon placed a keeper in charge thereof; that at said time and pursuant to said writ said defendant Braden levied upon * * * about 50 tons of chrome ore situated in the barn of one W. C. Lawrence at Keddie, * * * at which time, and in the presence of plaintiffs, and of their attorney, L. N. Peter, the said W. C. Lawrence claimed said ore, and claimed and asserted a lien thereon for and on account of transportation of the same from the place where mined to the place where stored, and claimed to be and was then in possession thereof."

It appears that the plaintiffs brought two actions against the sheriff, one for the value of the property sold, the other for a failure to make a return to the execution. By stipulation both cases were tried together. A motion for a new trial was made in each case, and the same bill of exceptions was used on both. The result is that there is considerable testimony in the record which does not apply to the case before us.

Preliminarily, certain points made as to the issues tendered by the answer and as to the findings should be considered and disposed of.

[1] The appellants are in error in the statement in their opening brief that the answer does not deny that the sheriff failed to deliver to the plaintiffs the ore in the Lawrence shed, and in the further statement that "all through the answer it is virtually admitted that he did not deliver the property." In paragraph 8 it is denied that "defendant Braden, as sheriff, has failed and neglected, or failed or neglected or refused, in any manner or at all, to deliver all the property set forth and described in said certificate of sale." The answer, it is true, admits that the actual possession of the property was not delivered to the plaintiffs, but declares that said property was not capable of manual delivery. The answer, it may well be admitted, is not a model pleading of the "negative" kind, but there was no demurrer thereto, and the denial referred to was sufficient to raise the issue as to the delivery of the property to the plaintiffs.

[2] It is next asserted that the court failed to find upon the question whether, at the time the property was purchased by the plaintiffs, the property so purchased was in the possession and under the control of the defendant Braden. The contention is unfounded. Paragraph 7 of the complaint alleges that at the time of the purchase of the property by the plaintiffs said property was taken into possession by said Braden and a keeper put in charge thereof by him. The court found that all of the allegations of said paragraph 7 of the complaint are true.

[3] The objection that the court failed to make a specific finding upon the question whether the property was or was not capable of manual delivery is without merit in view of the finding that the property was delivered to the plaintiffs.

There are other objections with respect to the findings which do not call for special notice.

We will now proceed to a consideration of the merits of the case.

The whole controversy here rests, in the main, upon the solution of the question whether the property sold by the sheriff to the plaintiffs was capable of manual delivery. Another point which the appellants attempt to sustain is that the sheriff, upon attaching the ore, made one Lawrence the custodian of a certain portion of the seized property, and that, upon the sale under the execution taking place, said Lawrence refused to deliver the ore to the plaintiffs. Thus it is claimed, as the complaint charges, the defendant Braden converted the ore to his own use.

The circumstances attending the seizure of the property by attachment and the subsequent sale thereof under the execution by the sheriff are these: The defendant, as sheriff at the time of the issuance of summons in the case of the plaintiffs against the said C. W. Adams, levied, under written instructions from the attorney of the plaintiffs, an attachment on about 140 tons of chrome ore, about 40 or 45 tons of which were situated at the time of the levy in a wagon shed on the premises of one W. C. Lawrence; that the sheriff, upon making said levy, placed in charge of the chrome ore so attached, as keeper, one L. P. McIntyre, a deputy sheriff under the defendant Braden; that at about the moment of time the levy was made on the ore situated in the shed of said Lawrence the latter put in an appearance, whereupon he was asked by L. N. Peter, attorney for the plaintiffs, who, with the plaintiffs, was present when the levy was made, whether he (Lawrence) had any claim on the ore in the shed, and he replied that he had, the same being due for hauling or transporting the ore from the mine; that the sheriff then said to Lawrence that he would have to attach the ore, to which statement Lawrence replied: "You can go ahead and attach it, but you cannot move it. I hold a lien against it for hauling it from the mine." As stated, McIntyre, as the defendant Braden's deputy, was placed and left in charge of the ore as the sheriff's keeper, and so remained until judgment was obtained and execution thereupon issued in the case. What occurred after the writ of execution was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff may best be told by the testimony of that official and also that of McIntyre. The sheriff testified, in part, as follows:

"I made a sale of the ore on the platform and also that in the shed. I do not think that Mr. Lawrence was present. I do not think that it was physically possible for me to make a delivery of the ore at the time of the sale. I would have had to get a team and horse. I might have done it in time. The weight of the ore in the shed was about 40 tons. The sale took place at Keddie, near the depot. * * * Mr. Nutting was there at the time. He was there as attorney for the plaintiffs. No demand was made by him for actual delivery. I made the sale. The money was turned over. We came back to town, and I gave him a certificate of sale. Mr. Nutting was present at that time, and Mr. Dickey. At that time there was no objection made, nor any demand for actual delivery. That property is not in my possession at the present time. I have not had control nor possession of the property since the sale. * * * I do not think that he (L. P. McIntyre) ever delivered it over to the purchasers, because Lawrence had a claim against it, and would not let it go. Lawrence never gave me any written claim. * * * I do not know what became of the ore in Lawrence's shed. I did not have anything to do with it after I sold it. I discharged McIntyre at the time of the sale." The sheriff further testified that, while in the first instance Lawrence claimed that he had a lien on the ore in his shed for services performed in hauling said ore from the mine, he later notified the sheriff to remove it from the shed, as he was in need of the use of the shed for other purposes and did not want the ore to be kept therein any longer. This conversation (said the sheriff) occurred a short time prior to the sale under the execution. At that time Lawrence said nothing about claiming a lien on the ore. The reason the sheriff gave for not removing the ore from Lawrence's shed was that a Mr. Nutting, who was also an attorney for the plaintiffs, advised him to do nothing in that regard "until I heard from him."

L. P. McIntyre, the deputy sheriff, who was made keeper of the attached property by the defendant sheriff, testified:

"I was put in charge of the ore. I was in charge of it from the day of the attachment until the day of the sale. That was from somewhere in the latter part of July until the first part of January or the latter part of December. I was there at the time of the sale. Mr. Dickey, Mr. Braden, and Mr. Nutting were there. There was no demand made by Mr. Dickey or Mr. Nutting on Mr. Braden that manual delivery be made of the ore in Lawrence's shed. I never heard them make any demand for any such thing. * * * I considered I was discharged from custody when the sale of the ore was made. I did not regard it as the proper thing to deliver the ore to the purchasers. I would not deliver that ore to any one."

It appears that the plaintiffs, neither at the time of the sale nor when the sheriff delivered to them the certificate of sale, demanded of that officer manual delivery of the ore. Indeed, it is clear from the evidence that they were perfectly satisfied with the situation after the sheriff's certificate was delivered to them until the time when Lawrence refused to permit them to take or remove the portion of the ore purchased by them which was at all times, from the date of the levying of the writ of attachment, situated in his (Lawrence's) shed.

The foregoing embraces a statement of the facts sufficient for the purposes of the decision of the point presented.

The contention of the appellants is that it was the duty of the sheriff to deliver the ore to them by manual tradition, while the respondents maintain that the property sold is of a character which rendered manual delivery thereof impossible, or, at least, impracticable, and that, therefore, the mere execution and delivery by the sheriff to the appellants of a certificate of sale was as far as that officer could go, or, in fact, that could practicably be done by him with personal property of the nature of that which was the subject of the sale.

Section 698 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires an officer making a sale of personal property under an execution, where the same is capable of manual delivery, to deliver such property to the purchaser upon the payment of the purchase money by the latter. If desired, the officer must also execute and deliver to the purchaser a certificate of sale. Where, however, personal property so sold is not capable of manual delivery, the officer making the sale is, by the terms of section 699 of the same code, required only to execute and deliver to the purchaser, upon payment of the purchase money by the latter, a certificate of sale. In either case the certificate so executed and delivered conveys all the right the debtor had in such property on the day the execution or attachment was levied.

1. It has been held that where personal property levied upon by attachment is of such a ponderable character as that its actual possession cannot be taken, and its removal for that purpose effected by the officer levying the writ without injury to such property or great expense, the taking of actual possession by the officer or its removal to effectuate such possession may be dispensed with. It has frequently been held that "with regard to heavy and unmanageable articles there seems to be no necessity for an actual handling to constitute an attachment." See cases and other authorities cited in footnote of Hollister v. Goodale, 21 Am. Dec. 680. For further illustration, it has been held, under statutes similar to our own, that a stack of grain may be levied upon by going to it and making a formal levy, and forbidding the defendant from touching it. Gallagher v. Bishop, 15 Wis. 276. Again, a similar levy upon hewn stones (Hemmenway v. Wheeler, 14 Pick. [Mass.] 408, 25 Am. Dec. 411; Polley v. Iron Works, 4 Allen [Mass.] 329), on iron ore (Mills v. Camp, 14 Conn. 219, 36 Am. Dec. 488), and on mill logs (Bicknell v. Trickley, 34 Me. 273), has been upheld as sufficient.

In the case at bar the validity of the seizure by attachment is not challenged. Nor is it questioned that the sheriff, upon levying the writ of attachment, took legal possession of the ore and continued in such possession to the time of the sale of the property under the writ of execution. Indeed, the appellants themselves insist throughout their whole argument that the sheriff took and had such possession. But, as has been observed, they say that, upon the sale being made to them under the writ of execution, it was the legal duty of the sheriff to have made an actual physical delivery of the ore into their possession.

[4] We believe the property so sold to them was of a character that manual delivery thereof could not conveniently and without great expense be made by the sheriff. That officer could not nor was it expected of him to attempt so impracticable, and, indeed, so preposterous, an act as to deliver the ore to the plaintiffs piece by piece. The most he could have done would have been to have loaded the ore on a wagon or truck, and by such means have hauled, or caused it to be hauled, and so delivered, to some place or point designated by the plaintiffs. He was not asked by the plaintiffs to do this, nor do we think he was required to do it; for, as stated, it would obviously have involved great expense to do so, thus adding to the costs, and so creating an additional burden which ultimately would fall on the shoulders of the debtor. Having made the sale to the plaintiffs and delivered to them the certificate of sale, the latter thereby acquired all the right the debtor had in the ore. They knew where the ore was situated and it was up to them to take possession of it. As to the claim that Lawrence made to a lien on the ore in his shed, it is to be remarked that the plaintiffs were at all times, from the time the writ of attachment was levied on the ore, aware of said claim. With such knowledge they accepted the certificate of sale without then making a demand on the sheriff for a manual delivery to them of the ore, and only made such demand after Lawrence had refused to deliver to them the ore that was in his shed at the time of the levy.

[5] Obviously, it was not incumbent on the sheriff as a legal duty to settle any disputes which might, after the sale and the delivery by him to the plaintiffs of the certificate of sale, arise between plaintiffs and third parties as to the right to the possession of the property. But however this all may be, it is, as above declared, clear to our minds that the property is of that character and of such bulk in quantity that it was not capable of manual delivery, and that the sheriff, in the sale thereof under the execution sale, did all that the statute required of him by making symbolical delivery thereof to the plaintiffs. Indeed, we can conceive of no case where section 699 of the Code of Civil Procedure would be more applicable than it is to the facts of this case.

[6] 2. The proposition that Lawrence was the custodian of the ore situated in his shed as the appointee and agent of the sheriff is not supported either by the evidence or the findings. McIntyre, the deputy sheriff, was by the sheriff placed in charge of all the ore seized by the latter under the writ of attachment, and remained in the capacity of keeper of the property until it was sold to satisfy the judgment against Adams. It is true that the ore attached in the shed of Lawrence was allowed to remain there, but it was at all times in the legal custody of the sheriff through his keeper. There is not a word of testimony that Lawrence acted or was ever authorized to act as custodian of the ore for the sheriff.

The case of Aigeltinger v. Whelan, 133 Cal. 110, 65 Pac. 125, cited by appellants, in its facts bears no resemblance to this case. There the sheriff levied an attachment upon certain personal property, and placed the same in a warehouse in charge of a keeper. Nearly two years later judgment was given in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff in the action in which the writ of attachment was issued. Thereupon one of the defendants demanded of the sheriff that he return the property taken by him under the attachment, but the sheriff answered that he did not have the property, but that he had stored it in a warehouse, and that the warehouseman had sold it for storage. The sheriff made no claim of lien on the property for any costs, charges, or keeper's fees. All these facts were proved at the trial, and it was held by the Supreme Court, in sustaining the judgment of the court below against the sheriff, that the latter, being charged with the duty of safely keeping the seized property and restoring the same to the defendant on his recovering judgment (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 540, 553), violated the duty so enjoined upon him by allowing the property to be sold or so disposed of. Thus it will readily be perceived that that case has no pertinent application to the facts of the instant case.

Our conclusion is that the plaintiffs have failed to make out a case against the sheriff, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

HARTFIELD v. HOWARD et al.
(L. A. 4949.)(Supreme Court of California. May 14, 1919.
Rehearing Denied June 12, 1919.)MECHANICS' LIENS — 279 — PRIORITIES — BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where plaintiff alleged upon information and belief that defendants' claims are subject to and subservient to plaintiff's, and defendants' answer alleged that their interest is prior and superior to that of plaintiff, defendants had the burden of establishing prior claim; and, where they introduced no evidence as to their interest or title, the court erred in adjudging plaintiff's mechanic's lien subject to interest of a defendant.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by A. J. Hartfield against Charles W. Howard and others. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. Judgment modified, and as modified, affirmed.

S. C. Schaefer, of San Pedro, and A. R. Holston, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Milton K. Young, of Los Angeles, and Byron Coleman, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff foreclosing his mechanic's lien. He appeals from that portion of the decree adjudicating his lien to be subsequent to the interest of the defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company. The complaint contained the allegation:

"That all of the defendants claim to have some interest or estate in said property and parcel of land, but this plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore alleges on information and belief, that said claims are subject to and subservient to plaintiff's claim."

The defendants Title Guarantee & Trust Company and Fidelity Savings & Loan Association joined in an answer containing the following allegation:

"Said defendants Title Guarantee & Trust Company and Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, admit that they have and claim to have some interest in the real property described in plaintiff's complaint, and allege that the interest of said defendants therein is prior and superior to that of said plaintiff."

Findings were waived. No evidence was introduced upon the subject of the interest or title of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company in the premises. Appellant claims that, as the burden of proof was upon this defendant to establish its prior claim, the portion of the judgment appealed from is erroneous. This conclusion is sustained by the opinion in Harmon v. Ashmead, 68 Cal. 321, 9 Pac. 183, wherein, under similar circumstances, it was said:

"Conceding that the denial of the defendants raised an issue, we think it was one of which they had the affirmative, and as they introduced no evidence to support it, the court was justified in finding that their lien was subordinate and subject to the plaintiffs'."

It was in that case conceded, for the purposes of the case, that the denial of the allegation that the claims of the defendants were subordinate to the plaintiff's lien raised a material issue. That matter has since frequently been considered by this court, and it has been held that the denial of such a general allegation does not raise an issue. Beronio v. Ventura County Lumber Co., 129 Cal. 232, 61 Pac. 958, 79 Am. St. Rep. 118, was a suit to quiet title, in which the defendant claimed that as the plaintiffs had been made parties defendant in a previous foreclosure suit, and the court had decreed in that action that their rights and interests in the mortgaged premises were subsequent to the mortgage, they were thereby estopped from asserting any claim therein adverse to the title derived by defendants by the foreclosure sale. The court there said with reference to such a general averment in the complaint:

"Such averment is not material to the plaintiff's cause of action, nor is it an issuable fact, and whether the court rendered judgment upon the default of the defendant, or upon an issue created by his denial of this averment, without setting forth the character of his interest, any prior interest held by him is not affected by such judgment"—citing Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 502, 61 Am. Dec. 706; Frost v. Koon, 30 N. Y. 428; Smith v. Roberts, 91 N. Y. 470; Payn v. Grant, 23 Hun, 134; Elder v. Spinks, 53 Cal. 293; Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 600, 29 Pac. 220.

In applying that principle to the case, it was further said:

"It does not appear that in the foreclosure suit there was any adjudication upon the title of the plaintiffs which is set forth in the complaint herein, or that their claim that their interest in the mortgaged premises is superior to that derived under the mortgage was submitted to that court for determination, or was determined by it. The allegation in the complaint therein that they claimed an interest in the mortgaged premises, and that this claim was subsequent and subordinate to said mortgage, did not present this issue for determination. The averment that their claim was 'subordinate' to the mortgage was but a legal conclusion, and the allegation of fact upon which that conclusion depended—that the claim was subsequent to the mortgage—negated any claim that it was prior thereto. The answer of these plaintiffs was but a denial of these allegations, and their admission that they had an interest in said premises as purchasers was not only consistent with the allegations of the complaint and the object of the foreclosure suit, but failed to present any issue upon a claim of title superior to that covered by the mortgage, or upon the validity of such title. No facts were alleged, either in the complaint or in their answer, by which an issue upon their title or claim was presented to the court or made a subject for its determination. * * * and its finding and decree thereon that their claim and interest were subsequent and subordinate to said mortgage is of no higher force than if made upon their default."

Later, in an appeal from a decree of foreclosure, in the case of Wardlow v. Middleton, 156 Cal. 585, 105 Pac. 738, the court had under consideration the findings and judgment wherein it was declared that the interest of the two Tuckers, defendants and appellants, was acquired after the giving of the mortgage to the plaintiff. The complaint contained the usual allegation in regard to the interest of the Tuckers being subsequent to the mortgage lien. They answered, denying the nonpayment of the mortgage, but not traversing the allegation that their interest was subsequent to the mortgage. The court disposed of the appellants' claims on appeal by saying:

"It is objected that his finding and recital is not sustained by any evidence. There is no evidence on the subject. None was necessary, the allegation of the complaint thereon being admitted by the pleadings. The finding could neither add to nor detract from its force. The effect of such an admission, where the party by cross-complaint or otherwise does not present any prior claim, is that the foreclosure judgment and sale will bar all liens, rights, and interests acquired from the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage, but will not bar rights or claims prior and superior to the mortgage. McComb v. Spangler, 71 Cal. 424, 12 Pac. 347; Ord v. Bartlett, 83 Cal. 431, 23 Pac. 705; Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 608, 29 Pac. 220. The finding and recital, being outside the issues, are surplusage, and are not only not conclusive upon the appellants, but are not competent evidence against them in any other action. Collins v. Gray, 154 Cal. 135, 97 Pac. 142; Bank of Visalia v. Smith, 146 Cal. 402, 81 Pac. 542."

Where it appears from the answer of the defendants that they claim an interest prior and adverse to the plaintiff's lien, as it did in this case, the proper course for the trial court is indicated in Beronio v. Ventura Lumber Co., supra, as follows:

"Whenever it is made to appear that the interest of a defendant is adverse or superior to that covered by the mortgage, the proper action of the court is to dismiss him from the suit. Ord v. Bartlett, 83 Cal. 428 [23 Pac. 705]; Code v. Bean, 93 Cal. 578 [29 Pac. 223]; Hoppe v. Fountain, 104 Cal. 94 [37 Pac. 894]."

Or the court could specify in its decree that it is made without prejudice to the adverse rights of the defendant. Ord v. Bartlett, 83 Cal. 428, 431, 432, 23 Pac. 705.

A decree adjudicating the priority of defendant's lien or interest without evidence or pleading justifying such decree was erroneous.

It is stated in respondents' brief that the only interest of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company was as trustee in the trust deed securing the indebtedness due to the defendant Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, which lien was by the decree declared to be prior to plaintiff's claim, and from which adjudication no appeal was taken. It appears from the bill of exceptions that the defendants introduced in evidence a contract signed by appellant, recognizing the prior existence of the trust deed, in favor of the defendant Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, and expressly agreeing that the claims of the lien claimants, including the lien of appellant, should be subject to and subordinate to the claim of the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, but this agreement fails to disclose the name of the trustee in the trust deed. Strangely enough, appellant denies knowledge of the fact stated by respondents. We cannot therefore consider such statement in determining this appeal. For the same reason it is unnecessary to consider the argument of the respondent based upon the hypothesis that even if the Title Guarantee & Trust Company were the trustees in a trust deed securing the payment of money, such deed was nevertheless subordinate to respondents' lien. In order to correct the judgment so that there will be no adjudication upon the claim of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, the court is directed to modify the judgment by striking out the fifth paragraph thereof and to insert in lieu thereof the following to wit:

"And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said claim of the plaintiff was at the time of the commencement of this action and this judgment and decree in that behalf were and are prior and superior to any right, title, interest, or estate of the defendants Charles W. Howard, Hunziker & Berger (a copartnership), E. P. Hunziker, E. C. A. Berger, Mary W. Crutsinger, Josephine Hunziker, and W. W. Paden, and each of them, in or to said premises and the whole thereof, but that said claim of the plaintiff herein and this judgment and decree in that behalf was and is subsequent and subservient to the interest of the defendant Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, a corporation, which said last-named defendant's interests are superior to said claim of the plaintiff herein; provided that nothing in this judgment shall be construed or held to prejudice or affect the rights of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company accruing prior to the date when the plaintiff's lien attached to the property."

As so modified the judgment is affirmed.

HASSON v. KOEBERLE et al. (L. A. 4828.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⇨244(4) — DONATION OF SHARES OF STOCK—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Where stockholders intended to donate, and corporation intended to receive, certain number of shares of stock, and the original certificates issued were canceled and new certificates issued for the number of shares represented by the original certificates less the number of shares donated, the transfer effectively placed shares donated under the control of the corporation, and the donation must be held valid against collateral attack.

2. CORPORATIONS ⇨232(1) — STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—AMOUNT OF UNPAID SUBSCRIPTION.

Where stock is sold for money, and the purchase price is less than the par value, the difference between the par value and the amount actually paid is the measure of the stockholders' liability to creditors.

3. CORPORATIONS ⇨232(3) — ISSUANCE OF STOCK—EXCHANGE FOR PROPERTY—LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Where stock is issued for property having no generally defined value, the rule is that where the corporation and stockholders have agreed upon a given valuation for the property such valuation is binding and conclusive, unless it is fraudulent in purpose or effect.

4. CORPORATIONS ⇨232(3)—STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—STOCK ISSUED ON EXCESSIVE VALUE OF PROPERTY.

If the parties have put upon the property a valuation in excess of what they knew or believed to be its true value, it is a constructive fraud upon the creditors of the corporation, and stock will be deemed paid only to the extent of the actual value of the property received in exchange for it.

5. CORPORATIONS ⇨232(3)—STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—MINING CORPORATIONS—RULE APPLICABLE.

The rule that, where stock of corporation is issued as fully paid in exchange for property at a known overvaluation, the creditors of the corporation, in case of its insolvency, may recover from each stockholder a sum equal to the amount unpaid upon his subscription, applies to all classes of corporations, including mining corporations, regardless of custom to fix mining shares at a purely arbitrary value.

6. CORPORATIONS ⇨232(3)—STOCK ISSUED ON EXCESSIVE VALUATION OF PROPERTY.

Unless the corporators knew or believed that mining claims given by them to the corporation in exchange for shares of stock were worth the par value of the stock received by them, or if their belief was reached without intelligent examination into the value by including items not really property, or by the influence of self-interest, the issuance of stock would be a violation of constitutional and statutory provision authorizing issuance to the amount of value of property.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Separate actions by Mrs. C. N. Hasson against J. E. Koeberle, Ludwig Gossman, and the Ord Mountain Gold Company. Actions against the two defendants first mentioned were tried together, and from a single judgment in their favor plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Samuel H. Pardue, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jones & Evans and Mattison B. Jones, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LENNON, J. On March 7, 1907, the Ord Mountain Gold Company was an Arizona corporation, with a capital stock of 1,000,000 shares of the par value of $1 each. On that date, the directors held a meeting for the purpose of organization, and issued 450,000 shares each to T. N. Hasson and George L. Hasson, respectively, and the remaining 100,000 to one Steadman. Thereupon the Hassons each undertook to donate back to the corporation 250,000 shares by means of the cancellation of the original certificates and the issuance of new certificates for the lesser number of shares then remaining to each donor. The original issue to the Hassons was made in consideration of the transfer of certain mining properties to the corporation. On March 15, 1907, the corporation issued to the defendant Gossman 5,000 shares of stock, for which he paid $250. On March 11 and on April 30, 1907, issues totaling 4,000 shares were made to the defendant Koeberle for the sum of $200.

In 1914, the plaintiff obtained a judgment against the company for $7,518.92, and, the corporation being insolvent, execution thereon failed and the judgment remained unsatisfied. In January, 1915, the plaintiff brought separate actions against the defendants Gossman and Koeberle as shareholders in the corporation contending: (1) That the stock was issued to the Hassons for property taken at a gross overvaluation; (2) that by an application of the rule of Herron v. Shaw, 165 Cal. 668, 133 Pac. 488, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1265, the Hassons were liable to creditors of the corporation for the difference between the value of the property and the par value of the stock, and (3) that by an application of the rule of Perkins v. Cowles, 157 Cal. 625, 108 Pac. 711, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 137 Am. St. Rep. 158, the defendants, even if they are bona fide transferees for value, are liable to the plaintiff for the said difference as prorated upon their part of such stock which was subsequently issued to them after being returned to the corporation by the Hassons.

The actions were tried together, and from a single judgment in favor of both defendants the plaintiff brings this appeal. The theories advanced by the plaintiff resolve themselves into two main contentions: (1) That the Hassons did not in fact succeed in returning any stock to the corporation, wherefore the issue to the defendants was an over issue of treasury stock, and, as such, an ultra vires issue against which the rule of Herron v. Shaw, supra, should not apply and (2) that the rule of Herron v. Shaw, supra, should not apply against issues of stock by corporations organized solely to develop and operate mining properties where all or practically all of the stock is issued in return for undeveloped claims of a real but necessarily of an unknown and speculative value. One argument of the respondents in support of this contention is that it is a matter of such common knowledge that there is no relation between the par value of mining stock and the assets of the corporation that creditors could not be supposed to rely upon any representation that the corporation had received assets up to the par value of the stock.

[1] Considering respondents' first contention, we note the following facts: The Hassons intended to donate, and the corporation intended to receive, 500,000 shares of the stock. It was noted in the minutes of the corporation that the stock had been donated. The corporation has at no time undertaken to issue certificates representing more than the authorized capital stock. The certificates originally issued to the Hassons, each representing 450,000 shares of stock, were canceled and certificates were delivered to the Hassons, each purporting to represent but 200,000 shares of the stock. This transaction effectively placed 500,000 shares of stock under the control of the corporation. However technically imperfect the form of the donation may have been, the facts show that it was effected, and it must clearly be held valid against any collateral attack. Independently of any question of the effect of an ultra vires issue, it therefore appears that the respondents' first contention is without merit.

[2-4] Turning now to the second contention, we find the law well settled. It should be noted that, although the Ord Mountain Gold Company is a corporation organized under the laws of Arizona and doing business in California, it is to the California law that the parties have appealed in their briefs and arguments. Looking, therefore, to the California law we find it undisputed that, where stock is sold for money and the purchase price is less than the par value of the stock, the difference between the par value and the amount actually paid is the measure of the stockholders' liability to creditors, and that in cases where the stock is not sold for cash, but is issued for real or personal property having no generally defined value, "the rule is that where the corporation and stockholder have agreed upon a given valuation for the property transferred, such valuation is binding and conclusive unless it is fraudulent in purpose or effect. But if the parties have put upon the property a valuation in excess of what they knew or believed to be its true value, this is a constructive fraud upon the creditors, and the stock will be deemed paid only to the extent of the actual value of the property received in exchange for it." Harrison v. Armour, 169 Cal. 787, 147 Pac. 1166; Herron v. Shaw, supra; Vermont Marble Co. v. Declez, 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143.

Cases supporting this rule decided in this jurisdiction and elsewhere are commented upon in Lucey Co. v. McMullen, 173 Pac. 1000, and in Sherman v. Harley, 174 Pac. 901. These cases do not intimate that the rule is not general in its application, or that it is subject to an exception in favor of any given class of corporations. In 1881, however, the case of In re South Mountain Consolidated Mining Co. (D. C.) 7 Sawy. 30, 5 Fed. 403, was decided in the United States District Court for the district of California. In that case the court stated the question before it as follows:

"Does the acceptance of stock in a mining corporation, as they are usually formed in this state, create any obligation, either by contract or under the law, to pay to the corporation or to its creditors the nominal par value of the stock so accepted?"

This question was answered in the negative, the court deciding that a creditor of a mining corporation is left to the statutory liability of the stockholder for his pro rata of the corporate debts. The decision was wholly based upon an asserted difference between mining corporations, as organized in California, and other kinds of corporations. The court recited the custom of giving mining stock a purely arbitrary value, which "neither bears, nor is intended nor supposed by the public to bear, the slightest relation to the real value of the property—a value nearly always conjectural, and very often imaginary." On a review of the case in the Circuit Court of the United States (8 Sawy. 366, 14 Fed. 347), this view was upheld, the court saying:

"Mining corporations in California are, in these particulars, sui generis. They are organized and carried on upon principles, in these respects, wholly different from banking, railroad, insurance, and like commercial corporations having a subscribed capital stock. There is no agreement, express or implied, to pay up any particular amount of stock, and no one understands that there is. Certainly none is intended by the parties."

While in the present case the record does clearly show that the Ord Mountain Gold Company was solely a mining company, the facts as revealed in the pleadings, proof, and findings, do not indicate that its capital stock was not subscribed or that there was no agreement, express or implied, to pay any particular amount of stock or that none was intended by the parties. The organization, so far as appears from anything in the record, differed in no material respect from that of an ordinary business corporation.

But, aside from these considerations, an examination of the California cases from the year 1882 to the present reveals the fact that, while the South Mountain Case has been repeatedly cited by the profession as an authority, this court has in each instance refused to do more than give it tentative recognition, and certainly has never approved the doctrine enunciated therein. See, for example, Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 448; Vermont Marble Co. v. Declez, 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143; Herron v. Shaw, 165 Cal. 668, 133 Pac. 488, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1265.

[5] We are aware of no sound principle upon which the decision in the South Mountain Case can be upheld at the present day. The reasons forming the basis for the general rule stated in Herron v. Shaw and Harrison v. Armour, supra, apply as well to mining corporations as to corporations formed for other purposes. Nor do we see any reason why it would work any peculiar hardship upon a mining company, as distinguished from any other kind of corporation, to be required to take property in exchange for stock at what the corporators honestly and intelligently believe to be its actual value. If it is true that there is a custom to fix mining shares at a purely arbitrary par value having no relation to the value of the assets taken therefor, that fact cannot alter the rule of law requiring that there be such a relation. The precise question was raised in See v. Heppenheimer, 69 N. J. Eq. 36, 61 Atl. 843, where it was urged upon the court that it was a matter of common knowledge that stock was issued by New Jersey corporations for property taken at a gross overvaluation. Pitney, V. C., admitted that the practice had been so frequently indulged in that it had brought obloquy upon the state, but asserted that whenever it had been indulged in it had involved a clear infringement of, if not a fraud upon, the letter and spirit of the laws of the state. If, therefore, it is customary for mining corporations in this state to issue stock for property which has no relation to the par value of the stock so issued, we can likewise only express our regret and point out that it has in every case involved a clear infringement of our laws.

[6] It follows that the rule enunciated in Herron v. Shaw and Harrison v. Armour, supra, is a general rule applicable to all classes of corporations, and that the rule stated in Re South Mountain Consolidated Mining Co., supra, no longer properly expresses the law in force in this state. Consequently, unless the corporators knew or believed that the Ord Mountain mining claims were worth $1,000,000, the stock is to be deemed paid only to the extent of the actual value of those claims at the time of the transfer to the corporation. We are also of the opinion upon a review of the cases that, however morally righteous was the belief of the corporators, if it was reached without intelligent examination into the elements of value or by including items not really "property" or by the influence of self-interest, the issue would be as much a violation of the statutory and constitutional provisions as though it had been dictated by corrupt motives. See v. Heppenheimer, supra; Donald v. American Smelting Co., 62 N. J. Eq. 729, 48 Atl. 771, 1116; Holcombe v. Trenton White City Co., 80 N. J. Eq. 122, 82 Atl. 618; Gillett v. Chicago Co., 230 Ill. 373, 82 N. E. 891. It may be remarked at this point that in determining whether or not the corporators did in fact honestly and intelligently believe the Ord Mountain claims to be worth $1,000,000 the circumstances attending and following the transfer should be taken into consideration. Immediately following the transfer, shares of the par value of $1 each and of the total par value of $500,000 were returned to the corporation. A short time thereafter several thousand of these shares were sold to the respondents at 5 cents a share. These circumstances cast grave suspicion, to say the least, upon the existence of any honest and intelligent belief that the Ord Mountain claims were worth $1,000,000.

It follows from the foregoing discussion that evidence should have been received at the trial bearing on the belief of the corporators as to the value of the property, to the end that it might have been determined what that belief was, and whether it was in fact honest and intelligent. The court, however, acting on the theory that the opinion of the corporators was wholly immaterial, confined the issue to the actual value of the property at the time of the transfer to the corporation. The finding of the court on this point is as follows:

"That at said time said mining claims had a value subsequently determined of yielding dividends on an investment of $1,000,000, that said 1,000,000 shares fully paid were not disproportionate in value to the said mining claims, and that the consideration for the issuance of said stock, fully paid up, was reasonable, just, and adequate."

The finding, in effect, rests upon the conclusion that the property was worth $1,000,000, because it would pay dividends on $1,000,000. It is not, however, found that the dividends referred to would be a reasonable or adequate return on an investment of $1,- 000,000. Moreover, it is evident that future earning capacity rather than present cash value was adopted as a standard. We do not mean to say that prospective earning capacity, properly subordinated to other modes of ascertaining value, may not be considered in determining present cash value. We are compelled to conclude, however, that the court adopted a prospective earning power as the standard of value, and did not consider it as merely some evidence of present cash value which upon a review of the cases we take to be the standard approved by them. It was the duty of the court to determine this value by ascertaining as nearly as possible what a reasonably prudent investor who contemplated spending his own money would have been willing to pay for the Ord Mountain claims under the circumstances under which the incorporators acted on the date of the transfer.

That the finding in question was not based upon the application of such a standard may be demonstrated by a review of the evidence. Dr. Koebig, the plaintiff's mining expert, was asked on the cross-examination: "It might be reasonable to expect, Dr. Koebig, that that profit would run into millions, just as much as into thousands?" The doctor answered: "Well, I am not so used to figure by the millions, but certainly this property, in my judgment, was a property that could pay dividends on a very large sum of money—if you please, a million—and good dividends on such, if the indications are borne out by the future development, and my opinion was there will be." This opinion was based upon an examination made after $150,000 had been spent in developing the mine. On the other hand, the same witness at another time in the trial stated that he could best give an idea of his opinion of the value of the mine by recounting a conversation which he had had with Mr. Hasson. It appeared that, at a time after the expenditure of the $150,000 before referred to, Hasson asked Koebig whether it would be wise to accept $250,000 for the property. Koebig answered that that would be getting a "very good value" for the property. Samuel J. Paul, another mining expert called for the plaintiff, testified that at the time of the transfer of the property to the corporation he would have considered it worth between $25,000 and $35,000. This was the only testimony as to the value of the claims.

It is clear from this analysis of the evidence that the finding of the court is based upon prospective earning power as determined at a time subsequent to the transfer. The judgment cannot therefore, be sustained on the theory that the evidence shows that the actual cash value of the property, in the sense in which we have defined that term, was $1,000,000 at the date of the transfer in question.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

BUFKIN v. CLINE, Sheriff, et al.
(L. A. 4891.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 14, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1010(1)—FINDING.

Trial court's finding, based on sufficient evidence, is conclusive upon appeal, although there was evidence from which the trial court might have arrived at a different conclusion.

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES $\hookrightarrow$ 137(1) — CHANGE OF POSSESSION—EXEMPT PROPERTY.

Civ. Code, § 3440, as to immediate delivery and change of possession of transferred property, by express terms does not apply to exempt property, such as is enumerated in Code Civ. Proc. § 690.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by Samuel Bufkin against John C. Cline, Sheriff, etc., and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellants.
Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an action of claim and delivery. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appeal. Defendants predicate their right to the property in question upon an attachment issued October 14, 1915, against the property of Katherine Van Alstyne, levied by the defendant sheriff upon the property in question on said date. No specific description of the property is contained in the briefs other than in the findings of the court that said property consisted of household furniture and furnishings and bric-a-brac of said household. Respondent's wife died in 1900. At that time the personal property in question was the community property of himself and wife. Respondent's daughter Katherine thereafter married Van Alstyne, and the plaintiff gave the possession of said furniture to her. The property remained continuously in her possession until July 26, 1915, when it was stored in the warehouse of the Bekins Van & Storage Warehouse, and Katherine Van Alstyne executed a bill of sale thereof to plaintiff. The arrangement between the father and daughter under which she retained possession of the furniture is thus found by the court:

"On or about the 1st day of December, 1900, upon the death of said Jane H. Bufkin (plaintiff's wife) plaintiff loaned and delivered the possession of said personal property and the whole thereof to the defendant Katherine Van Alstyne for her use during her life as long as she should desire to use the same, or upon her death or surrender of the property, the title to the same to at once be vested in plaintiff, with the right to the immediate possession thereof, reserving in himself the right to recall and repossess himself of said property, or any part thereof, at any time, and continuously between the 1st day of December, 1900, and the 26th day of July, 1915, defendant Katherine Van Alstyne continuously had possession of and used the same in her home as the household furniture of herself and family. On or about the last-mentioned date defendant Katherine Van Alstyne gave up housekeeping, surrendered the possession of said furniture to plaintiff, and as evidence of such transfer of title and possession and redelivery made, executed, and delivered to him a bill of sale, bearing date the 26th day of July, 1915, which was duly recorded July 27, 1915. That on July 26, 1915, plaintiff took possession of said property, and that the same has remained in storage with the Bekins Van & Storage Warehouse."

The court also found that there was no intention to defraud creditors in connection with the change of ownership and possession July 26, 1915. Appellant contends that the transfer of July 26th was invalid as to the defendant creditors, under the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code, requiring immediate delivery, followed by an actual and continued change of possession of personal property to effectuate a transfer as against existing creditors. There are two good and sufficient answers to appellants' claim. First, the court found on sufficient evidence that plaintiff was at all times the owner of the property in question, and that Mrs. Van Alstyne was entitled only to the possession thereof. It is true that there was evidence from which the court might have arrived at an opposite conclusion, but the finding of the trial court is conclusive upon us. The transaction of July 26, 1915, therefore, amounted to nothing more than a surrender by the daughter of her right of possession to her father, the plaintiff. There was, therefore, no attachable interest remaining in her. The second answer to appellants' contention is that section 3440, by express terms, does not apply to property exempt from execution. The provision is as follows:

"Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to the transfers of wines, etc. * * * nor to any sale, transfer or assignment of any property exempt from execution."

The reason for this provision undoubtedly is that creditors can make no claims to property exempt from execution, and its transfer, therefore, should not be deemed fraudulent as to them. Section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"The following property is exempt from execution and attachment. * * * 2. Necessary household, table and kitchen furniture belonging to the judgment debtor, including," etc.

The finding of the court that there was no intent to defraud creditors on the part of Katherine Van Alstyne by said transfer may have been based in part at least upon the proposition that the property in question was not subject to execution. This point was not discussed by the parties, and for that reason will not be further discussed.

Judgment affirmed.

ADAMS v. PLETSCH et al. (Civ. 2401.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 12, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨994(3)—REVIEW—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

The weighing and reconciliation of the inconsistencies of the testimony of the defendants by accepting in part or in whole the testimony of either of them was for the trial court.

2. RELEASE ⇨53 — FRAUD — PLEADING AND PROOF.

In an action by a purchaser of stock to recover, as for money had and received, commissions agreed to be paid thereon and on all sums of money collected by one of the defendants on a certain contract, evidence of fraud in procuring from plaintiff an agreement surrendering his claim held not admissible, in the absence of an allegation of fraud.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1056(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Exclusion of evidence as to fraud by promoters of a corporation from whom plaintiff purchased stock, in procuring an agreement of waiver from plaintiff of any claim upon commissions on property transferred by the corporation to one H., if error in suit by plaintiff to recover commissions agreed to be paid upon stock purchased and money collected by defendants on a contract with one H., was not prejudicial, where no property was ever transferred to H. nor any collections made upon H.'s contract with the corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by W. W. Adams against Theo. H. Pletsch and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Tipton & Cailor, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Head & Marks, of Fullerton, and Elmer I. Moody, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered in favor of defendants, who were promoters of a corporation designated as the Continental Mausoleum Company and who, as agents for the sale of the capital stock of the corporation, were to receive a commission of 20 per cent. upon sales made by them. In furtherance of the business for which it was created, the corporation had made a contract whereby it agreed to purchase from William N. Holway the rights to a certain United States patent for the sum of $65,000. It appears that defendant Pletsch had a contract with Holway for the collection of this money. The defendants, thus representing both Holway and the corporation, agreed to pay plaintiff 10 per cent. commission on all stock which he might buy, and a like sum on all sales of stock in the negotiation of which he assisted, and further agreed that he should be paid 10 per cent. commission on all sums of money collected by Pletsch on the Holway contract. One count of the complaint alleged that, pursuant to this agreement, plaintiff bought stock of the corporation of the value of $3,500, upon which he was entitled to a commission of $700, and that collections of $7,000 were made upon the Holway contract, upon which he was entitled to a like sum of $700, for the total of which judgment was asked.

The court, in effect, found that as to the stock bought by plaintiff, 30,000 shares thereof, valued at $3,000, was not subject to the agreement because the same was made after the purchase; that as to the other $500 worth of stock purchased by plaintiff he received payment of his commission thereon, which fact plaintiff in his testimony admitted to be true. It was further, in effect, found that no collections upon which plaintiff was entitled to commissions had been made on the Holway contract.

[1] The chief ground upon which appellant insists on a reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to support these findings. It would be an idle waste of time for the court to make an extended review of the testimony offered touching the issues so joined. Suffice it to say that counsel for appellant concede the testimony of defendants supports the findings. Their contention is that it is contradictory. Concede so much, nevertheless it was for the trial court to weigh and reconcile such inconsistencies by accepting, in whole or in part, the testimony of either defendant. Both defendants are positive in their statements that at the time plaintiff bought the 30,000 shares of stock there had been no talk or conversation whatever in reference to allowing him any commission whatsoever thereon. They insist that the only agreement regarding commissions on stock bought by plaintiff was made after said purchase by him of the 30,000 shares.

[2] Appellant's attack upon the finding, to the effect that defendants promised to pay him the sum of 10 per cent. on all sums of money in cash collected from the Mausoleum Company by Holway, is based upon the claim that there was transferred to Holway by the company certain contracts and property of the value of $7,000. The agreement, however, as shown by the testimony of defendants, was that the 10 per cent. commission was to be paid only upon sums of money which Holway received, and not upon property which he might agree to accept in lieu of cash. It further shows that defendants consulted plaintiff with reference to the company transferring this property to Holway, at which time he was told that if Holway accepted the property for the agreed sum of $7,000, no commission would be allowed thereon, to all of which plaintiff himself admits that he agreed. Moreover, since Holway testified that upon said contract the company "never paid any money, property, or consideration whatever," it appears that such transfer was never consummated.

While plaintiff admits that he agreed, in case of a transfer of the property to Holway, he would waive any right or claim to commissions upon the value of the property, he insists that he was induced so to do by defendants agreeing to a like waiver on their part, instead of which, however, he claims that defendants obtained the entire property and appropriated it to their own use and benefit, by reason of which fact the agreement of waiver on his part was procured by fraud. The court, however, refused to receive and consider testimony tending to establish such alleged fraudulent acts and representations on the part of defendants, for the reason that the complaint contained no allegation of fraud. The action as brought was for money had and received by defendants to plaintiff's use and benefit, upon which appellant insists, on the authority of Minor v. Baldrige, 123 Cal. 187, 55 Pac. 783, that evidence showing fraud in procuring the agreement of waiver made by plaintiff was admissible. In the case cited it was held that where a condition precedent to the payment of money was falsely represented to have been performed, such fact might be shown in an action in assumpsit. The case is not applicable to the facts under consideration for the reason that here plaintiff entered into an agreement surrendering his claim and right to money which might in a certain contingency become due to him. No money had, as in the Minor Case, been paid, and if the contingency arose under which plaintiff, except for his agreement of waiver so claimed to have been procured by fraud, was entitled to commissions, the facts showing that it was so obtained should have been alleged. Otherwise defendants would not have notice of the nature of plaintiff's claim based on his repudiation of the contract of waiver. Nichols v. Randall, 136 Cal. 426, 69 Pac. 26.

[3] However, even were the alleged error conceded, plaintiff was not prejudiced thereby, for the reason that it appears without contradiction that the property was not transferred to Holway, nor were any collections made upon his contract with the company.

Judgment affirmed.

CITY STREET IMPROVEMENT CO. v. SILVERSHIELD et al. (Civ. 2749.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨766—BRIEFS—STATUTE.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, requiring parties to print in their briefs such portion of the record as is necessary for the information of the court, where appellants did not print in their opening brief an appendix, and only set out as part of the record a small portion of a private contract, upon the construction of which appellants state they rely, and respondent's brief calls attention to this omission, and appellant's closing brief is also unsatisfactory, the appeal, being frivolous, will not be considered, and judgment will be affirmed.

2. COSTS ⇨260(4) — DAMAGES — FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

Where an appellant fails to conform to the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, requiring the parties to print in their briefs certain portions of the record, and on examination of the record it fails to disclose any merit, and appears solely to have been made for purposes of delay, a proper case exists for the imposition of damages upon appellant for taking a frivolous appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Action by the City Street Improvement Company against Henry Silvershield and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

Platt Kent, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The appeal, upon the alternative procedure, is from a judgment upon a private contract for street work in the city of Santa Rosa. In the opening brief there is no appendix, and the only pretense of setting out any part of the record, if indeed it is a part of the record, is a mutilated excerpt from a part of the private contract. There is a statement that one of the principal points upon which the appellants rely is the construction of the contract. The respondent's brief consists of a single paragraph, asking that the judgment be affirmed, for the reason that the appellants have not printed in their brief the portion of the record required for the information of the court, citing Code of Civil Procedure, § 953c, and Miller v. Oliver, 174 Cal. 404, 163 Pac. 357, and stating that the appeal appears to have been taken solely for delay.

In the closing brief is a statement that counsel for the appellants have been assured several times by Courts of Appeal, when presenting cases, that they always make a practice of going fully into the transcript, and, further, in order that there might be no dereliction, in the closing brief they set forth certain matter, which may or may not have been another part of the contract in suit so far as appears from the brief, consisting of three questions with their answers, which standing alone, are entirely unintelligible. There is also set forth what is designated the pretended acceptance by the city of Santa Rosa.

[1, 2] Section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, is positive in its requirements. It has frequently been construed by both the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal. Miller v. Oliver was decided more than a year before the appellants' opening brief in this case was filed. In that case the Supreme Court awarded damages of $100 against the appellant for a frivolous appeal. The disregard by the appellant in that case of the provisions of section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, was not more marked than that of the appellants in the present case. Estate of Kieth, 175 Cal. 26, 165 Pac. 10; Welk v. Sorenson, 178 Pac. 498; Whiting-Mead Commercial Co. v. Richards, 180 Pac. 633. The record has been examined, and it fails to disclose merit in the appeal from a judgment of $108.05, interest, and costs.

The judgment is affirmed, and it is adjudged that respondent recover from the appellants the sum of $50 for the taking of a frivolous appeal.

SYDNEY v. RICHARDS et al. (Civ. 1914.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 16, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 12, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1011(1)—FINDING—REVIEW.

Court finding, based on conflicting evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. MINES AND MINERALS ⇐19(1)—LOCATION NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY.

Location notices should be liberally construed, and in determining the sufficiency thereof the most important guide is the purpose of the notice, which is to identify the land claimed with reasonable certainty.

3. MINES AND MINERALS ⇐19(1)—LOCATION NOTICE—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE—EVIDENCE.

In action to quiet title to copper mining claim, question being whether prior notice of location by defendants contained a sufficient description of land sought to be located under Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a, held, that the court below was justified in concluding that there was an honest attempt by defendants to locate said land, that there was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law, and that plaintiff had full knowledge of the extent of defendants' claim.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mariposa County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by J. L. Sydney against John Richards and others. From judgment for defendant named, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. P. Tuttle, of Merced, for appellant.
John Wall, of Mariposa, for respondents.

BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an action to quiet title to a copper mining claim. The defendants Westfall and Beeves filed a disclaimer. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and judgment was for defendant Richards, and plaintiff appeals.

The land in question was unoccupied government mineral land and at the trial plaintiff attempted to prove that she had acquired title thereto by two distinct proceedings: First, that on January 1, 1911, she and one Lisenby, through her husband, posted a notice of location upon the ground, and in 1913 performed more than $100 worth of labor. Afterwards this location was abandoned, and on September 14, 1914, while the land, as she claims, was still unlocated, she made a valid location thereon by posting the proper notice.

[1] As regards the location of January, 1911, the trial court found from conflicting evidence that the required assessment work for the year 1913 had not been done. Under the rule governing this court, this finding will not be disturbed.

As regards the location of September 1914, by plaintiff, there was offered in evidence at the trial a prior notice of location posted on the claim on March 11, 1914, by defendant, which, over the objection of plaintiff, was received in evidence and was the basis upon which judgment in favor of defendant was rendered.

The question in controversy is whether this prior notice of location by defendant contained a sufficient description of the land sought to be located under the provisions of sections 1426 and 1426a of the Civil Code. The following is a copy of the notice of location:

"Notice of Location—Quartz Claim. Notice is hereby given that the undersigned citizen of the United States has, in compliance with the requirements of the Revised Statutes of the United States this day located and claim 1,500 linear feet along the course of this lead, lode, or vein of mineral-bearing quartz, and 300 feet in width on each side of the middle of said lead, lode, or vein, together with all mineral deposits contained therein, and all timber growing within the limits of said claim, and all water and water privileges thereon or appurtenant thereto, situate in the Green Mountain mining district, county of Mariposa, and state of California, and more particularly described as follows, to wit: Commencing at a stone monument about 100 feet north of an old in-line shaft, thence northerly 600 feet and southerly 900 feet along the vein or lode which is the center line of the claim. The shaft is located about 600 feet west of the N. E. corner of section 4, T. 8 S., R. 18 E. M. D. M. This claim shall be known as the Sunny Side quartz claim."

[2] The recent case of Batt v. Stedman, 173 Pac. 99, decided in this court since briefs were filed herein, lays down the principles which will govern this court in considering the sufficiency of a notice of a mining location. Following other precedents, that case holds that "location notices should be liberally construed, having reference to the circumstances under which, and the character of the parties by which, they are generally made; in determining the sufficiency of the location notice, the most important guide is the purpose of the notice, which is to identify the land claimed with reasonable certainty," also the statute expressly provides that the description of the claim may be made "by reference to some natural object or permanent monument, as will identify the claim located," and that "in no case shall the claim extend more than 1,500 feet along the course of the vein or lode, nor more than 300 feet on either side thereof, measured from the center line of the vein at the surface," and that the notice must contain "the number of linear feet claimed in length along the course of the vein, each way from the point of discovery, with the width on each side of the center of the claim, and the general course of the vein or lode, as near as may be." Civ. Code, 1426, 1426a.

Now, as regards the natural objects and monuments on the land which were attempted to be used by the defendant to "identify the claim located," the following appears from the testimony: The land in dispute is old mining ground and had been mined years before by the Guggenheims. In 1912, and prior thereto, and at the time of the location, there was on the claim a 115-foot tunnel; also the ground was all clear, and with but a single tree on it; also plaintiff's husband testified that he had known the land for years, that "discovery of copper-bearing ore had been made on the claim; there is a well-defined ledge on the claim, and the apex of the vein extends the whole length of the claim"; and respondent testified:

"On March 11, 1914, I discovered rock in place on the claim bearing valuable copper ore. I built my discovery monument on the vein at this point. It was made of rocks, and was 2 feet wide and 3 feet high; and on that day I placed and posted [the above notice of location] on this discovery monument."

From the foregoing it will appear that there were upon the ground three objects, each of which objects were referred to by the locator in his notice, to wit, the well-defined ledge on the claim, the apex of which "extends the whole length of the claim," the shaft, or tunnel, and the monument. The description in the first place makes the well-defined ledge "the center of the claim," and, second, makes the stone monument referred to as the point of discovery the starting point for the measurement northerly 600 feet and southerly 900 feet of an aggregate distance of "1,500 linear feet along the course of this lead, lode, or vein of mineral-bearing quartz"; and the notice also defines the other dimension of the claim by like reference to this well-defined ledge on the claim as being "300 feet in width on each side of the middle of said lead, lode, or vein."

And, furthermore, by his own conduct, the husband of plaintiff, while acting for her, indicates that the monument referred to in defendant's location notice was a sufficient location of the point of discovery when he testifies:

"I posted the Lone Tree mine location notice in the same monument of rocks where I found the Sunnyside mine notice of location."

Furthermore, he gives no testimony from which it can be inferred that the notice of location posted by the defendant was insufficient to give him or any other person notice or information of the boundaries of defendant's location; his testimony in this action being as follows:

"A few days after March 11, 1914, I was on the ground and found the notice of location of the Sunnyside mine by defendant John Richards in a monument of rocks on the vein. I read this Sunnyside mine notice of location at this time, and then put it back in the monument of rocks where I found it. I did not make any effort to follow the directions contained in the Sunnyside mine location notice to find if any monuments had been placed to mark the claim. I have never made any such effort. The ground is all clear, some grass grows each year, and there is but one single tree on the ground. By little effort I could have readily found and seen any monuments of rocks or any other monuments on the ground. I was advised that the Sunnyside mine location was defective, for the reason that the notice of location did not contain enough writing; that it did not comply with the requirements of the statutes of the state of California, and that was my sole and only reason for making the Lone Tree location on the same ground as claimed by the Sunnyside mine notice of location. I posted the Lone Tree mine location notice in the same monument of rocks wherein I found the Sunnyside mine notice of location."

[3] As stated by this court in the case of Green v. Gavin, 10 Cal. App. 330, at page 337, 101 Pac. 931, at page 933:

"We think the court below was justified in concluding that there was an honest attempt by defendants to locate said land; that there was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law; * * * that plaintiff had full knowledge of the extent of defendants' claim."

The judgment is affirmed.

DURAN v. YELLOW ASTER MIN. & MILL.
CO. (Civ. 2615.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California, April 11, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 9, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐285(5)—INJURY TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE—DEFECTIVE ROPE.

In a servant's action for injuries by the breaking of a rope, evidence held to justify a finding that the rope which yielded was the part run over by an engine before the accident.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⇐121(2)—PRESUMPTIONS.

When a thing causing injury is shown to be under defendant's management, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those in charge use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation, that the accident arose from a want of care.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT — 265(5)—INJURY TO SERVANT—UNSAFE TOOLS—ROPE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a servant's action for injuries by the breaking of a rope after it had been run over by an engine, plaintiff, to make a sufficient case for the jury, was not required to do more than show the defect was actually known to defendant or would have been discovered by a reasonable inspection.

4. TRIAL — 103—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—PURPOSE—EXCEPTION.

In a servant's action for injuries, the master's exception to the introduction of evidence to show that defendant was a rich corporation cannot avail, where there was another and unquestionably legitimate purpose for its introduction, to which such evidence was pertinent.

5. EVIDENCE — 127(4)—RES GESTÆ—DECLARATIONS OF INJURED SERVANT—PAIN.

In a servant's personal injury action against a master, testimony of a witness that after the accident, when plaintiff was seeking to use a rake, he heard plaintiff exclaim, "My God! it hurts!" was admissible upon the question of the seriousness of the injury, and there was no error in overruling the objection that it was a self-serving, hearsay declaration and incompetent.

6. DAMAGES — 132(8)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES—PERMANENT DISABILITY OF TWO FINGERS—OTHER CONTINUING DISABILITIES.

Where the injured servant was compelled to undergo much suffering, and there was evidence tending to show permanent disability affecting two fingers of his right hand and other disabilities continuing at the time of trial, nearly two years after the accident, held, award of $4,000 did not raise an inference that the verdict was influenced by passion or prejudice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Vinton E. Duran against the Yellow Aster Mining & Milling Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ward Chapman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank P. Doherty and B. Rey Schauer, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment in the sum of $4,000 and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The case was tried by jury. The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff while in the employ of the defendant. It was alleged that the accident and injury were caused by negligence of the defendant, which negligence consisted in the selection and use of a rope which was insufficient in size, weight, and strength to sustain and hold the weight of a dump car which had rolled off the track and down the side of the dump, and the accident occurred while defendant's employes, including the plaintiff, were engaged in putting back and placing the car upon the track.

[1] Appellant's principal contention is that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the implied finding of negligence. Counsel for appellant claims that, aside from the fact that the rope broke, the plaintiff offered no evidence whatever of any lack of care on defendant's part in the selection of the rope or in the manner of fastening it, or in any act committed or omitted, unless possibly certain testimony that an engine was permitted to run over the rope where it was tied on the track before the accident was intended to give rise to an inference of negligence.

The evidence is undisputed that a new rope of the size and quality used is good for 4,000 pounds dead weight on a vertical lift, and, if it is a slightly used rope, one-third should be deducted. The rope in question had been used. There is no evidence referring to the tensile strength of such a rope when resisting a sudden jerk or shock; so far as the evidence shows, it may be that such a rope would have broken under a sudden strain produced by an object weighing much less than two-thirds of 4,000 pounds. It was stipulated that the weight of the truck and running gear of the car was 1,600 pounds; that the weight of the bed independent of the running gear and truck was about 1,200 pounds, making a total weight of 2,800 pounds; and appellant claims that the rope was attached to the truck and running gear at the time of the accident, and that the bed of the car was lying apart from the truck and running gear. If the evidence produced by the plaintiff showing his injury by reason of the breaking of the rope was such as to raise an inference of negligence, then, in the absence of a satisfactory explanation of the circumstances on the part of the defendant, it cannot reasonably complain against the finding of such negligence. There being no evidence necessarily proving that the rope was reasonably sufficient to resist a sudden strain caused by an object weighing 1,600 pounds, we cannot say that the jury's conclusion upon the matter of insufficiency of the rope was not sustained by the evidence. Defendant's superintendent, C. H. Frye, was present at the time and place of the accident. He testified as a witness on behalf of the defendant. According to his testimony, there was nobody pulling on the rope; it was simply there as a guide to hold the car while the men were working, and when they lifted the lower side up the car came down a little bit and snapped the rope. "As soon as the car was lifted out of the muck on the side that Mr. Duran was working on, you see it pulled the rope taut and it snapped."

There does not appear to have been any close inspection of the rope before it was used. Mr. Frye says: "I did not examine the rope myself to see if it was in good condition; if the rope looks all right nobody pays any attention to it." At the commencement of the work one end of the rope was tied to the car and the other end was tied around the two tracks on the grade above. Afterwards and before the moment of the accident an engine had run over the rope and cut it in one place. Where the rope ran over the other rail of the track, the rope was not cut, and there is no evidence showing the extent to which the rope may have been mashed and weakened in any part except where it was cut. It does not appear that any inspection was made by the defendant for the purpose of determining that fact. That part of the rope which had been cut was taken out, and was not in use at the moment of the accident. So far as the evidence shows, that part of the rope which was not cut, but which had been run over by the engine, may have been in use at the moment of the accident, and may have been the part of the rope which yielded under the strain and caused the accident. Under the evidence the jury would have been justified in determining that this was the fact.

[2, 3] In connection with his claim that the evidence does not show any fact or circumstance from which negligence on defendant's part can be deduced, counsel for appellant endeavors to apply the rule that no inference of negligence can be implied from the mere fact that the injury occurs. Such cases as Madden v. Occidental Steamship Co., 86 Cal. 445, 25 Pac. 5, and Sappenfield v. Main Street R. R. Co., 91 Cal. 48, 27 Pac. 590, are cited as sustaining this rule. Those decisions and others are cited and discussed in O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 146 Pac. 674. The rule is affirmed that, when a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care. It is proper to say here, as was said in that case, that in order to make a sufficient case for the jury it was not incumbent on the plaintiff, under the circumstances appearing, to do anything further than he did do in the way of showing that the defect in the appliance was actually known to the defendant, or would have been discovered upon the exercise of reasonable care to ascertain its condition. We think that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of negligence.

[4, 5] There are two exceptions to rulings of the court on the admission of testimony. The first exception is based upon the claim that certain redirect examination of the plaintiff which was allowed by the court was indulged for the purpose of conveying to the jury the information that the defendant was a rich corporation. Without setting forth this evidence, it is enough to say that it had another and unquestionably legitimate purpose, to which such evidence was pertinent. The exception is not sustained. The second exception relates to a question asked of plaintiff's witness Kelly as to whether or not he, at a time after the accident when plaintiff was seeking to use a rake, heard plaintiff utter any exclamation. Defendant objected to this upon the ground that it called for a self-serving, hearsay declaration, and was incompetent, but the court overruled the objection on the theory that the plaintiff was calling for a spontaneous exclamation, and the witness answered that the exclamation was, "My God! it hurts!" There was no error in overruling this objection. Dow v. City of Oroville, 22 Cal. App. 215, 226, 134 Pac. 197.

It is claimed that the court erred in its instructions on the measure of damages. The particular instruction selected by appellant for criticism is the following:

"If from the evidence in this case the jury should find that the plaintiff has sustained damages as alleged in his complaint, then, to enable the jury to estimate the amount of such damages, it is not necessary that any witness should have testified or expressed an opinion as to the amount of such damages, but the jury may make such estimate from the evidence in the case and by considering them in connection with their own knowledge and experience in the affairs of life."

Counsel say that this is a true rule in so far as the award had reference to the element of suffering or impairment of health, but is wholly incorrect in so far as loss of earnings or medical expense is concerned. The decision in Rouse v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 27 Cal. App. 772, 151 Pac. 164, relied upon by appellant here, is not in point. The instruction discussed in that case referred particularly to the plaintiff's loss of earning power, and told the jury that "it is not necessary that evidence should be presented in this matter." It was held that in giving such instruction the court erred; but no corresponding statement or inference is contained in the instruction presented for consideration here. Moreover, in other instructions given the jury were plainly told that, if they found for the plaintiffs, they should award to him only such actual damages as the evidence showed that he had sustained, etc., "taking into consideration his loss of earnings (if any), necessary expenses in medical and surgical aid, so far as the same appear in evidence in this case (if any)."

[6] Finally, appellant claims that the amount awarded as damages was grossly excessive. The plaintiff was compelled to undergo much suffering, and there is evidence tending to show permanent disability affecting two fingers of his right hand, and other disabilities still continuing at the time of the trial, which was nearly two years after the date of the accident. There is no such discrepancy between the evidence and the amount of damages awarded as to raise an inference that the verdict must have been influenced by passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. Perry v. Angelus Hospital Association, 172 Cal. 311, 156 Pac. 449.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

(Civ. 2700.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 11, 1919. On Petition for Rehearing, May 9, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court June 9, 1919.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — 281(2) — FORECLOSURE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in suit to foreclose contractors' liens against lessors of a building, upon which improvements were made at the request of a sublessee, held sufficient to sustain finding that the contracts had been completed on the date of the sublessee's death; the fact that some of the changes contemplated were not made until a later date not being necessarily inconsistent with full performance of whatever contracts were made.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS — 281(2) — FORECLOSURE — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY — TIME OF COMPLETION.

In suit to foreclose three contractors' liens against the lessors, upon whose building improvements had been made at the request of a sublessee, finding that the contract upon which one of the liens was based was fully performed on March 31st held not supported by the evidence; there being testimony by one of the claimants that the work was finished on March 6th, or more than 60 days before filing the lien required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, on May 11th.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS — 132(4) — TIME FOR FILING LIEN—NOTICE OF COMPLETION.

A contractor's lien, filed more than 60 days after completion of the work, but before 90 days have expired, is too late, and cannot be allowed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, where such contractor has failed to allege and prove the failure of the owner to file his notice of completion.

4. MECHANICS' LIENS — 78—KNOWLEDGE OF OWNER — NOTICE BY OWNER TO PREVENT LIEN.

Knowledge shown by allegations in the answer of defendant lessors, in suit by contractors to foreclose lien for work performed at request of a sublessee, that they knew that repairs were being made by such sublessee but were ignorant of the scope of such work, was sufficient to require the filing of the notice required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, as a condition of relieving their property from liability for work performed at the request of the sublessee; only such knowledge as would put a prudent man on inquiry being necessary.

5. MECHANICS' LIENS — 272, 279—ENFORCEMENT — DEFENSE—NOTICE OF NONLIABILITY BY OWNER.

Where the owners, at the time of their sublessee's death, had knowledge of the improvements made by contractors on the building at the request of such sublessee, the giving of notice of nonliability under Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, is a matter of defense to be pleaded and proved by such owner, on suit by the contractors to foreclose their lien.

On Petition for Rehearing.

6. COSTS — 241 — APPEAL — APPORTIONMENT OF COSTS ON APPEAL.

Where, on appeal in suit by contractors to foreclose three liens for improvements made upon a building, two of the liens were held valid and one invalid, the costs of appeal will be prorated among them.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by H. J. Perazzi against the Doe Estates Company and others. From a decree for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Decree reversed, in so far as it decrees a lien in favor of Henry F. Castagnino and Emanuel Castagnino, plaintiffs, and in other respects affirmed.

Pringle & Robbins, Milo R. Robbins, and Arthur H. Redington, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

H. K. Eells and Maxwell McNutt, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

HAVEN, J. The appeal is from a decree of foreclosure of three contractors' liens against the leasehold interest of appellants in certain premises in San Francisco. The claims of lien sued upon are based upon work performed in the making of alterations and repairs to a portion of the building on said premises, occupied by one J. O. Long as a sublessee of appellants. Mr. Long died on March 31, 1914, while said alterations and repairs were in progress. Upon his death the workmen were withdrawn and all work stopped. The lien claims here involved cover work which was all performed prior to the death of Mr. Long, at his instance and request. Appellants claim that two of these liens were filed prematurely, because the contracts upon which they are based had not been completed prior to such filing. The court found that each of the said contracts was completed on March 31, 1914. It is asserted that this finding is unsupported by the evidence, for the reason that the entire alterations and repairs contemplated in the arrangement between Mr. Long and said two respective claimants were not finished at that time. It appears from the evidence that Mr. Long purposed somewhat extensive alterations in the interior arrangements of a market, oyster stand, and barber shop which occupied the portion of the building of which he was the lessee; that preparatory to these general alterations he desired to change the location of the barber shop and oyster stand, and employed the plaintiffs to perform the plumbing, electrical wiring, and painting necessary for that purpose; that there was no definite price agreed upon nor plan adopted for all these preliminary changes, but that the work was laid out from day to day as it progressed, and plaintiffs followed the instructions given to them from time to time by Mr. Long, or his superintending contractor, as to the manner of its performance.

[1] Both of the plaintiffs, to whose claims the objection now under consideration is made, testified that all the work which Mr. Long had requested had been performed prior to his death. This evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings of the trial court that the contracts of these plaintiffs had been completed on March 31, 1914. It further appears that the employes of both plaintiffs were working on the premises at the time of the death, and that all the changes contemplated in the preliminary work had not then been made, but were completed at a later date. In view of the nature of the arrangement between Mr. Long and plaintiffs, it cannot be said that there remained any uncompleted contract between them at the date of the former's death. The evidence last referred to is not necessarily inconsistent with full performance of whatever contracts of the character above indicated were made.

[2] The lien of Castagnino Bros. was upon a claim under a contract for painting, which the court found was fully performed on March 31, 1914. The only evidence in the record as to the time of completion of this contract is the testimony of one of the claimants that the work was finished on March 6, 1914. This finding is therefore not supported by the evidence.

[3] The notice of lien by these claimants was filed for record on May 11, 1914, more than 60 days after the completion of their contract, as fixed by their own testimony. Respondent seeks to sustain this lien on the ground that the owners filed no notice of completion under the provisions of section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, and that, therefore, the claimants had 90 days within which to file their lien. The record is entirely silent as to the filing, or want of filing, of this notice. We have held in the case of Greely v. Noble (No. 2769, this day filed) 181 Pac. 666, that the burden of alleging and proving the failure of the owner to file this notice is upon the plaintiffs. Having failed to so allege and prove, their lien was too late, and should not have been allowed.

[4] It is further claimed that the record does not disclose when the appellants acquired knowledge of the making of the improvements from which the lien claims arose, and that they never obtained any knowledge of the scope and extent of such improvements. No evidence was introduced upon this matter. Its determination rests, therefore, upon the pleadings. The answer of appellants contains the following allegations:

"Answering paragraph 11 of said first cause of action, these defendants admit that the defendants S. J. Pringle and E. C. Pringle had knowledge that certain alterations and repairs were to be made in said building, but deny that said S. J. Pringle and E. C. Pringle had full knowledge of the alterations and repairs in said complaint set forth, and in this particular said defendants S. J. Pringle and E. C. Pringle allege that said J. O. Long informed them that he desired to make certain alterations and repairs, and that these defendants then requested that a full plan of the repairs be submitted to them for their approval, and that said J. O. Long failed to submit said plan showing said alterations and repairs, and these defendants allege that while they knew that said J. O. Long had commenced work in said building that they did not know just what the scope of the said work was."

The knowledge admitted by the foregoing allegations was sufficient, in our opinion, to require the filing of the notice prescribed by section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure as a condition of relieving appellants' property from liability for the cost of the work performed at the request of Mr. Long. Such knowledge need be only sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry. Gentle v. Britton, 158 Cal. 328, 332, 111 Pac. 9.

[5] Where it is shown that the owners had knowledge of the improvements, the giving of the notice of nonliability under the above section becomes a matter of defense, to be pleaded and proved by defendants. West Coast Lumber Co. v. Newkirk, 80 Cal. 275, 277, 22 Pac. 231; Boscus v. Bohligh, 173 Cal. 687, 691, 162 Pac. 100. The appellants did not meet this burden.

The judgment is reversed, in so far as it decrees a lien in favor of the plaintiffs Henry F. Castagnino and Emanuel Castagnino, as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Castagnino Bros. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; BRIT-TAIN, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

HAVEN, J. The appellants in this action have filed a petition for rehearing, claiming that the court has misinterpreted the contracts of the lien claimants Perazzi and Decker Electrical Construction Company, as set forth in their respective claims of lien; and, further, that, under the interpretation of the contracts adopted by the court, the lien claimants were not original contractors and, therefore, their liens, not having been filed within thirty days, were invalid. Appellants also request a modification of the former opinion as to the prorating of the costs on appeal. In this latter request the respondents have joined in a separate petition, urging, however, a different basis of division of costs.

It appears from the notices of lien filed by said Perazzi and Decker Electrical Construction Company that each of said claimants alleged a contract consisting of two items; first the performance of certain work in changing the location of the barber shop, for which in each case a definite contract price was agreed upon; and, secondly, for the performance of certain other work, with regard to which no definite price was agreed upon, but each of the claimants was to be paid the reasonable value thereof. The evidence disclosed that all of the work upon the barber shop had been performed prior to the death of Mr. Long. The remaining work under each contract was in the process of performance at the time of Mr. Long's death. It is with reference to that work that the construction of the contracts set forth in the former opinion is applicable. There was a definite contract between each of the lien claimants and Mr. Long, as alleged in their respective claims of lien and as established by their testimony. A part of each contract was for the performance of certain work at a definite price, all of which had been performed before Mr. Long's death. The extent and nature of the balance of the work under the contracts was dependent upon instructions to be given from day to day by Mr. Long or his agent. The possibility of the continuance of such instructions from that source was terminated by the death of Mr. Long. While, therefore, the lien claimants were original contractors, we are satisfied that there were no uncompleted contracts at the time of the death of Mr. Long, in the sense that the finding of the trial court of completion on March 31, 1914, was not supported by the evidence. Being original contractors, the liens which were filed fifty-five days after the date of completion were in time.

[6] In the former opinion it is held that two of the liens involved in these consolidated cases were valid and one was invalid. It is urged by both parties to the appeal that under such circumstances the costs of the appeal should be prorated between them. This contention is well founded and is supported by precedent in similar cases.

It is, therefore, ordered that appellants' petition for a rehearing be, and the same is hereby, denied; that the opinion heretofore filed herein be, and the same is hereby, modified by adding at the close thereof the following: "And it is further ordered that appellants recover such proportion of their costs on appeal as the amount of the lien of Henry F. Castagnino and Emanuel Castagnino, as copartners doing business under the name of Castagnino Bros., bears to the total amount of the three liens involved in the appeal; and that the respondents recover such proportion of their costs on appeal as the total amount of the two liens of H. J. Perazzi and Decker Electrical Construction Company bears to the total amount of the three liens involved in the appeal."

McADOO, Director General of Railroads, v.
INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMIS-SION et al. (Civ. 2753.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 4, 1919.)

MASTER AND SERVANT  380—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—“SERIOUS AND WILLFUL MISCONDUCT.”

Machinist helper's omission to use goggles while clipping off burrs formed in the reaming of saddle-bolt holes contrary to rules and specific instructions, merely because he disliked the goggles, was "serious and willful misconduct" within Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831) § 6, subd. 4, reducing compensation to one-half where injury was caused by "serious and willful misconduct" of injured employé, except where injury resulted in death or permanent partial disability equaling 70% of total, or where employer violated law or safety order of commission.

Petition for certiorari by William G. McAdoo, Director-General of Railroads against Industrial Accident Commission and Robert H. Hogan, to review an order of Industrial Accident Commission awarding to Robert H. Hogan compensation for injuries. Award annulled and case remanded to Industrial Accident Commission for further proceedings with instructions.

Dana T. Smith and E. E. Bennett, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco (Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Certiorari. Pursuant to stipulation, the above-named petitioner has been substituted in place of the original petitioner, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company. The writ was issued to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, awarding to Robert H. Hogan compensation for injuries received by him while working as an employé of said railroad company. It is conceded that if the injury received by Hogan was caused by his serious and willful misconduct, this court may set aside the award and remand the case to the commission for the reduction of the award to one-half of the amount allowed by the commission.

Section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 831), in subdivision 4 thereof, reads as follows:

"Where the injury is caused by the serious and willful misconduct of the injured employé, the compensation otherwise recoverable by him shall be reduced one-half: Provided, however, that such misconduct of the employé shall not be a defense to the claim of the dependents of said employé, if the injury results in death, or to the claim of the employé, if the injury results in a permanent partial disability equaling or in excess of seventy per cent. of total: And provided, further, that such misconduct of said employé shall not be a defense where his injury is caused by the failure of the employer to comply with any provision of law, or any safety order of the commission, with reference to the safety of places of employment."

The award in this case is made upon a permanent partial disability equaling 30¼ per cent. of total disability of the right eye.

The accident by which the applicant, R. H. Hogan, was injured, occurred on February 12, 1918, while he was employed as a machinist's helper. He was reaming saddle-bolt holes in a locomotive with an air motor and reamer. The reamer became stuck, and caused a burr to form in the top of the hole. He removed the reamer and chipped the burr off, and a piece of steel glanced off and struck him in the eye. He was not at that time wearing any goggles or other protection to the eyes. He had been employed as a machinist's helper at that place for about four months, and had several years' experience as a workman in other machine shops. At several places in the shop was posted a circular headed "Safety Rules for Shopmen." One of these was:

"Do not do any chipping or grinding without wearing safety goggles. If you are not provided with goggles, go to foreman."

The applicant admitted that he had seen the notices posted, but that he never read them. Nevertheless, it is conceded that he was "familiar with the purport" of this rule. He knew that the company provided goggles and that they were to be found in the tool room. The following questions and answers are part of the testimony of the applicant before the commission:

"Q. Have you ever used any glasses at all? A. I used goggles when I was doing a regular job of chipping. Q. You were doing a job of chipping at that time? A. Regular chipping job. This is just an incident of where you pick up a hammer and chisel and knock off a chip, and go right ahead with your regular line of work. Q. You were using a reamer driven by air under pressure? A. Yes. Q. And the reamer stuck in the hole? A. Yes. Q. That raised around the edge of the hole some chips of steel? A. Rough place. Just caused a rough place at the top of the hole. That prevented the reamer from running smoothly. In order to get a smooth surface to start from, I knocked those chips off and for that purpose I picked up a hammer and chisel. It was while using a hammer and chisel that the piece of steel flew into my eye. * * * Q. Had you been given any orders at all as to wearing the glasses when you were engaged in such work as that? A. No, sir."

On cross-examination the applicant admitted that he had on another occasion some cast iron burrs in his eyes and had the clerk of the general foreman remove them. He said that he did not remember that, about an hour before the time when he received his injury for which he seeks to obtain compensation, he got another piece of metal in his eye, and also had it removed by the clerk; also he did not remember that the first of these two incidents occurred on the day preceding the accident in question here, and that the clerk and the general foreman both told him to get goggles and wear them when he was doing work where particles of metal were liable to fly. He testified that he knew that goggles were kept in the tool room to be used by workmen, "if they thought they needed them." After the foreman, Keith, and his clerk, Pauff, had testified fully to both of the incidents referred to in the above-mentioned cross-examination, Hogan gave further testimony. In this later testimony the following occurs:

"Q. You have heard the testimony of Mr. Keith and Mr. Pauff as to your having been in the office the day previous with some foreign body in your eye, have you? A. Yes. Q. Is that testimony correct or incorrect? A. I went in there before this, I don't remember whether that was the exact date or not. Q. Do you know how you got the foreign body in your eyes that was in there at that time? A. Drilling holes in cast iron, and the dust in the air from the exhaust of the motor. Q. You told them that was the way you got it in, did you? A. Yes. Q. And you supposed that was the way? A. I told them I was drilling holes in the saddle — Q. The morning you received the injury that caused the loss of your eye had you made a previous visit to Mr. Pauff? A. I had been there before with this dust in my eyes, but I don't remember whether that was the morning before or not. Q. How many times were you there? A. There just on this occasion with this cast iron, I remember twice, and he gave me some water, some eye wash to wash it out. Q. Do you recall whether you were there that morning or not? A. I don't remember whether that was the time that I was or not."

It thus appears that there is no definite contradiction of the testimony given by the foreman and clerk on this matter, but rather that silence which gives consent. The job on which Hogan was employed involved the reaming of about 50 of those saddle bolt holes, and included more than one day's work. That the forming of burrs was a common incident of that work is not denied. It was so much expected that Hogan kept by him a hammer and chisel with which to remove the burrs. He voluntarily and intentionally omitted to obtain and use goggles, contrary to rules of which he had knowledge, and contrary to specific instructions, all of which were laid down for his protection. The only reasonable explanation is that he disliked the goggles because they were, as he said, "in his way," and so he preferred to take the chance of personal injury. This was willful misconduct and it was serious. The case was in essential elements very similar to that disclosed in Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35, where an electric lineman disobeyed a known rule and positive instructions requiring him to wear rubber gloves while handling high-power wires, and in consequence was killed while doing that kind of work without gloves. As the court there said:

"It cannot be doubted that a workman who violates a reasonable rule made for his own protection from serious bodily injury or death is guilty of misconduct, and that where the workman deliberately violates the rule, with knowledge of its existence and of the dangers accompanying its violation, he is guilty of willful misconduct."

The case at bar sharply distinguishes itself from that of Diestelhorst v. Ind. Acc. Com'n, 32 Cal. App. 771, 164 Pac. 44, where the misconduct of the applicant occurred in a moment of thoughtlessness and not with deliberate intention. The commission's finding, that the applicant's injury was not proximately caused by his serious and willful misconduct, is not sustained by the evidence.

Our conclusion is that upon the record produced herein the award to the applicant should have been for only one-half of the amount allowed by the commission, and as to the excess above that amount the commission acted in excess of its powers. The award is annulled, and the case is remanded to the Industrial Accident Commission for further proceedings in accordance with this decision.

BRODERICK v. BRODERICK.
(Civ. 1929, Sac. 2750.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 3, 1919. On Rehearing in Supreme Court in Bank, June 2, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE — 184(10)—APPEAL—REVIEW OF FINDINGS.

Even though it be conceded that the trial court should not find that a wife was guilty of adultery except upon evidence convincing to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, it is the duty of the appellate court to give the findings the same weight as it would to the verdict of a jury in a criminal case.

2. DIVORCE — 127(4)—CORROBORATION.

Civ. Code, § 130, requiring corroboration of the testimony of the parties to a divorce suit, calls for a lesser degree and quantity of corroboration where there is an entire absence of evidence as to collusion.

3. DIVORCE — 51—CRUELTY—REVIVAL OF OFFENSE CONDONED.

In view of Civ. Code, §§ 117, 121, extreme cruelty of a wife towards the husband consisting of the filing of a petition for divorce containing a false charge of adultery cannot be regarded as condoned by the husband by his act in thereafter living with the wife, where such act was induced by a promise of the wife to conduct herself properly, which promise she broke by committing fresh acts of misconduct.

4. DIVORCE — 116—EXTREME CRUELTY—EVIDENCE.

Where the wife, in her petition for divorce, alleged that defendant, her husband, was guilty of extreme cruelty in falsely charging her with infidelity and immorality, testimony offered by defendant tending to show specific acts of intimacy between plaintiff and men other than her husband was admissible.

5. WITNESSES — 275(3)—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF PLAINTIFF—PROPERTY.

Where in an action for divorce plaintiff testified on direct examination that defendant, her husband, had not furnished her with the necessities of life, and had for a long course of years ignored her repeated requests for money, it was proper on her cross-examination to submit to her a letter written by herself to defendant requesting money to pay the expense of an abortion on herself, in which letter she spoke as one who was accustomed to receive what money she asked for.

6. DIVORCE — 115—GENERAL REPUTATION—PLACE OF RESIDENCE.

In divorce suit in which defendant's cross-complaint alleged plaintiff's adultery, though plaintiff had not resided in K. county for more than three months prior to the commencement of her action for divorce, evidence as to her general reputation in that county, in which she had lived during most of her life, was admissible; the question of remoteness being for the determination of the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Actions by Blanche Barton Broderick against L. A. Broderick. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Blanchard, of San Jose, and H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, for appellant.

John G. Covert and John F. Pryor, both of Hanford, for respondent.

BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem. In September, 1915, appellant brought suit for separate maintenance of herself and minor daughter, alleging as the grounds of action failure to provide and extreme cruelty. In November of the same year she brought suit for divorce and custody of the minor children and all the community property upon the same ground. On motion of respondent these two causes of action were transferred from the county of Santa Clara to the county of Kings; and he answered in each action denying the allegations of cruelty and failure to provide. He also filed cross-complaints in each action, alleging extreme cruelty and adultery and praying for a judgment of divorce. These actions were by stipulation tried together on March 14, 1916. Findings were made that it was not true that respondent was guilty of extreme cruelty or failure to provide; but the court did find that appellant was guilty of extreme cruelty and of adultery. Pursuant to these findings, respondent was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce awarding him the custody of the minor son Lloyd and all of the community property except $2,000. Appellant was awarded the custody of the minor daughter and the sum of $2,000, to be paid in monthly sums of $50 after entry of judgment until the entire award was paid. In the maintenance action the court denied appellant any relief. A motion for a new trial was made by appellant, which was denied, and appellant appealed from the order denying her motion for a new trial, and also from the judgment and order entered in each of the actions. By stipulation the appeals in said actions will be heard and determined together upon the same transcript and briefs.

[1] It is stated in appellant's brief that "the paramount issue on appeal is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings as to adultery." The evidence is fully set forth in the bill of exceptions, and has been carefully read and considered by the court in the light of counsel's able and earnest brief. No useful or proper purpose can be served by reproducing this evidence in this record. If the trial court believed, as it had a right to, the testimony of the witnesses Meyers, Mr. and Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Davis, Hiram Barton, and the respondent, and distrusted, as it had a right to do, the testimony of the appellant and her co-respondent, Gatlin, there was an ample basis of sufficient proof to establish the court's findings, not only of adultery, but also of extreme cruelty. While learned counsel vigorously attacks the veracity and the character of some of respondent's witnesses, even to the extent of going outside of the record, he does not gainsay the potency of the damaging facts to which they testify. And even though it be conceded that the trial court in an action charging adultery should base its findings of guilt only upon evidence convincing to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, it would still be the duty of this court to give at least the same weight to the findings of the trial court as it does to the verdict of a jury in a criminal case. As stated by Justice Henshaw in the case of People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 200, 48 Pac. 79:

"Upon a review of the evidence by this tribunal, we may not examine with minuteness claims that witnesses are discredited or that their testimony is unworthy of belief, or look to see whether some other conclusion might not have been warranted by the evidence."

Also our Supreme Court, in the case of Robinson v. Robinson, 159 Cal. 203, 113 Pac. 155, which like the case at bar, was a suit for divorce:

"We are bound by the well-established rule that the decision of the trial court upon issues of fact is conclusive upon us in so far as there is any substantial evidence tending fairly to support such decision, even though we may think that a different conclusion should have been arrived at. * * * The trial court was the exclusive judge of all questions of credibility of witnesses and weight of evidence, and must be assumed to have considered all the evidence given in the light of such rules as are laid down by the law for the guidance of the court and jury in the determination of questions of fact. It should further be borne in mind that the question whether acts and conduct constitute such cruelty as, under all the circumstances shown, warrants the granting of a divorce, is of such a nature that the conclusion of the trial court is necessarily entitled to great weight, and it is only where it is clear that it is without any substantial support in the evidence that it will be disturbed on appeal."

And to a much greater extent is it true that "the acts and conduct" constituting adultery are "of such a nature" that an intelligent, observing, and experienced trial judge making full use of his opportunities to observe the conduct, temperament, manner, and appearance of the witnesses before him is in the nature of things more capable of reaching a just conclusion from the evidence than a court of review even with the assistance of able and zealous counsel. 9 R. C. L. § 106; Ellett v. Ellett [157 N. C. 161, 72 S. E. 861], 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135 [Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1215]; Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 111 [100 Am. Dec. 110]; Cooke v. Cooke, 152

Ill. 286 [38 N. E. 1027]. And therefore, as stated by Presiding Justice Angellotti in the Robinson Case, above cited:

"We feel that no useful purpose would be subserved by discussion of the evidence given upon matters embraced in the findings that are attacked by learned counsel in his brief as being without support."

[2] The only contention counsel in his brief makes in regard to the finding of cruelty is that—

"The charges of cruelty are not supported by any testimony whatever other than that of the husband and wife, which is insufficient. Civ. Code, § 130. Appellant makes proper explanations as to every charge of cruelty."

The acts constituting cruelty as charged in respondent's cross-complaint and found by the court are that on or about July 2, 1913, the appellant filed her complaint in the county of Glenn, falsely charging that respondent committed adultery with a woman in Los Angeles on April 23, 1913, and praying for a divorce and a division of the property; that she reiterated these false charges in letters to members of her family which were communicated to respondent; that in the spring of 1913 she permitted another man, over the objection of her husband, to occupy one of her rooms as a night lodger; that in July, 1914, she forbade respondent to call her "wife." And as additional acts of cruelty, causing him great mental anguish, respondent charges appellant with some of the same improper conduct with co-respondent, Gatlin, that he had alleged in his cause of action charging adultery.

As regards the suit commenced by appellant in Glenn county falsely charging respondent with adultery, respondent's testimony to the commencement and dismissal of this action and the charges therein is corroborated by the records of the county of Glenn showing the complaint with signature of respondent's attorney with the seal and jurat of the notary public to appellant's verification of the complaint; also a telegram of appellant's attorney authorizing the dismissal of her action. No objection to this evidence was offered except that it "was barred by sections 124, 125, 126 of the Civil Code." There is also corroborating evidence that at the time of this action respondent was a resident of Kings county and went to Los Angeles, not of his own motion or purpose, but at the solicitation of his wife to come in pursuance of a telegram received by him from a stranger in Los Angeles by the name of Davis. This telegram was received in evidence without objection and corroborates the purpose and good faith of respondent's visit to Los Angeles. In the case at bar the record conclusively absolves the parties of any desire or purpose to obtain a divorce by collusion. The record conclusively shows that each party is attempting to obtain for himself or herself and prevent the other from obtaining a decree upon the grounds of cruelty or adultery. A bitter conflict as to property interests and the custody of the children, as well as the evident feelings of the parties leaves the case absolutely devoid of any suspicion of collusion. Consequently, in this case at least, the reason of the rule requiring corroboration is much modified, and a lesser degree and quantity of corroboration will be exacted. Blanchard v. Blanchard, 10 Cal. App. 203, 101 Pac. 536; MacDonald v. MacDonald, 155 Cal. 665, 102 Pac. 927, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 45.

[3] Counsel contends that the complaint is stale as regards the alleged false charges of adultery in the Glenn county suit. A similar contention was made in the recent case of Neeley v. Neeley (Sup.) 176 Pac. 163, but in that case our Supreme Court held as follows, in language which is quite applicable to the case at bar:

"We should hesitate to say that an unexplained delay of 3½ years must, as a matter of law, be deemed unreasonable. But that is not the question here. The plaintiff's failure to proceed earlier is fully accounted for by the dismissal of the prior action, and the conduct of the parties thereafter. Civ. Code, § 125. The plaintiff condoned the offenses of 1911, but under the agreement, as well as by the terms of the law itself (Civ. Code, § 117), the condonation carried with it the condition subsequent that the plaintiff should be treated with conjugal kindness. This condition was broken by the defendant in 1915, and the original cause of action thereby revived. Civ. Code, § 121."

In the case at bar it is true that respondent lived with appellant as his wife up to August 5, 1915. But under the law this conditional condonation was revoked by the subsequent misconduct of the appellant with Gatlin, which caused, and was calculated to cause, respondent great mental suffering and of which he did not have knowledge until September 21, 1915.

[4] The appellant assigns as prejudicial error the overruling of her objection to the testimony pertaining to her relations with one John Hanford. This testimony was properly admitted because it was in direct response to and explanatory of issues raised by appellant herself in her complaint and in her own testimony. In her complaint filed in this action plaintiff charges that defendant "willfully inflicted upon her great and grievous mental suffering and anguish, * * *" and that some of said acts of cruelty are " * * * that on numerous occasions within the past ten years, the exact dates of which plaintiff is now unable to specify, the said defendant, without any cause or reason or provocation and wrongfully and falsely accused the plaintiff of infidelity and immorality." Presumably to substantiate this charge in her direct testimony she states that

"about the 27th of May, about ten years ago, he [respondent] accused me of adultery with John Hanford. * * * All of these charges that my husband made against me were not true. On June 20, 1915, at our home my husband admitted to me that they were not true. He said to me, 'I know you to be the purest woman that ever lived.'" In view of the foregoing it is evident that it was not error for the court to admit in evidence appellant's letter of August 31, 1904, to John Hanford, which contained language that indicated that her relations with Hanford were of such a character as to leave her no cause for rightful complaint as to respondent's charges against her of infidelity. Likewise the testimony of her uncle, Hiram Barton, and J. E. Gruwell that on different occasions in 1904 they had seen her lying on the same bed with John Hanford was relevant and pertinent testimony tending to contradict the allegations of her complaint and the prima facie inferences to be drawn from her testimony that she had rightly suffered great mental and grievous anguish when respondent charged her, as she claims he did charge her, with adultery with John Hanford.

[5] Learned counsel for appellant vigorously contends that the trial court erred in overruling appellant's objection to the introduction in evidence as a part of appellant's cross-examination of a letter written by her to the respondent in March, 1915, which contained, among other things, a request from appellant that he send her some money for hospital treatment in connection with a proposed abortion as well as money for other purposes.

The trial court evidently allowed this letter in evidence on cross-examination just as it allowed the above matters in regard to John Hanford, not for the purpose solely of proving respondent's case, but as evidence tending to explain and qualify general testimony given by appellant herself in direct examination in support of charges made by her in her own complaint against respondent. And in doing this we do not believe that the trial court erred or in any way abused the broad discretion with which the trial court is intrusted upon the cross-examination of a witness who is a party to the action. In her complaint, in narrating one of the particulars in which defendant "had wrongfully and willfully inflicted upon her great and grievous mental suffering and anguish," she charges:

"Defendant has willfully failed, neglected, and refused to provide plaintiff with sufficient food, shelter, or medical attention or sufficient means with which to furnish the same, though able so to do, and had during the greater portion of said time compelled the plaintiff to live upon the charity of her friends and relatives, and thereby causing, and still causes, plaintiff grievous humiliation and grievous mental suffering."

For the purpose of substantiating these material charges appellant in her direct testimony testified as follows:

"Since 1912 the defendant had not furnished anything for the children and I to live on. I have during that time supported myself and the children by my profession as an osteopathic physician. I have been practicing that since August 1912. He has not paid our grocery bills, rent bills, and has not hardly paid any of the bills in general. I asked him repeatedly for money, and he has refused it. * * * These acts of my husband which I have spoken of have humiliated me."

Upon cross-examination she testified as follows:

"In 1915, while in Los Angeles, I wrote home several times and asked for money. Q. Now you say that you wrote to your husband and requested that he send you money when you were in Los Angeles in 1915; is that a fact? A. Yes, sir; I wrote him several times and asked for money. Q. In one of these letters didn't you write to him for money for the specific purpose of procuring an abortion? Mr. Biaggi: I object to that as not proper cross-examination. A. No, sir; I did not. * * * I wrote the letter which you are showing me, inclosed it in an envelope, placed a postage stamp thereon, addressed it to my husband, and deposited it in a mail box in the city of Los Angeles."

The letter was then received in evidence, subject to the same objection, ruling, and exception, and, among other matters, stated:

"Dear Ardy: Well, I am getting over the effects of my fall, but I can never get over the effects of my visit to the ranch. I am surely pregnant, * * * so I am going to be operated on next week, and you will have to send me some money. * * * I am expecting a check from you to-morrow for those things at Bakersfield. * * * Now you must send me the money at once; I am sick about it. * * * I will have to have money enough to buy some gowns. I only have two and they are both rags, and to pay for operation and hospital fees. * * *"

Whatever else may have been the effect of this letter, in substance and tenor it surely tended to show the actual relations between the parties as regards money matters in 1915. It tended to show that at that time, at least, appellant was asking for money, not as one who was not accustomed to receive it, but was asking for it with the calm and firm assurance of the ordinary housewife, and to that extent the letter serves to explain, modify, and qualify the damaging and general testimony in direct examination that—

"Since 1912 the defendant has not furnished anything for the children and I to live on. He has not hardly paid any of the bills in general. I asked him repeatedly for money, and he has refused."

Also, in connection with this letter, respondent introduced in evidence a large number of checks which he had sent to appellant in 1915 and at other times.

Learned counsel for appellant have cited and quoted liberally from numerous well-established authorities. But the strongest of these go only to the extent of holding that testimony on cross-examination, however discrediting, is inadmissible only when it is entirely foreign to the case and in no way germane to the matters brought out on direct examination and is offered for the sole purpose and with the sole effect of discrediting the witness or the party to the action. See Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, at page 674, 22 Pac. 26, 131; Estate of James, 124 Cal. 653, 57 Pac. 578, 1008, and cases cited; Short v. Frink, 151 Cal. 83, 90 Pac. 200; People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 357, 360, 364, 94 Pac. 407, 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717. But rules of evidence are primarily rules of exclusion. And in this state from the beginning (Jackson v. Feather River Water Co., 14 Cal. 19) the rule has never been so applied even in criminal cases as to relieve a party when under cross-examination from his sworn obligation to tell the whole truth when it might in any degree tend to explain, qualify, or shed light on any relevant testimony given by him on his own direct examination. As stated by our Supreme Court in the case of People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 466, at page 475, 35 Pac. 80, 83:

"Any question which would have the tendency to elicit from him the whole truth about any matter upon which he had been examined in chief, or which would explain, or qualify, or destroy the force of his direct testimony, whether it be to give the whole of a conversation or transaction of which he had given only a part, or to show by his own admissions that he had made contrary statements, or that his conduct had been inconsistent with the statements given in his direct testimony, and thus throw discredit upon them, would be legitimate cross-examination."

The rule applied in the case at bar is illustrated in the case of Davis v. Coblens, 174 U. S. 719, at page 726 (19 Sup. Ct. 832, 43 L. Ed. 1147):

"Walter was called as a witness by plaintiffs; testified that such reconveyance was the only one he had made of lot 10—the lot in controversy. Thereupon defendant's counsel cross-examined him at great length against the objection of plaintiffs regarding his business of buying and selling real estate and the extent of it and character. The ruling of the court permitting the cross-examination is assigned as error. We see no error in it. The question of plaintiffs' counsel was a general one, and opened many things to particular inquiry. The extent and manner of that inquiry was necessarily within the discretion of the court, even though it extended to matters not connected with the examination in chief. In Rea v. Missouri, 17 Wall. 532 [21 L. Ed. 707], it was said: 'Where the cross-examination is directed to matters not inquired about in the principal examination, its course and extent are very largely subject to the control of the court in the exercise of a sound discretion; and the exercise of that discretion is not reviewable on a writ of error.'"

And the following cases from the federal jurisdiction further illustrate the extent to which the federal courts, in response to the demands of a progressive jurisprudence, are applying a rule conducive to the practical and effective administration of justice: Commercial State Bank v. Moore, 227 Fed. 19, 141 C. C. A. 573; Le More v. United States, 253 Fed. 887, at page 896; Diggs v. United States, 242 U. S. 470, 37 Sup. Ct. 192, 61 L. Ed. 442, L. R. A. 1917F, 502. See, also, State v. Carter, 21 N. M. 166, 153 Pac. 271, at page 272; People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 12, 87 Pac. 1016; Graham v. Larimer, 83 Cal. 173, at page 180, 23 Pac. 286; People v. Burke, 18 Cal. App. 72, at page 78, 122 Pac. 435; People v. Davenport, 13 Cal. App. 632, 110 Pac. 318; People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, at page 91, 20 Pac. 36.

[6] Counsel also contends:

"That the court erred in permitting Mrs. Grwell and Mrs. Rice to testify as to the general reputation of appellant in Kings county."

It is true, as stated by counsel, that appellant "at the time of the trial and for more than three months prior to the commencement of the divorce action had been a resident of Santa Clara county." But the evidence also shows that prior to that and for many years she and her family had, for the greater part of her life, lived in the county of Kings. And, as stated in People v. Cord, 157 Cal. 562, 108 Pac. 511:

"It is a question for the court to determine whether or not general reputation in a place of former residence is too remote in point of time to be allowed in evidence."

However, when it seemed to appear upon cross-examination that the witnesses had never discussed her reputation "except in the family," it might have been proper for the court, upon motion being made, to have stricken out the testimony of the witness. But no such motion was made.

The order denying the motion for a new trial and the judgments in each action are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. We do not regard as material to the decision the portion of the opinion reading as follows:

"Consequently, in this case at least, the reason of the rule requiring corroboration is much modified and a lesser degree and quantity of corroboration will be exacted. Blanchard v. Blanchard, 10 Cal. App. 203; McDonald v. McDonald, 155 Cal. 665."

And we express no opinion thereon.

The application for a hearing in this court after decision in the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District is denied.

1. ACCOUNT STATED — 3, 7—ESSENTIALS.

An account stated must be based on prior dealings and a pre-existing indebtedness, and it constitutes a new contract, either express or implied, into which all prior negotiations merge.

2. ACCOUNT STATED — 5 — ASSENT OF PARTIES.

The only difference between an account stated which is expressly created by approval of the debtor indorsed on the bill and one where the contract is implied by reason of the silence of the party receiving the account is that in one case the person charged says the account is correct, and in the other fails to say that it is incorrect.

3. ACCOUNT STATED — 6(2)—IMPLIED ASSENT —FAILURE TO OBJECT.

Where there had been prior dealings between certain architects and the owner through her agents, resulting in the completion and acceptance of the building, when a bill was sent by the architects to such owner in care of S., her agent, an account stated was impliedly created in law by the failure of such owner or her agent to object.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1011(1)—FINDINGS —CONCLUSIVENESS.

Finding of the lower court upon conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

5. ACCOUNT STATED — 6(1)—IMPLIED ASSENT.

The account must have been brought home to the party to be charged in order for such party to be bound by silence.

6. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — 171(8)—RATIFICATION—ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFITS.

Where the owner of a lot accepted the fruits of the dealings between certain architects and her brother and sons which resulted in the completion of a building thereon, she could be held liable to the architects, upon the principle of ratification.

7. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — 145(4)—UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL.

Where one deals with another believing him to be the principal, on subsequently learning that he was dealing with an agent of an undisclosed principal, he may recover either from the person with whom he dealt or from the undisclosed principal.

8. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — 177(3)—RENDITION OF ACCOUNT—NOTICE TO AGENT.

The fact that the agent testified he never communicated with his principal regarding architects' bill rendered to him addressed to the owner cannot change the rule of law imputing his knowledge to the principal nor the rule that an account stated is implied from failure to make timely objection to an account based on antecedent dealings.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by A. C. Duerr against William R. Sloan and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Sterling Carr, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Keogh & Olds, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRITTAI, J. The defendants substituted as executors of her will on the death of Sarah A. Bryan, appeal from a judgment on an account stated, for architects' services, assigned by O'Brien & Werner to the plaintiff.

In 1911 Mrs. Bryan owned an unimproved lot in San Francisco upon which was erected an apartment house of six stories, known as St. Anthony Building. It cost $90,000 and was accepted September 23, 1913. On September 29, 1913, a statement was sent to the office of W. A. Sloan reading as follows:

September 29, 1913.

Mrs. Sarah A. Bryan, C/O W. A. Sloan, Mills Building, City.

First set of plans and specifications for seven-story steel frame fireproof building to be erected on Geary and Hyde streets..$2,500 00
Architectural services rendered for second set of plans including details, specifications, and superintending based on cost of $90,000.00 @ 5%..... 4,500 00

By cash..... 3,000 00

Balance due.....$4,000 00

The first set of plans, for which, on the statement, there was a charge of $2,500, was prepared by the architects, together with specifications for a class A building upon the order of Jesse Bryan and Sloan. Bids for the construction of the building were being received when Jesse Bryan died. J. S. Bryan, a brother of Jesse Bryan, then instructed the architects to call the matter off and that they would take it up later on. Subsequently Sloan and J. S. Bryan did take the matter up with the architects and ordered the preparation of plans for the cheaper class C building which was erected. The first set of plans was used as a basis of the second set, at least as to the floor plans. The two Bryans were the sons of the owner, and Sloan was her brother.

Before the contract for the building was executed Sloan took to Mrs. Bryan a note and mortgage, which she executed without reading, upon which Sloan advanced the money for the payment of the building bills. Mrs. Bryan left everything about the building to Sloan. John Bryan mentioned the matter of the mortgage to her, and she told him to go ahead and do everything that was necessary. After the mortgage was signed, Sloan took to Mrs. Bryan the building contract, which she also signed without reading. Sloan watched the progress of the building and paid all the bills. Neither O'Brien nor Werner ever met Mrs. Bryan, but on one occasion she telephoned to one of them, stating that she learned the name "St. Anthony" was on a foot mat at the door, and, as Jesse and she had a sentiment about this, she wanted the name taken up from there and put over the door. Later Mr. O'Brien telephoned to Mrs. Bryan with reference to something about the building, and she told him she knew nothing about it and had nothing to do with it. She testified she left the matter to Mr. Sloan.

[1-5] On behalf of the appellant many cases are cited to the proposition that in a suit upon an account stated the plaintiff must recover upon the account stated or not at all, and that in this suit recovery cannot be had upon the original items of account. There can be no question of this rule. If an account was stated it constituted a new contract, either express or implied, into which all prior negotiations merged. Gardner v. Watson, 170 Cal. 570, 150 Pac. 994. Numerous citations are made to support other equally well-established rules. An account stated must be based on prior dealings. In this case, when the account was sent to Mrs. Bryan in care of Sloan, the prior dealings between the parties had resulted in the completion and acceptance of the building. There must have been a pre-existing indebtedness. Upon this proposition counsel for the appellants quotes from 1 Corpus Juris, 681. Neither the text nor the cases cited would support a contention that, where a bill for services is rendered and the benefit of the services has been received, the party charged may not expressly agree to the value of the services and create an account stated by an approval indorsed on the bill. The only difference between an account stated thus expressly created and one where the contract is implied by reason of the silence of the party receiving the account is that in one case the person charged says the account is correct, and in the other fails to say it is incorrect. In this case the work was done, and the bill was rendered to Mrs. Bryan in the care of Mr. Sloan as her agent. If neither Mrs. Bryan nor Mr. Sloan, as her agent, objected to the account, the implication of an account stated thereupon arose as a matter of law. Upon the question of whether there was an objection or not, the evidence was conflicting. The lower court determined this question in favor of the respondent. This court is bound by that determination. The account must have been brought home to the party to be charged in order to bind her by her silence. At the time the account was rendered and during the construction of the building Mr. Sloan was in charge of the entire matter, with the consent of Mrs. Bryan. It is contended that his agency was not shown. This matter was also determined by the lower court adversely to the appellant. If there were conflict of evidence on the subject, the finding of the court would be conclusive here, but in view of the statements of Mrs. Bryan on her deposition, statements made by Mr. Sloan and John S. Bryan to the effect that she had never conferred authority upon them amounted merely to their conclusions, and there was no real conflict of evidence. The finding is conclusive.

[6, 7] Apart from the determination of agency existent at the time the account was rendered, it is contended that at the time of the employment of the architects by Jesse Bryan and Sloan to prepare the first set of plans the plaintiff failed to show either an actual agency or an omission or action on the part of Mrs. Bryan which could have generated a belief in the minds of the architects at that time on the subject of agency; hence that no ostensible agency was shown. Many cases are cited upon these elementary principles of agency. In regard to these authorities, as in fact all other authorities and statements of law made on behalf of the appellant, on the oral argument the attorneys for the respondent conceded that the law was as stated and the authorities supported the statements of law. The learned counsel for the appellants has overlooked the rules of law under which a principal may be bound, even though at the time a third party deals with another there was no agency. The person sought to be charged by accepting the fruits of the dealings may be held as principal upon the theory of ratification. Further, the rule is too well established to require citation of authority that, where one deals with another believing him to be the principal, on subsequently learning that he was dealing with an agent of an undisclosed principal, he may recover either from the person with whom he dealt or from the undisclosed principal. In this case Jesse Bryan discussed the matter of the building project with his mother. He attended to her affairs. He and Sloan ordered the first set of plans, which was used as the basis of the second set of plans ordered by Sloan and John S. Bryan, on which the building was erected. Sloan had entire charge of it. Mrs. Bryan had the benefit of the work. As is so strongly urged on behalf of the appellant, the suit here is upon the implied contract of the account stated. The sole question was whether, in view of the dealings prior to sending the account, Mrs. Bryan should be held by the implied contract of the account stated. There was evidence to support the finding of the lower court upon which the question was resolved against the appellants.

[8] On behalf of the appellants it is argued that reliance upon the account stated amounts to a fraud upon Mrs. Bryan. This claim of fraud is not pleaded. It is based upon the definition of actual fraud as a suggestion of a fact which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true. It is argued that, since the architects rendered a bill, which counsel for the appellants says was not warranted, it was a suggestion of an untrue fact. To follow the further argument of counsel for the appellants upon this proposition, it would be necessary to assume that, when the architects rendered their bill addressed to Mrs. Bryan in the care of Mr. Sloan, who had paid all other bills, they anticipated that he would fail to inform his principal of the receipt of the bill. The knowledge of the agent is imputed to the principal. The fact that Mr. Sloan testified he had never communicated with Mrs. Bryan in regard to the account cannot change the rule of law imputing his knowledge to Mrs. Bryan. Neither can it affect the rule that an account stated is implied from failure to make timely objection to an account based upon antecedent dealings.

It is claimed the legal principle of ratification cannot be invoked in aid of the respondent, and appellants rely upon section 2334 of the Civil Code, to the effect that the principal is bound by the acts of his agent under a merely ostensible authority to those persons only who have in good faith and without want of ordinary care incurred a liability or parted with value upon the faith thereof. In this suit the plaintiff sought to recover only by reason of the rendition of the account and its retention without objections. At the time of the rendition of the account there was no question of ostensible agency. Sloan was the agent of Mrs. Bryan. There were antecedent dealings of which she accepted the benefits. Sloan, her agent, knew all about them. The evidence fully sustains the findings. It is contended that the motion for nonsuit should have been granted. The grounds of the motion were substantially those which have already been discussed on which the appellants rely to show the evidence did not sustain the findings. The lower court held there was sufficient evidence at the time of the motion to require the defendants to proceed. The motion for nonsuit was properly denied. It was coupled with an order denying motion to strike out substantially all the evidence introduced on behalf of the plaintiff. The contentions in regard to striking out the evidence and on objections to its admission were the same grounds as those in support of the argument that the findings were not sustained. The motion was general in terms, as were the objections to the evidence. There was no error in denying the motion to strike out and none in the admission of evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHERMASTER v. CALIFORNIA HOME
BLDG. LOAN CO. (Civ. 2671.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 15, 1919. On Rehearing, May 15, 1919; Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 12, 1919.)

1. DEDICATION ☞31—FILING OF PRIVATE MAPS—ACCEPTANCE BY CITY.

The filing of private maps, showing existence of street, in office of recorder did not constitute dedication of the land shown as street, in absence of acceptance thereof by city, or acts by any one amounting to dedication or user.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ☞34—REPRESENTATIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Vendor's representation that land "fronted on a public street" had reference to means of physical access to the property, and not merely to an intangible quality in roadway, giving it the status of a public street.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ☞34—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS—FRONTAGE OF PROPERTY.

Vendor's false statement that the property was bounded by a public street on the front was a most material representation.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ☞37(1)—MIS-REPRESENTATIONS—INVESTIGATION BY PUR-CHASER—ASCERTAINMENT OF FALSITY OF REPRESENTATIONS.

Generally, where purchaser avails himself of an opportunity to test the truth of vendor's representations, and discovers, prior to the consummation of the contract, that such representations were false, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have so ascertained, he cannot complain that he was deceived by the representations.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ☞37(2)—MISREP-RESENTATIONS—INSPECTION OF PROPERTY—ESTOPPEL.

Where vendor knowingly misrepresented to purchaser, who was a laborer, without experience in the purchase of property, that the property fronted upon public street, purchaser by visiting property, and finding streets obliterated by use of the land for vegetable gardens, and by living on the land for several months before purchasing another piece thereof, was not estopped from asserting that he had been deceived by vendor's misrepresentations, as to property abutting upon street.

6. CONTRACTS 94(5) — REPRESENTATIONS — INVESTIGATIONS OF TRUTH OF STATEMENTS.

One party to a contract is under no obligation to investigate and verify the statements, to the truth of which the other party to the contract, with full means of knowledge, has deliberately pledged his faith.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 127—RESCISSION—AMOUNT OF PURCHASER'S RECOVERY.

Purchaser, upon rescission of contract, is entitled to return of the purchase price paid, with interest, and value of improvements placed upon land by purchaser, less any sum due vendor for use and occupation of land by purchaser.

8. EVIDENCE 113(10)—VALUE OF IMPROVEMENTS.

Testimony, as to cost of improvements placed upon land, is some evidence of their value.

9. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 121—RESCISSION—SUFFICIENCY OF TENDER—WAIVER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2076, requiring objections to tender to be specified, and Civ. Code, § 1501, providing that objections to mode of offer of performance are waived, if not stated at time of offer, where purchaser's attorney wrote vendor offering to rescind contract and tendering quitclaim deed upon payment to purchaser of purchase price, with interest, cost of improvements, and damages, and vendor refused to accept offer to rescind and merely took exception to tender of quitclaim deed, without making specific objection, there was a sufficient offer and a direct refusal of rescission, though purchaser demanded more than he was entitled to recover.

10. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 114—RESCISSION—WAIVER—POSSESSION.

Purchaser's remaining in possession of premises after offer to rescind was not a waiver of his right to rescind, where such possession was necessary to protect the improvements upon property from being carried away by vandals.

On Rehearing.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR 1011(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

A finding on an issue presented by a conflict of evidence is conclusive on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by C. Shermaster against the California Home Building Loan Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. S. Hutchinson and Walter Slack, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Henry L. Corson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff had judgment rescinding and canceling two contracts of sale and purchase of real property, and defendant appeals.

From the findings of fact, which are amply supported by the evidence, it appears that the parties entered into two contracts in writing, whereby they mutually agreed that defendant should sell, and plaintiff should buy from defendant, two lots of land situate in the city and county of San Francisco. The particular description of the lot of land, in each contract, began as follows:

"Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Wieland street, distant thereon, etc., from the southerly line of Sunnysdale avenue; running thence southerly along said westerly line of Wieland street," etc.

[1] Wieland street was not, at the time of making of the contracts, and never had been, a public street south of Sunnysdale avenue. Some years previously the then owners of the property filed in the office of the county recorder of the city and county of San Francisco private maps showing the existence of such street, and indicating thereby a probable intention to dedicate the land to street purposes. No evidence was offered to show acceptance by the city of this land, so indicated on the maps, or acts by any one amounting to such dedication or user. An unexecuted intention of this character would not be sufficient to constitute dedication. Shultz v. Redondo Improvement Co., 156 Cal. 442, 105 Pac. 118; People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 70, 22 Pac. 474, 15 Am. St. Rep. 22.

Some reliance is placed by appellant upon a deed between private parties conveying from one to the other a strip of land, which appears to be coincident with the parcel, which the appellant claims is Wieland street south of Sunnysdale avenue, but we see nothing in this private document creating a public easement for street purposes. There was testimony that negotiations appeared to have been commenced between the present owner of the property and the city and county looking to a possible dedication and opening of Wieland street past plaintiff's land, deeds having been tendered for that purpose. But there was no showing that such result was presently probable, and no evidence which would in any way indicate that plaintiff, or any one, had the right to use the strip of land represented by defendant to be Wieland street, adjacent to the property in question, for street purposes.

Plaintiff believed, and relied on, the representations of defendant, concerning the existence of an open, public street, and would not have bought the lots, supposed to front thereon, had he known there was no way of reaching his property, other than over privately owned lands. He began living on the first lot purchased in April, 1914, and in June of the same year he executed the contract for the purchase of the second parcel. He first became aware of the true state of affairs when, in December, 1914, he found his property entirely cut off from any ingress or egress, by fences erected all around his property by the owner of the surrounding land. He demanded of defendant a rescission of the contracts, which, being refused, he executed and tendered quitclaim deeds of the property and brought this action.

It appeared from the testimony that during the preliminary negotiations leading to the signing of the first contract, defendants represented to plaintiff that the lot he was purchasing was bounded on the front by Wieland street, that Wieland street was an open street, south of Sunnysdale avenue, and that the property could be driven to in wagons from any direction. Plaintiff was shown a map or plat of the property on which Wieland street was designated as fully laid out. Plaintiff visited the property before signing the contract, approaching it from Walbridge street, which was on the south of the tract of land, going over the adjacent lots to reach it. He located the exact property by "stepping it off from Sunnysdale avenue." He saw a fence to the north, and between the land he was intending to buy and Sunnysdale avenue. On this fence was a sign bearing the name "Wieland Street" in large letters. There were no indications on the ground of a street leading to or adjacent to the property. Plaintiff communicated the fact of his discovery of the fence to the defendant's agent, who assured him that it was not rightfully there and he "would go out with an automobile and tear the fence down."

[2] We cannot adopt the suggestion of appellant on this appeal that the representation of defendant, alleged and found to the effect that the lands and premises described in the contracts "fronted on a public street, to wit, Wieland street," had no relation to the means of physical access to the property, "but refers to an intangible quality in the roadway, giving it the status of a public street."

[3] The false statement, made by the defendant, that the real property, agreed to be sold to plaintiff was bounded by a public street, on the front, was a most material representation. Upon discovering that the representation was false, plaintiff was entitled to demand and recover, the consideration paid by him. Shultz et al. v. Redondo Improvement Co., supra. He was also entitled to recover the value of the improvements made on the premises, after deducting therefrom the fair rental value of the property. Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 526, 91 Pac. 498; Gates v. McLean, 70 Cal. 50, 11 Pac. 489.

[4, 5] The appellant contends that the plaintiff is estopped to claim a reliance on its representations, because he went on the land and examined it before signing the first contract, and lived on that portion several months before buying the second piece. Generally speaking, if one under such circumstances avails himself of an opportunity to test the truth of the representation made, and thereby discovers, prior to the consummation of the contract, that such representations were false, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have so ascertained, he will not be heard to say that he was deceived by them. Gratz v. Schuler, 25 Cal. App. 117, 142 Pac. 899. But we do not believe it requires citation of authority to establish that the situation of the parties, in the present case, gave plaintiff the right to believe and rely on the representations made by defendant. The trial court found that he was a laborer, and not accustomed to buying land. The evidence before us as to the lots, their location, condition of adjacent streets, fencing thereabouts, and ways of ingress and egress, warrants the conclusion that they formed part of a larger unimproved tract of land. All the streets in the vicinity appear to have been obliterated by the use of the tract as vegetable gardens. The result of the physical examination of the property made by plaintiff, before entering into the first contract, under these circumstances, was not such as to destroy his belief in, and reliance on, defendant's representations. He had been given a map showing the existence of the street. The assurance of defendant's agent concerning the fence would only serve to confirm his belief, and strengthen his reliance upon the truth of defendant's word.

The lots had been owned by the defendant for many years before the making of the contracts with plaintiff. The defendant knew that Wieland street, adjacent to the property, was not a public street, and that there was trouble in relation thereto. The president of the defendant company testified that he informed plaintiff of these facts before the contracts were made, but the trial court found otherwise. Defendant should not now be allowed to shift the burden of its misrepresentations onto plaintiff.

"One who makes statements false in fact, and induces another to buy property, cannot defeat liability for the false statements by showing that if the other party had suspected him of falsehood or doubted the accuracy of the statements, such party, by ordinary diligence and by inquiry of persons whom he knew to be cognizant with the truth, could have learned of the accuracy or falsity of the statements." Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. at 395, 92 Pac. 1017.

[6] One party to a contract "is under no obligation to investigate and verify the statements to the truth of which the other party to the contract, with full means of knowledge, has deliberately pledged his faith." Dow v. Swain, 125 Cal. 674, 58 Pac. 271.

[7] Plaintiff fenced a portion of his land, dug a well, put in a pump, and built a small house, all at a "cost" of more than $500. The evidence relating to the value of the improvements placed on the property by the plaintiff seems to have been largely confined to the question of the cost. Only one witness (for defendant) fixed the value of the house at $150. The court in its findings arrived at the amount of the judgment for the plaintiff by adding the amount paid by plaintiff on account of the purchase of the lots, plus interest, with $250 added for "value of improvements placed on the land and premises, exclusive of any sum due defendant from plaintiff for use and occupation of said land and premises since said contract of sale was entered into." Provided there was evidence to support the finding in this regard, the method of determining the amount of the judgment was correct. Garvey v. Lashells, supra; Gates v. McLean, supra.

[8] The testimony as to cost of the improvements was some evidence of value.

Furthermore, no objection was made at the trial as to this method of fixing the value, which seems to have been acquiesced in by all parties and by the court.

The rental value of the property was established by a witness for defendant. While the court's finding is not as full and explicit as it might be, we are of the view that it was justified by the evidence, and is sufficiently clear to support the verdict.

Appellant contends that the plaintiff did not give proper notice of rescission prior to the commencement of the action. When plaintiff found there was trouble about the street, he moved very promptly. He notified defendant, and was told by its officers: "The best thing to do is to see your lawyer, and we will see our attorney. We sold the property as we bought it." He did see his lawyer, who wrote to defendant, on behalf of plaintiff, "I am now making you an offer to rescind his contracts," describing them, "and Mr. Shermaster herewith makes you a tender of a quitclaim deed to all his interest in and to said land upon the payment to him of the sum already paid," etc., specifying the amounts of purchase price (with interest), the cost of improvements and damages. Plaintiff had previously executed such a quitclaim deed, and it was in the hands of his attorney for delivery.

Defendant, by its attorney, in reply to the notification by plaintiff, just referred to, wrote that it expected "to carry out to the fullest extent all their agreements with Mr. Shermaster (plaintiff). They, however, do not accept any offer made by you to rescind his contracts. They also take exception to any alleged tender which you suggest in regard to a quitclaim deed." The communication further stated that when all payments had been made by plaintiff, defendant would "give him deeds in accordance with the terms of his respective agreements."

[9] Here was a sufficient offer, and a direct refusal of rescission. Plaintiff demanded more from defendant than he was entitled to recover, but, in the absence of any specific objection made to the tender, the exception thereto noted availed defendant nothing, and must be now disregarded. Civ. Code, § 1501; Code Civ. Proc. § 2076; Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 314, 54 Pac. 1115; Latimer v. Capay Valley Land Co., 137 Cal. 286, 70 Pac. 82.

The contracts of sale were executory, and the acceptance of the quitclaim deed by defendant would have restored everything of value which plaintiff had received from it.

[10] It developed during the trial that after the offer of rescission, plaintiff remained, and was still living, on the premises. He testified that unless he did so the house would be carried away, owing, no doubt, to its location in a sparsely inhabited neighborhood. Appellant contends that plaintiff, having remained in possession, cannot maintain this equitable action in rescission, but must be relegated to a legal action for damages for breach of contract. In our view, under the evidence, plaintiff's so-called possession was only an effort made in good faith to protect the property for all parties to the litigation. He had made a good tender or restoration of the premises, which was refused. If he abandoned the premises the improvements would be carried away by vandals. He came into court and offered to do equity, when in his complaint he offered to make a quitclaim deed to the land to defendant upon cancellation of the contracts being adjudged. The court, in its decree, directed that such quitclaim be executed.

We do not believe that plaintiff's remaining on the premises under the circumstances amounted to a waiver of his right to rescind.

Defendant has not suffered any injury by reason of plaintiff's act in remaining in such tentative possession, for the court found that the value of the improvements placed on the land, exclusive of any rental that might be due defendant for the use and occupation of the land, was the sum of $250. We may assume that the court allowed defendant the sum of $8 per month for the use of the land, that being the sum fixed by its own witnesses, for the full period of the 24 months from the date of occupation by plaintiff to the trial. We may further assume that the court fixed in its own mind the value of the improvements at somewhere near the amount they cost, that being the course pursued in the examination of the witnesses by the court. The judgment as rendered appears to give defendant full credit for the reasonable use and occupation during the term specified, and under the circumstances it should not be heard to complain.

What we have last said also disposes of defendant's contention that the judgment was excessive.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing is denied, but the opinion in this case, heretofore filed, is modified in the following particular:

[11] The ninth paragraph of said opinion should read as follows: The lots had been owned by the defendant for many years before the making of the contracts with plaintiff. The defendant knew that Wieland street, adjacent to the property, was not a public street, and that there was trouble in relation thereto. The president of the defendant company testified that he was familiar with the condition of the streets and roadways in the tract, "having been out there probably two or three or more times a year since 1906." He further testified that "at none of the times he had been on the property was the portion of Wieland street as shown on the map, south of Sunnysdale avenue extending through the property of Crim, open." The agent, Webb, to whom defendant intrusted the sale of the lots in the tract, testified that at the time of the sale he told plaintiff the condition of Wieland street, and the fact that it was not a public street at that time, but that he thought it could be opened. On the issue presented by the conflict of evidence, arising from all the testimony bearing on this subject, the trial court found in support of plaintiff, and we are bound by the finding in that regard.

AUDITORIUM CO. v. BARSOTTI et al. (Civ. 2658.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 7, 1919.)

1. EVIDENCE 424 — WRITTEN AGREEMENTS — CONTRADICTION — PAROL EVIDENCE.

While as between the parties to it, or as between them and other persons extending credit upon its face as forming a partnership relation, the parties to a written agreement would not be permitted to contradict its terms by parol evidence, such principle does not apply to cases where the question as to the real understanding between the parties signing the agreement arises between them, or any of them, and outside parties who have in their dealings not known of or depended upon the existence of a partnership relation.

2. PARTNERSHIP 65 — NATURE OF RELATION — INTEREST IN PROFITS.

The mere agreement between two or more persons to divide the profits of an undertaking is not sufficient to constitute them partners, but it is the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together which is the distinguishing feature of a partnership.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Partnership.]

3. PARTNERSHIP 66 — SHARING PROFITS.

Where one person advanced money to another on condition that he share in the profits, the money advanced to be repaid, whether the enterprise was successful or not, the transaction did not create a partnership relation, but rather that of debtor and creditor.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by the Auditorium Company against C. Barsotti and others, as partners. From a judgment in favor of the named defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Olin Wellborn, Jr., A. I. McCormick, and Stephen Monteleone, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles Baer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This action was commenced by the plaintiff against the defendants, who were alleged to be partners doing business under the firm name and style of the "Western Metropolitan Grand Opera Company," to recover the aggregate sum of $9,739.86 upon three separate counts; the first and second being upon accounts stated, for the sums of $2,490.34 and $4,949.52, respectively, and the third count being for money had and received, in the sum of $2,300. The defendant D'Avigneau defaulted, and the action as to him was later dismissed. The defendants Barsotti and Patrizi answered separately, each denying that Barsotti was at any time a member of the alleged copartnership, but each alleging that the defendants Patrizi and D'Avigneau constituted its only members. The only issue presented upon this appeal is as to whether the defendant Barsotti was in fact a partner of his codefendants. The trial court found that he was not and rendered judgment accordingly in his favor. The plaintiff and appellant herein urges that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and judgment of the court in this regard.

A review of the record in the case convinces us that the evidence is sufficient to fairly establish the following facts:

During the year 1913 the defendants Patrizi and D'Avigneau were interested in the production of grand opera. In the spring of that year the former of these discussed with the officers of the plaintiff the matter of the organization of a company for the purpose of playing grand opera engagements in San Francisco and Los Angeles during that year. To that end Patrizi became associated with D'Avigneau, and on August 13, 1913, an agreement in writing was entered into between the officers of the plaintiff and Patrizi and D'Avigneau as parties of the second part by which the former were to advance to the latter the sum of $7,500 on or before August 31, 1913, upon the express condition that the latter should secure on or before said date the additional sum of $12,000, which combined sums were to be used for the purpose of organizing and operating an opera company to fill said engagements. Patrizi and D'Avigneau endeavored to raise this sum, said sum to be supplied by them by subscription, but failed in this endeavor, whereupon D'Avigneau suggested to Patrizi that he attempt to obtain the money from his friend Barsotti. They discussed between themselves the inducement apparently in the way of a bonus which should be offered to Barsotti to furnish this money, and agreed to offer him one-third of the profits of the San Francisco and Los Angeles engagements. Patrizi went to Barsotti with the proposition and induced him to advance the sum of $10,000. Barsotti and Patrizi both testify that this was to be an advance to be repaid out of the first profits earned in these engagements. Thereupon Patrizi drew up the document which is mainly relied upon by the appellant herein as being the articles of the alleged partnership, which document was signed by Patrizi, D'Avigneau, and Barsotti. It recited that it was the intention of the parties to it to establish an operative organization, to be known as the "Western Metropolitan Opera Company," to give an opera season in San Francisco and in Los Angeles, and that it was agreed by them that "each will hold one-third interest in said enterprise, and that, if any profits will be derived from same at the end of the contemplated season, said profits are to be divided equally among said three parties." As to the part which Barsotti was to perform in this undertaking it was agreed:

"Dr. C. Barsotti will help Messrs. Patrizi and D'Avigneau in securing a certain sum of money of about $10,000 by a note to be signed also by E. Patrizi and E. D'Avigneau, and to furnish certain bonds and guaranties which may be needed to help the work and development of the enterprise."

The evidence further shows that, after the execution of this agreement, Barsotti did pledge his credit at a certain San Francisco bank, by which the sum of $10,000 was realized, and that thereafter the two defendants Patrizi and D'Avigneau went ahead with the execution of the contract which they had entered into with the plaintiff's officers. The evidence sufficiently shows that as to the transactions between these two defendants and the plaintiff, through its officers, Barsotti was never consulted, nor his consent or signature asked or given, in the making or signing of agreements, or in any of the negotiations between these parties, and we think the evidence also sufficiently shows that neither the plaintiff nor any of its officers were aware of any such relation as that of partnership between Barsotti and his two codefendants until after the liabilities upon which this action is predicated had arisen, and that at no time did the plaintiff deal with, or extend credit to, his said codefendants upon the belief that Barsotti was their copartner. While upon the witness stand, both Barsotti and Patrizi denied the existence of such copartnership, and both testified that the understanding and agreement was that the money secured through Barsotti's credit and accommodation was to be repaid to him, whether the opera enterprise was successful or not.

[1-3] Upon the face of the foregoing state of facts we think there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of the trial court that a copartnership was not shown to have existed between Patrizi, D'Avigneau, and Barsotti so as to render the latter liable upon the obligations created as between the former two persons and the plaintiff herein. It is true that the written agreement upon which the plaintiff relies as conclusively establishing such relation, standing alone, would strongly support such a conclusion; and while, as between the parties to it, or as between them and third persons extending credit upon its face as forming such partnership relation, the parties to it would not be permitted to contradict its terms, this principle does not apply to cases where the question as to what the real understanding between the parties signing the agreement was, arises as between them or any of them and outside parties who have in their dealings not known of or depended upon the existence of a partnership relation. Under such conditions the parties may be permitted orally or by circumstances to show that no partnership in fact was contemplated between them, notwithstanding the terms of their written agreement. It is to be noted in this connection that the words "partners" or "partnership" are nowhere to be found in the writing upon which the plaintiff mainly relies; but that the partnership, if any, is to be inferred from the fact that the parties to it were to share equally in the profits, if any, of the enterprise which the two parties other than Barsotti were to actively engage in. It has been quite uniformly held that the mere agreement between two or more persons to divide the profits of an undertaking is not sufficient to constitute them partners, but that it is "the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together," which is the distinguishing feature of a partnership. Hammond v. Borgwardt, 126 Cal. 611, 59 Pac. 121; Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 451, 55 Pac. 147; Vanderhurst v. De Witt, 95 Cal. 57, 30 Pac. 94, 20 L. R. A. 595; Cadenasso v. Antonelle, 127 Cal. 382, 59 Pac. 765; Title, etc., Co. v. Grider, 152 Cal. 746, 94 Pac. 601. An instructive case, strongly resembling, in some of its aspects, the case at bar, is that of Gille H. & I. Co. v. McCleverty, 89 Mo. App. 158, in which the court says:

"We think that the contract shows it to have been the intention that McCleverty should advance a certain amount of money which Harrison was to use in his mercantile business, and if successful he was to return it with one-third of the profits; and if unsuccessful, and the advancement was lost, then that was to be the end of the matter as far as the former was concerned. It is true that the contract does not expressly provide that Harrison was to return the advancement, but we think that fact may be fairly inferred from all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence. Our conclusion is that the transaction between the defendants did not create the partnership relation, but rather that of debtor and creditor."

It will thus sufficiently appear that it is our conclusion that the findings and judgment of the trial court are amply supported by the evidence in the case.

Judgment affirmed.

JAMES EVA ESTATE v. MECCA CO.
(Civ. 2741.)

(District Court of Appeal. First District, Division 2, California. April 1, 1919. On Rehearing in Supreme Court May 29, 1919.)

1. INSURANCE ⇨2—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CONTRACTS OF INSURANCE.

Pol. Code, § 594, subd. 5, invalidating "all policies and other contracts of insurance" issued without compliance with sections 594 to 596, relating to office of insurance commissioners and transaction of insurance business, does not require brewing company to comply therewith by placing itself under jurisdiction of insurance commissioner before making contract guaranteeing performance of a lease by one of its customers; such statutes applying exclusively to the conduct of business of insurance.

2. CORPORATIONS ⇨370(1)—POWERS—"ULTRA VIRES."

The term "ultra vires" may refer to an act entirely beyond the scope of the powers of the corporation to perform under any circumstances or for any purpose, or may be applied to an act within general powers of corporation for some purposes but beyond such powers for other purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ultra Vires.]

3. CORPORATIONS ⇨385—ULTRA VIRES ACTS —AVAILABILITY AS A DEFENSE.

When the act is within the corporate powers for some purpose or under some conditions, the defense of ultra vires is not available unless it be shown that the party dealing with the corporation had notice of the intention to perform the act for an unauthorized purpose, or under circumstances not justifying its performance.

4. CORPORATIONS ⇨385—ULTRA VIRES ACTS.

The attempt of a corporation to use the defense of ultra vires as a means of escaping its liability to a third party is regarded with much less favor than when a direct attack is made upon such corporate act by a stockholder or by the state.

5. CORPORATIONS ⇨389—ULTRA VIRES ACTS —BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where corporate act is within the powers of the corporation for some purposes, and is claimed to be without its powers under given circumstances, the burden of proving latter state of affairs rests upon corporation denying its liability.

6. CORPORATIONS ⇨461—POWERS—BREWING COMPANY—EXTENDING AID TO CUSTOMERS.

Corporation whose purpose, as provided by its articles of incorporation, is to operate and maintain the general business of brewing and malting, may, in furtherance of its own interest, extend financial aid to its customers.

7. CORPORATIONS ⇨389—ULTRA VIRES ACTS —GUARANTY CONTRACT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Brewing corporation seeking to avoid liability on its contract guaranteeing performance of a lease by one of its customers on ground that contract was ultra vires has burden of proving that it received no benefit therefrom, since such guaranty might, under some circumstances, be within its corporate powers.

8. GUARANTY ⇨87—DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR—PLEADING.

In lessor's action against guarantor of lessee's performance, defense that guarantor was discharged by alteration of lease is not available where not pleaded.

9. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨200(2)—REBATE IN RENT—EFFECT ON LEASE.

Rebates for certain months from amount of rent specified in lease are not sufficient to establish a change in the written contract so as to affect the amount of future installments of rent.

10. GUARANTY ⇨53(3)—DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR—CHANGE IN CONTRACT.

Rebate granted by lessor in amount of rent from rate specified in lease did not discharge guarantor of lessee's performance of lease, where guarantor asked for and consented to such change.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

11. CORPORATIONS — 389—ULTRA VIRES CONTRACT — BENEFIT TO CORPORATION — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In lessor's action against brewing company on its contract guaranteeing performance of a lease by one of its customers, where ultra vires defense was interposed, evidence held to show that the contract was of benefit to the brewing company.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by the James Eva Estate against the Mecca Company and the Oakland Brewing & Malting Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and the last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed. Rehearing denied in Supreme Court.

Snook & Church, of Oakland, for appellant.
W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. Action by a lessor for the collection of delinquent rent, against its lessee and two sureties, upon a bond guaranteeing the faithful performance on the part of said lessee of the covenants of a written lease. The lessee suffered default and the action was tried as against the sureties alone. Judgment was rendered against both sureties, from which one of them appeals. The appellant urges three grounds for reversal, which will be considered in the order in which they are made.

[1] It is claimed that the bond executed by appellant is void because "it was entered into contrary to express statutory law, to wit, sections 594-596, inclusive, of the Political Code of the state of California." The sections referred to are found in article 16 of the Political Code, which article by its title and provisions refers to the office of insurance commissioner, the performance of his duties, and the transaction of the business of insurance under his supervision. The particular sections relied upon are section 594, subd. 5, which provides that fidelity and surety insurance includes " * * * guaranteeing and executing all bonds, undertakings, and contracts of suretyship, and guaranteeing the performance of contracts other than insurance policies," and the closing paragraph of subdivision 6 of section 596, which reads as follows: "All policies and other contracts of insurance, issued without full compliance by all parties concerned with the laws of this state, shall be null and void." Appellant urges that the bond here sued upon comes within the term "other contracts of insurance" found in section 596, as defined in section 594. If such contention is correct, it follows that it is illegal for any corporation to execute in this state any bond guaranteeing the performance of any contract, or even to guarantee the payment of a promissory note, without having first complied with the provisions of the Political Code above referred to, and placed itself under the jurisdiction of the insurance commissioner. In our opinion the Code sections relied upon are intended to apply exclusively to the conduct of the business of insurance as such, and their provisions cannot be stretched to cover the case of a single contract of guaranty such as the one involved in this action. We hold therefore, that said sections have no application to the facts of this case.

[2, 3] It is next contended that the contract sued upon is a mere naked guaranty, and is therefore ultra vires of the purposes and powers of the appellant corporation, and for that reason void. The term ultra vires, when applied to the act of a corporation, is used in different senses. It may indicate that the act referred to is entirely beyond the scope of the powers of the corporation to perform under any circumstances or for any purpose, or, again, the term may be applied to an act of a corporation which may be fully within the scope of the general powers of the corporation for some purposes, but beyond such powers for other purposes. The rights of persons dealing with the corporation vary according as the act is ultra vires in one or the other of these senses. When the act is within the corporate powers for some purposes or under some conditions, the rights of parties who have dealt with the corporation, under the express or implied representation that it is acting within such powers in the making of a particular contract, are entitled to favorable consideration. In such a case the defense of ultra vires is not available, unless it be shown that the party dealing with the corporation had notice of the intention to perform the act for an unauthorized purpose, or under circumstances not justifying its performance. Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, at pages 578 to 588, 99 Am. Dec. 300; 10 Cyc. 1148-9.

[4] The attempt of a corporation to use the defense of ultra vires as a means of escaping its liability to third parties is regarded with much less favor than when a direct attack upon such corporate act is made by a stockholder or by the state. McQuaide v. Enterprise Brewing Co., 14 Cal. App. 315, 111 Pac. 927.

[5] It is the further established rule in this state that, in cases where the corporate act is within the powers of the corporation for some purposes and is claimed to be without its powers under given circumstances, the burden of proving the latter state of affairs rests upon the corporation denying its liability. Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. at page 585, 99 Am. Dec. 300; Morgan v. Board of Education, 136 Cal. 245, 247, 68 Pac. 703; Brown v. Board of Education, 103 Cal. 531, 534, 37 Pac. 503.

[6] With the above principles in mind, we take up the record before us. The plaintiff introduced in evidence its lease, to which the bond sued upon is attached. Accompanying this bond is a certified copy of a resolution duly adopted by the directors of the appellant corporation, wherein it is recited that it is for the best interests of that corporation that the lessee "shall secure the rights and privileges of the said lease under the terms thereof." In its attempt to prove that the execution of this bond was beyond its corporate powers, appellant introduced in evidence its articles of incorporation. These provide that the purpose of the corporation is to operate and maintain the general business of brewing and malting. Under such general powers a corporation may, in furtherance of its own interests, extend financial aid to its customers. Armour & Co. v. Rosenberg & Sons Co., 173 Pac. 404.

[7] It is conceded by appellant that if a corporation derives a direct and substantial benefit from the making of a contract of the character of the one here involved, "then the contract will be considered to be intra vires, or possibly, if ultra vires, that the corporation will be estopped to set up that defense." In other words, it is admitted that the execution of a guaranty of this character might, under some circumstances, be within the corporate powers of appellant. The case falls, therefore, directly within the principles of law above referred to. The execution of the bond was not beyond the powers of the corporation under all circumstances or for all purposes. In order to sustain the defense that its execution under the circumstances of this case was beyond such powers, it was incumbent upon appellant to show that it received no direct benefit therefrom. An examination of the record discloses no evidence of that character. On the contrary, it appears that the appellant was a creditor of the lessee, at the time the delinquent rent sued for accrued, upon a merchandise and cash loan account. There is no direct evidence, however, that this relation existed at the time the bond was executed, nor that the purchase of merchandise from appellant was a condition for the execution of such bond. It is unnecessary to determine whether or not this is sufficient proof of the receipt of a direct benefit by the appellant corporation. The appellant did not prove that no such benefit was received by it. The burden of proof as to that matter being upon appellant, it cannot be held that the contract was ultra vires of the powers of the corporation.

[8-10] The final contention of appellant is that the guarantor was discharged from liability for the reason that the principal obligation of the lessee was changed and altered in a material respect without the consent of the guarantor. The change in the principal obligation relied upon is the fact that the lessor made a rebate, for certain months, from the amount of rent specified in the lease, to the lessee and to a committee of its creditors. To this contention there are three answers: (1) No such defense was pleaded by the defendant. (2) Concessions of this kind are not sufficient to establish a change in the written contract so as to affect the amount of future installments of rent. Sinnige v. Oswald, 170 Cal. 55, 57, 148 Pac. 203. (3) Part of these concessions of rent were made to the committee of creditors, of whom Mr. Wieking, the vice president of the appellant corporation, was one. He was called as a witness and asked by the court whether or not the arrangement of a rebate of $150 on the $450 monthly rent was satisfactory to him. He stated that it was, and the only objection he had to the rebate was that it was not as large as he had sought to obtain. The appellant corporation, through its vice president, having asked for and consented to this change in the amount of rent, cannot be heard to object thereto.

In our opinion none of the contentions of appellant is well founded. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

PER CURIAM. [11] In view of the circumstances disclosed by the evidence in this case, including the recital in the resolution adopted by the directors of the appellant corporation to the effect that it is for the best interests of the corporation that the lessee shall secure the rights and privileges of the lease, we are satisfied that there was a sufficient showing of benefit to appellant corporation to make its undertaking valid. We express no opinion on the question of burden of proof discussed in the opinion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of John P. McGue, deceased. From an order of the superior court settling an account rendered by Elizabeth E. McGue, as administratrix of the estate of said deceased, Abram L. McGue and another appeal. Reversed.

Stephens & Stephens, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bordwell & Mathews and D. C. Burrey, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The appeal herein is taken from an order of the superior court settling an account current rendered by Elizabeth E. McGue as administratrix of the estate of John P. McGue, deceased.

In the account the administratrix charged against herself the sum of $138,068.41 as the amount of inventory and appraisement. This inventory and appraisement included a one-half interest in a certain note executed by one Boggs on December 16, 1913, payable to the decedent, John P. McGue, and the said Elizabeth E. McGue, who was then his wife, for the sum of $8,500. In the inventory the estate was given credit for only a one-half interest in this note, and it was appraised therein at $4,250. Consequently the account covered but a one-half interest in the note. Abram L. McGue, a brother of the decedent, and Delbert McGue, the son of a deceased brother, the appellants herein, filed exceptions to the account, alleging that the decedent at the time of his death owned the entire interest in the Boggs note, and that the account was incorrect and false in so far as it failed to charge against the administratrix and credit to the estate the whole amount of said note. The appellants are heirs of the decedent, but not the only heirs.

The respondent in answer to the exceptions alleged that at the time of the execution of the Boggs note in 1913 McGue made a gift to her of a one-half interest in the note and in the mortgage given to secure the same, and that she thereby became the owner of said one-half as her own property. She further alleged that thereafter, on September 22, 1915, some four months before McGue's death, he was duly adjudged to be an incompetent person and that she was appointed his guardian; that as such guardian she filed an inventory and appraisement of his estate, in

1. INSANE PERSONS ~~C=~~42(3) — ORDER SET-TLING ACCOUNTS OF GUARDIAN—CONCLU-SIVENESS.

Where wife, as guardian of her husband, charged herself with entire interest in a note in which she had a half interest, as property belonging to the husband, the order of the court settling her account as guardian, and directing her to turn over the balance of said estate to administratrix of estate of husband, now deceased, was an adjudication against her that estate of deceased was the owner of the note and the whole thereof, and, where not appealed from, revoked, or reopened, is conclusive against her, and cannot be collaterally attacked.

which the entire interest in said note was by mistake listed as belonging to the ward and was valued at $8,500; that her said husband died on January 21, 1916; that thereafter, in preparing a final account as such guardian, she failed to observe said error in the inventory; and that by charging herself with the amount of said inventory she charged herself as guardian with the entire interest in said note as property belonging to her said husband. She also alleged that she did not discover said mistake and was not aware that this said account and inventory included the entire interest in said note as the property of the ward until shortly afterwards, when she came to make out her inventory as the administratrix of the estate of said decedent.

Upon the trial the court made findings to the effect that the administratrix was the owner of the one-half interest in said note at all times, and that the estate of McGue, deceased, owned the other one-half interest therein, and that she should be charged with only one-half thereof in her account current as administratrix, and settled the account accordingly. The appellants claim that the evidence does not support the finding that Mrs. McGue was at all times the owner of said one-half interest in said note.

We do not find it necessary to examine carefully the evidence in proof of the gift by John P. McGue to his wife, of a one-half interest in the Boggs note. Assuming it to have been sufficient to support the express finding that such gift was made, we are nevertheless of the opinion that such proof was unavailing to support the order, for reasons presently to be stated.

[1] On the trial there was introduced in evidence the inventory rendered by Mrs. McGue as guardian of her said husband, her final account as such guardian, and the order of the court settling said account and directing her as such guardian "to turn over the balance of said estate to the legally appointed administratrix of the estate of John P. McGue, deceased." This order was an adjudication against her of the fact that the estate of her deceased husband, and not herself, was the owner of said note and of the whole thereof, and, as it had become final, it was conclusive of that fact as against her. Brodrig v. Brodrig, 56 Cal. 563; Guardianship of Wells, 140 Cal. 353, 73 Pac. 1065. The law is thus stated by Mr. Woerner:

"On the termination of the guardianship * * * the accounting between the guardian and ward, or between them and their respective representatives, is final, and the order, judgment, or decree thereon by the court having jurisdiction is necessarily conclusive against all the world, like any other judgment by the court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties. * * * Unless appealed from, revoked, or reopened, such settlement cannot be collaterally attacked * * * in any collateral proceeding." Woerner on Guardianship, p. 327, § 98.

He states only this qualification of the doctrine:

"As to all matters lawfully embraced therein, the final settlement is conclusive; but matters not embraced therein are not concluded, and the ward may recover of the guardian personally a fund which came to the guardian's hands before his appointment, and which was never accounted for in his settlements." (Id. p. 340.)

[2] The court has jurisdiction, in the guardianship proceeding, to settle the account of a guardian after the death of the ward. Code Civ. Proc. § 1774.

In view of these principles we are bound to conclude that the finding that the respondent is the owner in her own right of one-half interest in the Boggs note is contrary to the law and the evidence.

The order is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Sarah C. Rounds, deceased. From an order refusing to make partial distribution of assets of estate to certain nieces and nephews of deceased, they appeal. Affirmed.

Hammack & Hammack and D. S. Hammack, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles Lantz, Howard F. Shepherd, Marc Ryan, L. V. Shafer, Mulford & Dryer, Porter & Sutton, and Slosson & Mitchell, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by certain nieces and nephews of Sarah C. Rounds from an order refusing to make a partial distribution to them of the assets of her estate by reason of the fact that they are heirs, respectively, of her sister, Mary E. Barbour, and her brother, Hiram Edwards.

Mrs. Rounds died testate. She left certain legacies to charity and to nephews and nieces, and her will contained the following provision: "To each of my sisters and brothers living five hundred ($500) dollars." At the time the will was executed she had two sisters and a brother living. Two of them Hiram A. Edwards and Mrs. Mary E. Barbour, predeceased the testatrix. Appellants here, who are the sons and daughters of the deceased sister and brother of Mrs. Rounds, are, under section 1310 of the Civil Code, as they assert, entitled to take, as descendants, their proportions of the legacies of these predeceased beneficiaries under the will of Mrs. Rounds.

[1] The whole question presented to this court turns upon the interpretation of the word "living" as used in the will. Appellants cheerfully concede that ordinarily a will speaks as of the time of the death of the testator or testatrix, but they insist that in the present case the evidence indicates, conceding its admissibility, that the testatrix intended to use the word as applying to the time of the execution of the testament. With this view we are unable to agree. The only witness whose testimony appears in the record is Mary C. Rodgers, a friend of Mrs. Rounds, who advised and assisted her in her business matters and who drew her will. Mrs. Rodgers made several rough drafts of wills for her friend before the one now in course of probate was executed. One of these contained the following provision:

"To each of my brothers and sisters living two hundred ($200.00) dollars. Their names Mrs. Mary M. Barber, Mrs. Helen Augusta McOmber, William J. Edwards and Hiram A. Edwards."

[2, 3] After the preparation of this rough draft William Edwards died, and his sister then drew a pencil line through his name. Mrs. Rounds then told Mrs. Rodgers that she had one brother and two sisters who were still alive, and that she wanted provision made for them to the extent of $500 each. Mrs. Rodgers then wrote the clause of the will which is here in dispute, and she testified: "I do not think that Mrs. Rounds suggested the use of the word 'living' in this connection." We do not see how this testimony indicates the intention of the testatrix to use the word "living" as of the date of the execution of the will. Surely the mere elimination of the name of her deceased brother, William, from the rough draft would indicate no such intention unless it were accompanied by some direction that his share should be apportioned according to the statute of descents or in some similar manner ratably. The fact that Mrs. Rodgers used her own phraseology rather than that of Mrs. Rounds is not at all significant, because by subscribing the instrument Mrs. Rounds adopted the language, and we are bound by the phraseology as written. Words in a will referring to survivorship simply relate to the time of the testator's death. Section 1336, Civ. Code; Estate of Alexander, 149 Cal. 146, 85 Pac. 308, 9 Ann. Cas. 1141; In re Winter, 114 Cal. 186, 45 Pac. 1063. In many other jurisdictions this, too, seems to be the general rule. 40 Cyc. p. 1424; McCoury's Executors v. Leek, 14 N. J. Eq. 70, 76.

Appeal of O'BARN.

(S. F. 8714.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨930(2) — PRESUMPTION—CORRECT INSTRUCTION FOLLOWED.

It cannot be presumed that jury disobeyed instructions and decided case outside of issues.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1066 — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

An instruction, correct in law but on subjects outside the issues, is not cause for reversal, unless it tends to mislead the jury as to the question for decision.

3. WILLS ⇨323 — PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

That testatrix had previously executed similar wills and was then of sound mind is a legitimate subject for argument as to her sanity while executing the will in question.

4. TRIAL ⇨240 — INSTRUCTIONS — ARGUMENTATIVE INSTRUCTIONS.

While the giving of an instruction argumentative in form may not always be cause for reversal, the court is not bound to give it, even if the argument therein be a legitimate one.

5. TRIAL ⇨244(3) — PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — INSTRUCTIONS EMPHASIZING FACTS.

A requested instruction that testatrix had previously executed similar wills and was then of sound mind, and that such fact did not necessarily establish her sanity when executing the will in question, was erroneous, as emphasizing facts tending to prove or disprove an ultimate fact in issue.

6. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 253(8)—INSTRUCTIONS—IGNORING ADMITTED FACT—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

Where execution of will was admitted, the phrase "at the time it is claimed the said will was made," in a requested instruction on testamentary capacity, improperly suggests that execution was still in issue, and was correctly modified by substituting the phrase, "at the time of the execution of the will."

7. WILLS $\hookrightarrow$ 330(1)—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—INSTRUCTIONS—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

A requested instruction on testamentary capacity, stating that the jury have "a right to consider" the terms of the will, is properly modified by substituting the statement that the jury "are to consider all the evidence."

8. WILLS $\hookrightarrow$ 330(1)—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—INSTRUCTIONS—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

A requested instruction that testatrix was of unsound mind if she did not understand while signing the will "each and all of its provisions" was not improperly modified by substituting the phrase "its provisions."

9. WILLS $\hookrightarrow$ 383—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

The elimination of the phrase, "I charge you her mind was unsound," in a requested instruction, was not harmful, where the succeeding phrase stated substantially the same thing.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1170(9)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In a will contest on the ground of mental incapacity, rulings as to instructions, if technically erroneous, will not cause a reversal, where the case made by contestants that testatrix was of unsound mind was extremely weak, while the great preponderance of the evidence was in favor of proponents, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Proceedings to probate the will of Bridget Clark, deceased, in which James Egan and E. M. Leonard as executors were proponents and John J. O'Barn was contestant. Revocation of an order admitting the will to probate was refused, and John J. O'Barn appeals. Affirmed.

Walter H. Linforth and Samuel M. Samter, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edward I. Coffey, Jeremiah B. Coffey, Garrett W. McEnerney, Andrew F. Burke, and Edward M. Leonard, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to revoke a previous order admitting to probate a certain document as the last will of Bridget Clark, deceased.

It was admitted that the will was duly executed. The only ground of contest presented at the trial was that at the time of its execution the decedent was not mentally competent to make a will. The verdict was against the contestants. The only points urged in support of the appeal are certain rulings in the giving and refusing of instructions.

One of the instructions given was to the effect that the will purported to give more than one-third of the estate to charitable purposes, and "that the amount by which the sums so bequeathed for charitable purposes exceed one-third of the estate of said decedent will go to the persons and in the proportions in which the estate of said decedent would have descended had she died intestate."

The appellant concedes that this is a correct statement of the law on the subject, but objects to it on the ground that it was directed to a point that was not in issue, that it was irrelevant, and that the jury may have been induced to give a decision against the contestant because of the fact that it informed them that he would receive a substantial part of the estate, even if the will, which gave him nothing, were allowed to stand unrevoked.

The closing instruction was as follows:

"Gentlemen, the only issue for you to determine in this case is the question whether or not Bridget Clark was of sound and disposing mind at the date of the execution of the will in question, which was on the 21st of September, 1915, and to that you will answer yes, or no, according as nine of your number conclude."

The court then gave the jury a prepared form of verdict, which the jury answered and returned as follows:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled cause find a special issue. Was the decedent, Bridget Clark of sound and disposing mind on the 21st of September, 1915, at the time of the execution of the will in question? Answer: Yes. Edward A. Dakin, Foreman."

[1, 2] Over and over again the instructions repeated the statement that this was the only thing the jury was to decide, and that it must be decided from the evidence in the case. The instructions on the subject were complete, elaborate, and clear. We cannot, on appeal, indulge in the surmise that the jury may have disobeyed these elaborate and express instructions of the court, disregarded their oaths to decide the cause from the evidence introduced and in accordance with the law as given them by the court, and may have gone afield upon an inquiry as to the extent of the estate and the amounts which the interested parties would ultimately receive. The instruction objected to did not direct them to such inquiry. The giving of it may have been suggested by the closing argument of counsel for appellant to the jury, wherein he erroneously stated that under the provisions of the will, as made, $24,000 of the $39,000 estate would go to the church. But, however this may be, the instruction was correct in point of law, and, though it may have been irrelevant to the issue, there was nothing in it which could tend to mislead or confuse the jury with regard to a question so clearly and precisely submitted for its decision. An instruction correct in law, but upon a subject that is outside the issues, is not cause for a reversal, unless it tends to mislead the jury as to the question for decision. George v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 126 Cal. 361, 58 Pac. 819, 46 L. R. A. 829, 77 Am. St. Rep. 184; 14 Ruling Case Law, 782; People v. Park, 62 Cal. 206.

Two previous wills of the testatrix, one dated July 12, 1910, the other November 14, 1912, each making dispositions of her estate similar to those made in the will in question, were admitted in evidence. The appellant asked the court to instruct the jury that these wills were to be considered as well as all the other evidence admitted, and that if they should find they were executed by her, and that she was then of sound mind, "It does not necessarily follow from these facts, and these facts alone, that at the time of the alleged execution of the will in question she was of sound mind," and that they "should give these facts only such consideration as in your judgment they may be entitled to."

[3-5] The statement included in the instruction that the fact that she had previously executed similar wills, and was then of sound mind, did not necessarily establish the fact that she was of sound mind when she executed the later will in controversy is in the nature of an argument to the jury. It was a legitimate argument for the appellant's attorney to advance in his address to the jury. Opposing counsel could with equal propriety argue that the fact of the execution of two similar wills when she was admittedly of sound mind was sufficient evidence to satisfy the jury of her sanity when she made the will in question. But it is not the province of the court to make an argument to the jury, and though the giving of an instruction argumentative in form may not always be cause for reversal, it is also true that the court is not bound to give such an instruction even if the argument be a legitimate one, and the refusal thereof is not error. People v. Stanton, 106 Cal. 139, 142, 39 Pac. 525; People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 147; People v. Hertz, 105 Cal. 665, 39 Pac. 32; Birmingham, etc., Co. v. Martin, 148 Ala. 8, 42 South. 618; 38 Cyc. 1600. Furthermore, it violated the rule that the court need not give an instruction which emphasizes one of the facts, among others, which tend to prove or disprove an ultimate fact in issue. The instructions given were to the effect that the jury should consider all the evidence introduced at the trial bearing on the condition of her mind prior to, at the time of, and subsequent to the date of the will in question, and that the jury should consider her state of mind on other occasions only in so far as the same sheds light upon her state of mind when the will in question was executed. The refusal of the instruction could not have been prejudicial.

The third ruling complained of was in modifying the following instruction asked by the appellant:

"In determining the question of the soundness or unsoundness of mind of Bridget Clark, at the time it is claimed the said will was made, you have a right to consider the terms and provisions thereof, and if you believe from the evidence that, at the time of the signing of the said instrument, she did not have the mental capacity to understand each and all of its provisions, and in fact did not understand each and all of its provisions, then I charge you her mind was unsound, and your answer to the issue, Was she of sound mind at that time? will be No."

As modified by the court and given it was as follows:

"In determining the question of the soundness or unsoundness of mind of Bridget Clark, at the time of the execution of the will in question, you are to consider all of the evidence herein, and if you believe from the evidence that, at the time of the signing of the said instrument, she did not have the mental capacity to understand its provisions, and in fact did not understand its provisions, then your answer to the issue, Was she of sound and disposing mind at that time? will be No."

[6-9] The court correctly struck out the phrase "at the time it is claimed the said will was made" and inserted in lieu thereof the phrase "at the time of the execution of the will." At the trial the execution of the will was admitted, and it was improper for the court to suggest, as the requested instruction did, that its execution was still under consideration. The substitution of the statement that the jury "are to consider" the evidence, for the statement requested that they have "a right to consider" it, was, of course, correct. Instead of limiting their attention, as the instruction requested provided, to "the terms and provisions" of the will in question, the instruction as given directed the jury to consider all of the evidence herein. This was a correct instruction, while that requested might have misled the jury to confine their consideration to the will alone. The substitution of the phrase "its provisions," referring to the will, for the phrase "each and all of its provisions," was not improper. The elimination of the phrase in the requested instruction, "I charge you her mind was unsound," was not harmful, inasmuch as the succeeding phrase stated substantially the same thing.

[10] Finally, it may be said that even if the rulings complained of had been technically erroneous, it cannot be said that they were prejudicial or that their effect was such as to cause a miscarriage of justice. The case made by the appellant regarding the mental condition of the testatrix at the time of the execution of the will was an extremely weak one. On the other hand, the proponents of the will introduced an abundance of evidence satisfactory in character, showing that the decedent was then of sound mind. The great preponderance of the evidence was in favor of the proponents. Under these circumstances, the judgment cannot be reversed. Constitution, art. 6, § 4½. The order is affirmed.

PERKINS v. TRUEBLOOD. (L. A. 4951.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1919.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⇐18(7)—MALPRACTICE—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a malpractice case, evidence regarding a fracture, and condition of plaintiff's leg previous to defendant's alleged negligent treatment thereof, held admissible.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇐55(3) — MALPRACTICE CASE.

A malpractice case, instituted within one year of defendant's alleged negligent treatment, but over a year after plaintiff's leg had been fractured and defendant's treatment had commenced, was not barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, prescribing a one-year limitation period in such cases.

3. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⇐18(8)—MALPRACTICE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not to sustain finding that defendant physician was negligent in setting and treating plaintiff's fractured leg.

Department 2.

Appeal from the Superior Court of Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by C. W. Perkins against W. E. Trueblood. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Stratton & Kaufman and Wm. P. Hubbard, all of San Francisco, and Rowen Irwin, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Emmons & Hudson, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an action for damages, wherein the plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant, a physician and surgeon, for alleged negligence in the performance of a surgical operation upon the plaintiff in setting a broken leg. The negligence relied upon for a cause of action is charged in those allegations of the complaint which aver:

"That the plaintiff herein by an accident broke his leg during the month of April, 1912. That thereafter the plaintiff employed the defendant, who is a surgeon, as such surgeon, for a reasonable reward to be paid therefor, to set and heal the same. That the defendant so negligently and unskillfully conducted himself, in attempting to set said leg of the said plaintiff, that the broken portions of the said leg were not joined, and that at both ends of the said fracture the parts overlapped, and the same did not heal or become strong, and that subsequently the same leg broke again at the same place without any fault of the said plaintiff."

The denial of these allegations, coupled with the defense of the statute of limitations, which was specially pleaded, presented the only issues in the case.

The complaint in the action was filed on April 9, 1913. The court below tried the case without a jury, and made its findings in favor of the plaintiff, which in substance were that the plaintiff broke his leg in March, 1912; that the defendant was employed to reduce the fracture; that, the fracture not satisfactorily healing, the defendant separated the surfaces of the bone during the month of April, 1912, and again set the plaintiff's leg; that the defendant performed the latter operation negligently; and that by reason thereof the plaintiff had suffered damage in the sum of $1,250.

[1, 2] The appeal is from the judgment, and presents the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings and also the question of the correctness of rulings admitting evidence concerning the plaintiff's condition and the defendant's surgical treatment of him prior to April 9, 1912. While the court's findings rested the plaintiff's cause of action upon the defendant's negligent resetting of the plaintiff's leg in April, 1912, nevertheless it would seem that the trial court proceeded upon the theory, and correctly so, we think, that the negligence ultimately found against the defendant was dependent in a measure upon the condition of the plaintiff's leg at the time of and subsequent to the setting of the original fracture which the trial court found, and the undisputed evidence shows, occurred in March, 1912. Upon this theory, evidence relative to the original fracture, its treatment and progress, and process of its healing, was admissible, to the end that it might be determined whether or not the methods resorted to by the defendant in resetting the leg on or after April 9, 1912, were of a nature which an ordinarily skillful surgeon would have given to a leg in such a condition. This being the theory of the case and the judgment, it follows that there is no merit in the contention that the commencement of the action was barred by subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[3] The plaintiff's case, as revealed by the evidence, seems to rest upon the contention that as a result of the defendant's negligent treatment of the fractured leg on and after April 9, 1912, he was caused great physical pain and suffering, that he could not pursue his usual vocation by reason of the fact that he did not have the full use of the leg, and that some 10 months later the same leg was again broken in the same place in a fall which would not have fractured the leg, if it had been properly treated by the defendant upon the occasion of the second setting. In this connection, it will be noted that, in spite of the great suffering and financial loss claimed to have been endured by the plaintiff for a period of 10 months following the last treatment by the defendant, it affirmatively appears that the defendant was not requested to give any further treatment, and that the plaintiff failed to place himself under the care of any other surgeon. Moreover, apart from the testimony of Dr. Rogers that the plaintiff said that the second fracture was caused by a fall of 3 or 4 feet on an oil rig, and the testimony of the plaintiff that he did not fall over 12 inches, there is no evidence of any circumstance preceding or attending the fall. In view of the fact that a person may snap a perfectly sound leg in a fall of 12 inches or less, the claim that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the second fracture finds, to say the least, very slight support from the facts revealed by the record. Upon this analysis of the case, we find it difficult to consider seriously the claims advanced by the plaintiff. Nevertheless the trial court has entered its findings in favor of those claims, and we shall review the evidence adduced upon the whole case, in order to determine whether it is sufficient to support the findings.

The only evidence which appears to support the finding that the surfaces of the bones were separated in April, 1912, is found in the testimony of Dr. C. A. Rogers. Upon being handed an X-ray photograph of the leg, taken on April 28 or April 29, 1912, Dr. Rogers remarked that, inasmuch as no sign of a callus appeared, he should judge that the leg had been set very recently—a few days prior to the date of the photograph. A callus is a formation of new bony tissue found between and around the fractured ends of a broken bone in the process of reuniting, and we must infer from Dr. Rogers' testimony that, if it forms at all, it begins to show in an X-ray photograph within a few days after the process of reuniting begins. Therefore the fact that Dr. Rogers saw no sign of a callus in the photograph taken on April 28 or April 29, 1912, merely tends to show that no callus was ever formed around the break in question prior to that date. But that fact, if true, cannot serve as the basis for the further inference that a setting of the leg took place a few days prior to the date of the photograph. That this must be so appears from the undisputed fact that the plaintiff originally broke his leg on March 6, 1912, and that it was set on the following day. Since it necessarily follows from Dr. Rogers' testimony that no callus formation appeared at all or at any time after that setting and prior to the date of the photograph, the absence of a callus cannot be taken to indicate a resetting a few days prior to April 28 or April 29, 1912.

But, even assuming that the evidence supports the findings that the defendant separated the surfaces of the fractured bone and reset the leg in April, 1912, still we are of the opinion that the evidence does not show that the defendant failed to use reasonable prudence and skill in performing that operation or in treating the leg thereafter. It is true that there is some evidence which tends to show that at the time of the fall and the second fracture the ends of the broken bone overlapped nearly one-half of an inch, and that there was no complete bony union prior to the treatment of another physician for the final fracture resulting from the fall. In the absence, however, of a showing that such a condition would have been at least improbable, had the leg received reasonably prudent and ordinarily skillful surgical treatment, it cannot be said that the mere pathological condition of the leg in and of itself sufficed to show negligence on the part of the defendant in resetting the leg.

"The difficulties and uncertainties in the practice of medicine and surgery are such that no practitioner can be required to guarantee results, and all the law demands is that he bring and apply to the case in hand that degree of skill, care, knowledge, and attention ordinarily possessed and exercised by practitioners of the medical profession under like circumstances." Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 330, 153 N. W. 695.

With respect to the failure to attain a complete bony union, the plaintiff's experts themselves testified that there was no way for an average or even a skilled surgeon to tell whether ligamentous or bony tissue was being deposited between and around the fractured ends of a broken bone in the process of reuniting, without opening the wound. While Dr. C. A. Rogers testified that it was good surgery to open the wound and staple the bone, especially where, as here, there was an oblique fracture, none of the experts gave it as their opinion that it was not good practice to rely altogether upon casts and splints, as did the defendant in the instant case.

Concerning the overlapping, the plaintiff's expert, Dr. C. A. Rogers, said:

"Sometimes you will have a bone slip with the best in putting on splints anyway."

Again, referring to the break treated by the defendant, he said:

"The break runs obliquely, as distinguished from straight across. Where a bone is broken in that form, it is absolutely a general proposition in surgery more difficult to set that bone in place and hold it in place than where it is straight across. We do not expect to get a perfect alignment of the bone, where the character of the break is such as was this bone."

Dr. Homer Rogers added:

"It is more difficult to reduce a fracture of that character than in reducing a transverse fracture. I would not insure that the reduction of a fracture of the character in question would be perfect."

None of the experts gave it as their opinion that the use of reasonable care and skill would have insured a more perfect reduction.

It follows, from the foregoing analysis of the evidence, that negligence on the part of the defendant must be predicated, if at all, upon some act or omission in the course of the treatment of the fracture by the defendant shown to have been imprudent or unskillful. There is no direct testimony to the effect that the surfaces of the bone were in fact separated during the month of April. There is therefore no direct testimony as to the method adopted by the defendant in aligning the bones and reducing the fracture at that time, even assuming that he did make an attempt to realign the bones and reduce the fracture anew. In the absence of evidence, it cannot be assumed that he proceeded, if he proceeded at all, without ordinary care or skill. It will be necessary, therefore, upon this view of the case, to confine our attention to a consideration of the acts of the defendant as to which there is evidence in the record. It appears that a plaster of paris cast was put on the leg on April 9, 1912; that another cast was put on on April 12, and possibly another on April 17; that the cast was removed on April 25; and that a yucca splint was then put on and held in place by a light bandage. The following testimony of the defendant concerning the circumstances attending and following the treatment of April 25, 1912, is uncontradicted:

"I put on what is called a yucca splint—a splint made from material gotten from the yucca plant for that particular purpose. I put that on and bandaged, and the patient wanted to go to the ranch, I believe the Panama ranch, and I told him he could go by being careful and using his crutch all the time, keeping the splint on for about two weeks from the time that I put it on. * * * I did not see him any more for some time, as he went to the Panama ranch, or some place else, I don't know where. * * * I do not remember of having seen him between that and the time I saw him in April [July], as in the meantime I had gone South on a vacation, and he knew I was going. I told him, if this thing didn't go right, to go on to Dr. Kellogg, or some doctor, to see to it for him during my absence."

There is no evidence to show that he was thereafter called upon to give any further treatment, or to take any further responsibility in the case. There was no testimony of any expert witness who said that anything covered by this treatment was improper, or that there was anything lacking in the treatment which would have been included by a reasonably prudent and skillful surgeon.

In McGraw v. Kerr, 23 Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 873, it is said:

"Negligence on the part of a physician consists in his doing something which he should not have done, or in omitting to do something which he should have done."

Quoting further from the same case:

"The authorities are practically uniform in holding * * * that as to what is or is not proper practice in examination and treatment, or the usual practice and treatment, is a question for experts, and can be established only by their testimony."

See, also, Houghton v. Dickson, 29 Cal. App. 321, 155 Pac. 128; Hesler v. California Hospital Co., 174 Pac. 654.

The evidence wholly fails to show any lack of care and skill on the part of defendant in setting and treating the fractured bone of plaintiff's leg.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

In re HOYTEMA'S ESTATE. (S. F. 8843.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1919.
Rehearing Denied June 28, 1919.)1. WILLS ⚡865(1)—CONSTRUCTION—PARTIAL INTESTACY.

A will directing that in case of testatrix's death it be sent to her brother, and that, should he be dead, named nieces were to sell testatrix's property and divide it between children of a named sister, with two specific bequests of $500 each, held to make division of the property among the children of the named sister contingent and conditional upon testatrix's brother's death, so that, he being alive, the two specific bequests constituted the only effective disposition made by the will, and as to the residuum testatrix died intestate.

2. WILLS ⚡448—CONSTRUCTION FAVORABLE TO TESTACY.

Constructions leading to intestacy, total or partial, are not favored, and will be rejected when the language used reasonably admits of a construction that renders the will effective as to all the property of the decedent.

3. WILLS ⚡440 — CONSTRUCTION — INTENT—LANGUAGE OF WILL.

Although the language used must be liberally construed with a view to carrying into effect what the will as a whole shows was testator's true intent, this intent must, according to Civ. Code, § 1318, be found in the language used in the will, taking into view, in cases of uncertainty arising upon its face, the circumstances under which it was made.

4. WILLS ⚡448 — CONSTRUCTION FAVORING TESTACY.

Courts are not permitted, in order to avoid a conclusion of intestacy, to adopt a construction based on conjecture as to what the testator may have intended, although not expressed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Jennie Hoytema. Appeal from decree of partial distribution. Affirmed.

Shelton & Levy, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Lloyd S. Ackerman, Joseph E. Reardon, Wm. M. Abbott, and Wm. M. Cannon, all of San Francisco (Kingsley Cannon, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an appeal from a decree of partial distribution. The only appellants are the four children of decedent's deceased sister, Anna Mathieson, residents of the kingdom of Denmark, who claim that under a writing admitted to probate as the last will of decedent they are entitled to all of the estate of deceased except two legacies of $500 each. The lower court concluded that such writing was insufficient as a will or otherwise to dispose of the estate of decedent except as to the said two legacies, and that as to all of the estate over $1,000 so disposed of the decedent must be held to have died intestate. The effect of the decision is that, except as to $1,000 to be paid on the two legacies, the estate of decedent will go, one-third to Hans Peter Nelson, surviving brother of decedent; one-third to the three surviving children of her deceased sister, Bena G. Edwardson, one of whom is named Agnes; and one-third to the appellants here, the surviving children of her deceased sister Anna Mathieson, these being all of her heirs at law.

The record is such that we are bound by the finding of the lower court as to the contents of the will, which, the bill of exceptions shows, was entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the decedent, and was almost entirely in the Danish language. The trial court by a finding unquestioned by any specification of insufficiency, declared the same to be in the words and figures following:

"San Francisco, October 5, 1915.

"I am writing these lines in case I should meet with an accident or in any other way die then it is my wish if my brother Hans Peter Nelson is alive send this letter to him. Should he be dead then it is my wish that by brother's daughter Emma and my dead sister Bena's daughter who lives in Chicago, her name is Agnes, shall together sell all my property and divide equally between my dead sister Anna's children by name Engeborg, Anna, Alfrida, and Otto, living in Copenhagen and Nakskov. It is my wish that my niece Emma Nelson receive $500 extra for her taking care of me. It is also my wish that my friend Mrs. Rosa Friis shall be given $500.

"Mrs. Jennie Hoytema,
"94 Sanchez Street."

"P. S. My safe deposit box is in the Humboldt Savings Bank No. 295."

The niece, Emma Nelson, referred to herein is the daughter of the brother, Hans Peter Nelson, who survived decedent.

[1-4] The lower court was of the opinion that the testamentary disposition so apparently made in favor of the children of the dead sister Anna was conditioned upon the death before her own death of her brother, Hans Peter Nelson. This view was upheld by the decision of Department 2 of this court, the opinion being written by Mr. Justice Lennon, and upon mature consideration we believe this to be the correct view. We recognize that this construction results in almost total intestacy, in view of the fact that her brother survived decedent, and also that constructions leading to intestacy, total or partial, are not favored, and will be rejected when the language used reasonably admits of a construction that renders the will effective as to all the property of the decedent. It is also an elementary rule in the construction of wills that the language used must be liberally construed with a view to carrying into effect what the will as a whole shows was the real intent of the testator. This intent, however, must be found in the language used in the will, taking into view in cases of uncertainty arising upon its face the circumstances under which it was made. Civ. Code, § 1318. Courts are not permitted in order to avoid a conclusion of intestacy to adopt a construction based on conjecture as to what the testator may have intended, although not expressed. In the case at bar we have a testatrix whose next of kin were a brother and the children of two deceased sisters. Her brother was her nearest relative. No reason whatever appears why in disposing of her property she should discriminate against him in favor of children of one or both of her deceased sisters. Certainly in her very informal will she does not do so in plain and unambiguous terms. To the contrary, her first thought is of him, and her first expression of desire is, "It is my wish if my brother, Hans Peter Nelson is alive, send this letter to him." No expression direction or desire as to what is to become of her property in that contingency or what he is to do in the matter appears. It is as though in the mind of the testatrix this was to be the end of the whole matter. If we were at liberty to resort to conjecture as to the intent we might well conclude from the language that she thought she was giving the property to him in this contingency or that he would then take the property as her nearest relative. It is only "should he be dead" that she has any desire to express in regard to the disposition of her property, and her desire in that contingency is that her dead brother's daughter, Emma, and her dead sister Bena's daughter should sell the property and dispose of it in the way indicated. Appellants seek to make the primary object of the instrument the distribution of the property in any event in the manner specified in the portion commencing "should he be dead," and to do this find it necessary to construe the directions to Emma and Agnes as being intended as applicable to the brother in the event that he survived decedent, although no such idea is expressed. It is sufficient to say that no such intention is expressed with reasonable certainty, and that under the circumstances any such conclusion would be based solely on conjecture. As was said in the department opinion:

"Only through speculation and conjecture may the construction contended for by appellants be confirmed. And this cannot be countenanced in view of the cardinal rule to the effect that in the interpretation of wills it is not the probable intent which may have existed in the mind of the testatrix which prevails, but only that which is expressed in the language of the will. Estate of Blake, 157 Cal. 448, 108 Pac. 287."

We are satisfied that the appellants cannot fairly be held to take anything under the will. By the decree they are adjudged their rightful share as heirs of deceased. No objection is made by them as to the allowance of the two legacies of $500 each, a matter apparently settled by the decree. All parties to the estate have acquiesced in their allowance.

It may be noted that appellants claim that the translation of the will embodied in the court's finding is not entirely correct, and append to their brief what they call a "literal translation." While we are bound by the translation found, we do not think that the so-called "literal translation" would materially help appellants. In the same connection respondents suggest that, properly translated, the provision as to the disposition of the property by Emma and Agnes is that they "shall together sell all my property and share with (instead of divide between) Anna's children; the Danish word "udele" used meaning "share" and not "divide." This would produce the very natural and reasonable conclusion that even had the brother predeceased the decedent, appellants under the will could take only one-third of the property, and would entirely explain the use of the word "extra" in the $500 bequest to Emma Nelson.

The decree is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. In my opinion certain well-established rules of interpretation applying especially to wills, when considered in connection with this will, give it a meaning different from that given to it by the majority opinion.

The primary object of a court, when an ambiguous will is before it, must be to ascertain, as far as possible from its language, the intention of the testator. Civ. Code, § 1318. All its parts are to be construed in relation to each other, and so as, if possible, to form one consistent whole. "Of two modes of interpreting a will, that is to be preferred which will prevent a total intestacy." Civ. Code, § 1326. Words which are irreconcilable with the general context may be rejected, whatever the local position which they happen to occupy. 1 Jarman, *445. Where it is clear on the face of a will that the testator's meaning is not completely expressed by the words used, and it is also clear what are the words which he has omitted, those words may be supplied in order to effectuate the intention, as collected from the context. 1 Jarman, *p. 451; 1 Redf. on Wills, 454. Many instances of this rule are given by Mr. Jarman at page *455. Where an expression, otherwise senseless or contradictory, can be rendered consistent with the context by being transposed, such transposition is warranted. Id. *466; 1 Redf. on Wills, 467. Punctuation may be disregarded if a change in that respect will render its meaning more obvious. 1 Redf. 434. In construing wills drawn by persons unskilled in the art "it is the duty of the courts to spell out the probable relative importance of the different provisions, and how far one was intended to yield to another, when it becomes impracticable to carry all into effect." 1 Redf. on Wills, 452.

A striking instance of the liberality indulged in these particulars in considering olographic wills drawn by illiterate persons is found in the decision of this court in Estate of Stratton, 112 Cal. 517, 44 Pac. 1028. The will in that case, after a number of specific gifts, concluded as follows:

"Common Beadsteads with Feather Bead and all the rest of the Furniture and all Money in what Ever Shape he will have full controle after all Expenses is Paid of my sickness and death. Mrs. Georgiana Hanham Stratton.
"my Husband
"Thomas Stratton."

It was held that the will could be made clear by transposing the words "my Husband Thomas Stratton" from the place below the signature of the testatrix to a place immediately after the word "he"; and, this being done, it was construed to make a gift to the husband of the residue of the estate.

Coming now to the will here involved, we repeat it in full to facilitate the discussion:

"San Francisco, October 5, 1915.

"I am writing these lines in case I should meet with an accident or in any other way die then it is my wish if my brother Hans Peter Nelson is alive send this letter to him. Should he be dead then it is my wish that my brother's daughter Emma and my dead sister Bena's daughter who lives in Chicago, her name is Agnes, shall together sell all my property and divide equally between my dead sister Anna's children by name Engeborg, Anna, Alfrida, and Otto, living in Copenhagen and Naskov. It is my wish that my niece Emma Nelson receive $500 extra for her taking care of me. It is also my wish that my friend Mrs. Rosa Friis shall be given $500.

"Mrs. Jennie Hoytema,
"94 Sanchez Street.

"P. S. My safe deposit box is in the Humboldt Savings Bank No. 295."

The opening sentence disclosed the testamentary intent. The mind of the writer then turned to the selection of a person to carry out her intent, to act as executor. It may readily be supposed that her brother would be preferred for that office, and, accordingly she named him, saying, "Send this letter to him" if he is alive. In her ignorance, she evidently believed that if the letter were placed in his hands he would be thereby authorized to dispose of the property as the will directed. But it occurred to her that he might be dead, and in that event a substitute must be designated. For that purpose she chose two nieces, Emma, daughter of the brother, and Agnes Edwardson, daughter of her sister. She then came to the point of stating what was to be done with the property. The instructions to those to whom the office of executor should fall were "to sell all my property and divide equally between my dead sister Anna's children, by name Engeborg, Anna, Alfrida, and Otto, living in Copenhagen and Naskov." These words are certain, and their effect is absolutely clear. They cannot be given any other meaning than that conveyed by the ordinary sense of the words, unless a clear intention to use them in some other sense can be collected from the context or from extrinsic facts. Civ. Code, § 1324. No extrinsic facts appear, and the context furnishes no cause for giving them other than their ordinary import. The use of the word "extra" in the gift of $500 to Emma is easily explained. The gift shows on its face that Emma had been taking care of the testatrix. Apparently Emma was the only relative she had in California. Her brother lived in Idaho, and the other heirs in Illinois and Denmark. It is to be supposed that Emma had already received something for this service, and the intent evidently was, as the words indicate, to give her an additional compensation therefor. To give it the effect of qualifying or explaining the meaning of the preceding disposition in any manner would violate the rule that "a clear and distinct devise or bequest cannot be affected" by any other words "not equally clear and distinct."

I think the will on its face clearly gives the residue of the estate to the children of Anna, the deceased sister of the testatrix, and that it left nothing undisposed of to go to the other heirs.

In re PUSEY'S ESTATE. (L. A. 5922.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 14, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENT ⇨818(6) — FOREIGN JUDGMENT—IMPEACHMENT—WANT OF JURISDICTION.

A recital in a foreign judgment of facts sufficient to give the court jurisdiction can be impeached by a bare preponderance of evidence inconsistent with the recital.

2. DIVORCE ⇨328—FOREIGN DECREE—IMPEACHMENT—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding that a second affidavit was not filed in a foreign divorce suit, notwithstanding a recital in the judgment record of the filing of such affidavit.

3. WITNESSES ⇨195—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—HUSBAND AND WIFE—EFFECT OF DIVORCE.

Where, after a divorce decree, the validity of which is attacked, both parties remarried, one of them seeking to establish the validity of the decree cannot object to the introduction of testimony by the former spouse as to matters occurring after the alleged divorce on the ground that it was a privileged communication between husband and wife within Code Civ. Proc. § 1881.

4. WITNESSES ⇨188(2) — PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION—HUSBAND AND WIFE—EFFECT OF DIVORCE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, providing that neither spouse can after termination of their marriage relation be examined without the consent of the other as to any communication between them during marriage, does not prevent the introduction of testimony, the purpose of which is to show the act of communicating, and not the character of communication.

5. JUDGMENT ⇨818(6)—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—LACHES.

Laches and the bar of the statute of limitations have no application to a collateral attack upon a foreign judgment rendered without jurisdiction.

6. DIVORCE ⇨328—JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—RIGHT TO ATTACK IN PROBATE OF A WILL.

Where the probate of a will was contested because of revocation by marriage and sought to be upheld because testatrix's husband was never validly divorced from his first wife, proponents are entitled to attack the foreign judgment in the divorce action on the ground of being void for want of jurisdiction in that there was no sufficient affidavit for the publication of summons.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Probate of the will of Gertrude C. Pusey, also designated as Gertrude C. Finley Pusey, deceased, opposed by Henry F. Pusey and another. From an order admitting the will to probate, contestants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 173 Cal. 141, 159 Pac. 433; 170 Pac. 846.

C. D. Latourette, of Oregon City, Or., and R. Y. Williams and A. W. Rutan, both of Santa Ana, for appellants.

Steele Finley, of Santa Ana, and E. J. Fleming, B. F. Woodard, Michael F. Shannon, and E. L. Kolb, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LENNON, J. For the third time this case is here on appeal. The question heretofore presented and now again presented for review involves the correctness of an order of the lower court admitting the will of Gertrude C. Pusey to probate upon the petition of the respondent S. H. Finley. The appellants are Henry F. Pusey, who contested the probate of the will, and C. S. Crookshank, who, as nominee of the said Henry F. Pusey, petitioned for letters of administration upon the estate of the deceased. These appellants now, as heretofore, contend that the will in question was revoked by the marriage of the testatrix to Henry F. Pusey. The respondents, on the other hand, contend that the testatrix never in fact became the wife of Pusey, because he had never been validly divorced from his former wife. In 1893, a decree of divorce in favor of Henry F. Pusey was entered by an Oregon court of competent jurisdiction, which recited that jurisdiction of the defendant had been obtained by publication of summons. The respondents assert, however, that the decree of divorce was void for want of jurisdiction over the defendant, because there was no sufficient affidavit for the publication of summons. The said decree was admitted in evidence. It contains, among other things, a recital that service of summons by publication had been ordered "upon due and proper affidavits."

* * * However, only one affidavit to support the order for publication of summons appeared in the record of the divorce action. This affidavit was decreed by the trial court to be insufficient as a basis for the order of publication of summons, because it contained no averment or attempted averment that due diligence had been employed to ascertain the residence of the defendant in the divorce action or that such residence could not have been ascertained by the exercise of due diligence.

Upon the first trial in the probate proceeding, it was not affirmatively shown that the defendant in the divorce action was alive at the time of Pusey's marriage to the testatrix. Upon an appeal to this court, it was then held that a presumption should be raised in favor of the validity of the marriage, where by it should be assumed that the defendant in the divorce action was dead at the time of the marriage. The order of the lower court admitting the will to probate was reversed for the error of the court in failing to consider this presumption. Estate of Pusey, 173 Cal. 141, 159 Pac. 433.

A second trial in the probate proceeding was thereupon had, wherein it was shown and found that the defendant in the divorce action was alive at the time of Pusey's marriage to the testatrix. Upon the appeal in that case, this court emphasized the fact that the decree of divorce recited that service of summons by publication had been ordered "upon due and proper affidavits. * * *" It was held that this recital imported that more than one affidavit was filed to obtain the order, wherefore, the attack on the judgment being collateral, it would be presumed in its favor that there was at least one other affidavit in addition to the defective affidavit appearing in the record, that such second affidavit was sufficient, and that it was lost after being duly filed. For the error of the lower court in failing to consider this presumption the order admitting the will to probate was again reversed. Estate of Pusey, 170 Pac. 846.

A third trial was had. Inasmuch as any possible objection to the allowance of such a new trial is fully and finally answered in the opinion rendered in the second appeal in this case (170 Pac. 846), we need not again consider the point here. Conflicting evidence was introduced bearing on the issue of the filing of a second affidavit to support the order for publication of summons. The court found that no such affidavit was in fact filed, and again made an order admitting the will to probate.

The appellants attack the order upon various grounds: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to support the finding; (2) that some of the evidence was improperly received; (3) that any attack on the judgment is barred by the statute of limitations or by the equitable doctrine of laches; and finally (4) that it is not competent for a stranger to the record, who had no interest in the outcome of a judgment at the time it was made, to attack it collaterally, even on the ground that it is void for want of jurisdiction.

[1] In support of the first contention, appellants lay great emphasis upon a statement in a former decision of this case that a recital in a foreign judgment of facts sufficient to give the court jurisdiction could be impeached only by proof of necessity inconsistent with the recital. But the words "of necessity" refer to the nature, and not to the weight, of such independent proof. If there was a bare preponderance of evidence of a nature of necessity inconsistent with the recital, that would be sufficient to impeach it.

[2] It was proved that the register of actions recorded the filing of but one affidavit in the divorce action in question. Of course, a second affidavit might have been filed and never recorded. But an examination of the files for a period of six months before and six months after the filing of the complaint in the divorce action was proved to have resulted in failure to discover a second affidavit. This evidence was of a nature necessarily inconsistent with the recital that proper affidavits were filed, but it might be urged that a second affidavit, though filed, might have been not only not recorded, but also lost. To prove that such was the case appellants placed Senator Brownell on the stand. He had been Pusey's attorney in the divorce action in question. The material portion of his testimony relied on by the appellants reads as follows:

"My recollection is absolutely that my affidavit was defective on the ground that I did not show sufficient diligence. Now that is my idea. Now, although I don't say that positively, but it must have been that, because I can see right in that affidavit that I left it out. I can't remember the details, but I know the judge told me my affidavit was wrong, and I came back here and saw Pusey and made an additional affidavit, and I am satisfied it was to show that he exercised the proper diligence in trying to ascertain what her residence was. Now, that is my recollection. I cannot in all these years go into detail, because I don't know."

It is significant to observe that Brownell here expressed his idea of the preparation, and not of the filing, of the alleged second affidavit. Moreover, it was the province of the trial judge to pass upon the credibility of the witness. Numerous depositions were offered to the effect that the reputation of the witness for truth, honesty, and integrity was not good. While these were met by other depositions, the trial court might properly, we think, have wholly disbelieved the testimony quoted, and such a conclusion would be further supported by the consideration that the statement was quite possibly influenced by a desire to make it appear that there had been no negligence in handling the divorce action. In addition to these considerations, Brownell's testimony itself not only tends to impeach the statement quoted, but contains admissions which positively support the contention of the respondents. Being presented with an affidavit in another divorce action brought by him at about the same time as the one in question which was defective in the same particular as the affidavit filed in the Pusey Case, he stated:

"Oh, I made a great many affidavits that way. I haven't any doubt but what I did. I was practicing politics in those days more than anything else and was very careless in my business."

This statement could have been properly considered by the court as evidence that a second affidavit was not prepared, or that, if it was prepared, it was not filed.

Finally, we have the testimony of the defendant in the divorce action which the appellants evidently regard as very damaging to their case. And so in fact it is. Describing an interview with Pusey subsequent to the divorce, she states:

"He had very little to say. I was trying to tell him all the time that he did know where I was all the time. I couldn't hardly realize what this was all about. I remember so well I kept saying to Pusey, 'You did know I was there, Henry; you used to write to me all the time.' He didn't answer me for a while, and finally he said, 'Yes; I did know where you were.'"

If the court believed this testimony, as it might properly have done, it would follow that Pusey could only have executed a proper affidavit by committing perjury. We are not ready to hold that the court was bound to presume that he made a second affidavit if it had further to presume and say that in so doing he made a perjured affidavit.

We are satisfied that the evidence, considered as a whole, is sufficient to support the finding that no second affidavit was in fact filed.

[3] But it is contended on behalf of the appellants that the testimony of Julia Proctor, the defendant in the divorce action, was improperly received. The effect of the decision of the court was to hold that Julia Proctor was at all times the wife of the appellant Henry F. Pusey. The appellants, however, were contending throughout the case that the decree of divorce was valid, and that from and after that decree Julia Proctor ceased to be the wife of the appellant Pusey. Under these circumstances, the appellants offered the objection that her testimony was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Under some circumstances this general objection might be considered sufficient to raise the point that the testimony sought to be adduced was privileged under that portion of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure which reads:

"A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife without her consent; nor a wife for or against her husband, without his consent." Humphrey v. Pope, 1 Cal. App. 374, 82 Pac. 223.

In this case, however, there had been a decree of divorce the validity of which was the matter in dispute. After that decree, both parties to the marriage had attempted to contract marriage and had entered into the marriage relation with other parties. The appellants, who were seeking to establish the validity of the decree of divorce, cannot, then, well be allowed to claim that by their general objection they were seeking the benefit of a relation which they claimed did not in fact exist. To properly apprise the court of its nature the objection should, to say the least, have been made in definite and unequivocal language.

[4] It is true that Julia Proctor testified to communications between herself and her husband before as well as after the decree of divorce, and that it is further provided in section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure that neither husband nor wife can, even after the termination of the marriage, be examined, without the consent of the other, as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage. It is to be noted, however, that the point sought to be shown by the communications here in question was the act of communicating, and not the nature or character of the communications themselves; the purpose of the inquiry being to show that the appellant Pusey knew the whereabouts of his wife. These circumstances present a proper case for the application of the rule stated in 4 Wigmore on Evidence, § 2337:

"The privilege has for its object the security from apprehension of disclosure, a security in consequence of which confidences will be freely given and not withheld. The protection therefore extends only to communications, i. e., utterances, not acts; the reasoning being analogous to that which establishes a similar limitation for communications between attorney and client. * * *"

We think, therefore, that the purpose of the inquiry being to show the act of communicating and not the disclosures involved in the communications, the testimony does not come within the inhibition of the statute.

[5] Considering the contention that the attack upon the judgment is barred by laches or by the statute of limitations, we find that the appellants have cited no statute the effect of which would be to bar the attack upon the judgment in question. They do indeed cite Estudillo v. Security Loan, etc., Co., 149 Cal. 556, 87 Pac. 19, but the language in that case is applicable only to actions in equity for relief on the ground of fraud. Since the judgment here in question is attacked, not upon the ground that it is voidable for fraud, but upon the ground that it is void for lack of jurisdiction, that case has no bearing upon the issue. Appellants cite numerous cases bearing on the doctrine of laches, but they have failed to show how that doctrine can apply to this case. Nor can it, we think, be asserted that the respondents have in any way slept upon their rights.

[6] Were it not for the elaborate array of cases presented by the appellants, we should consider that any discussion of their fourth point was concluded by the statements in Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342, 348:

"A judgment absolutely void * * * may be attacked anywhere, directly or collaterally, whenever it presents itself, either by parties or strangers. It is simply a nullity, and can be neither a basis nor evidence of any right whatever."

See, also, Pioneer Land Co. v. Maddux, 109 Cal. 638, 42 Pac. 295, 50 Am. St. Rep. 67, and Adams v. Adams, 154 Mass. 290, 28 N. E. 260, 13 L. R. A. 275.

An examination of appellants' cases, however, reveals the fact that, practically without exception, it was assumed or clearly shown that the defendant in the action wherein the judgment which was being attacked had been rendered had been regularly brought within the jurisdiction of the court. It is indeed stated in 23 Cyc. 1068, that strangers to the record can attack a judgment only when rights accruing to them prior to its rendition are affected. We have examined all the cases cited to support this statement. In each case property rights had been the subject of adjudication, and the rights of the party attacking the judgment had arisen with respect to the property in question after the judgment had been rendered. The judgment was in no case alleged to be void. Obviously no rule based on these cases has any application to the case at bar. McLeod v. McLeod, 144 Ga. 359, 87 S. E. 286, appears at first glance to support the appellants, but we note that the court decided, not that a stranger could not attack a void judgment, but that the judgment in question was not void. It remains only to consider the case of Harpold v. Doyle, 16 Idaho, 671, 102 Pac. 159. We do find language in support of the appellants' contention in the opinion of Sullivan, J. It appears, however, to be dictum. It was dissented from by Stewart, J., and upon a rehearing of the case it was so qualified as to remove any support it may formerly have afforded to the argument of appellants. Under the circumstances of this case, the respondents are entitled to attack the judgment in the divorce action on the ground that it is void for lack of jurisdiction. They have, we think, been successful in this attack.

The order appealed from is affirmed:

(S. F. 8214.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1919.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT § 166(2)—RATIFICATION—KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS—CONFIDENCE IN AGENT.

An owner of city lots, who, upon being told that his agent had signed a contract for street improvements upon them, said that it was satisfactory to him, will be deemed to have ratified the contract, though he did not have full knowledge of the facts at the time; his confidence in his agent appearing such that he was willing to trust to his judgment and ratify his act without making further inquiry.

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF § 56(4)—INTEREST IN REAL ESTATE—CONTRACT FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ORAL RATIFICATION.

A written contract for street improvements providing for a lien under Code Civ. Proc. § 1191, does not make it a contract providing for an interest in real estate, required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1971, to be in writing, as well as a ratification thereof, according to Civ. Code, §§ 2309, 2310, since the lien is created by statute.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by the Hutchinson Company, a corporation, against Charles B. Gould and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Reed, Nusbaumer & Bingham, of Oakland, for appellants.

Robinson, Robinson & Price and R. W. Macdonald, all of Oakland, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien upon certain lots owned by defendant Charles B. Gould for street work done under private contract by the plaintiff. Plaintiff had judgment and defendant Gould appealed.

[1] The street work was done under a written contract signed by S. S. Austin on behalf of Gould, the owner of the lots sought to be subjected to the lien. The only question in the case is whether or not the finding of the trial court that appellant is bound by the signature of Austin to the contracts for street work is sustained by sufficient evidence. A consideration of the evidence most favorable to the finding of the trial court leads us to the conclusion that there was sufficient evidence to justify the findings of the trial court. The vice president and general manager of respondent testified that after the signing of the contracts in question by Austin he told appellant that:

"Mr. Austin has signed our contract for Gray street and Douglas street. * * * I told him that Mr. Austin had signed our contracts for the improvement of these two streets, Boulevard Park tract, and asked him if Mr. Austin was authorized to do it. He said, 'Did Mr. Austin sign it?' I said, 'Yes, he has signed our contract.' He said, 'That is satisfactory to me.'"

The appellant contends that this conversation did not amount to a ratification, and that, if it did, it was a ratification without a full knowledge of the facts, and therefore not binding on the appellant. In order to understand the situation of the parties and the significance of the conversation it will be necessary to state additional evidence. Appellant was the owner of unsold lots in the Boulevard Park tract. The Union Bank of Savings held a mortgage thereon and all sales of unsold lots were handled at the bank. Miss Baker, an employé in the bank, held appellant's general power of attorney. The appellant testified that he did not handle these properties at all. S. S. Austin was the sales agent of the tract. For six or seven years he had been daily upon the property, occupying a branch office thereon. He had sold most of the property and had handled the improving and selling of the tract. When anything was required to be done, the usual procedure was for Austin to notify the bank and for them to authorize him to proceed. Mr. Austin had signed a protest against the street improvement for appellant. He had caused a sidewalk to be laid in front of the lots in this litigation, which was paid for. At the request of the other property owners along Gray and Douglas streets, Mr. Austin signed a contract for the improvement of these streets on behalf of appellant and with all the other property holders fronting on these streets. It was under these circumstances that respondent's general manager told Mr. Gould that Mr. Austin had signed "our contracts for the improvements of these two streets, Boulevard Park tract, and asked him if Mr. Austin was authorized to do it" and received the reply "That is satisfactory to me."

Appellant contends this is not a sufficient ratification, for the reason that he had insufficient information at the time of the nature and character of the contract to ratify the same, and for the further reason that the ratification was not in writing. It is true that the nature and character of the proposed improvements and the price therefor and the extent thereof—essential features of the contract—were not disclosed by the statement and question of Mr. Hutchinson. On the other hand, Mr. Gould knew of his ownership of the lots fronting upon the streets in question, knew Mr. Austin and his familiarity with the contract and with the conditions necessary for successful sales, and his question concerning the contract, "Did Mr. Austin sign it?" showed that he was willing to trust to the judgment of Mr. Austin in regard to the matters not disclosed by Mr. Hutchinson's question. As is said in 2 Corpus Juris, 481:

"The lack of full knowledge does not protect a principal who is willfully ignorant, and deliberately chooses to act without such knowledge, as where, knowing that he is ignorant of some of the facts, he has such confidence in his agent that he is willing to assume the risk and ratify the act without making inquiry for further information than he at the time possesses, or where he intentionally and deliberately ratifies without full knowledge, under circumstances which are sufficient to put a reasonable man upon inquiry."

See, also, to the same effect, Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) § 404; Ballard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 588, 598, 72 Pac. 156; Pope v. Armsby, 111 Cal. 159, 43 Pac. 589; Phillips v. Phillips, 163 Cal. 530, 535, 127 Pac. 346.

[2] Appellant contends that as the contract in question provided for a lien, it is a contract providing for an interest in real estate required by the provisions of section 1971, Code of Civil Procedure, to be in writing and that, therefore, under the provisions of section 2310, Civil Code, the ratification in question must have been in writing. The lien for the contract price for work done upon a public street is created by law. Section 1191, Code Civ. Proc. The contract does no more than expressly recognize this fact. It therein provides for liens "as provided by section 1191 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California," thus by reference making the law concerning liens for work done on public streets a part of the contract. It has been held by this court that contracts for the performance of work upon public streets by private contract need not be in writing. Kreuzberger v. Wingfield, 96 Cal. 251, 31 Pac. 109. The effect of the contract would have been the same, with or without the stipulation concerning the liens for the value of the work done. Such stipulation is not a material part of the contract and may be disregarded. Authority to execute the contract might rest in parol and its ratification therefore can rest in parol. Civ. Code, § 2309.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. NUISANCE ⚡86—VIOLATION OF INJUNCTION—CONTEMPT.

Pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1211, the superior court which had under St. 1913, p. 20, known as the Red Light Abatement Act, enjoined petitioner from using or permitting the use of premises for the purpose of lewdness, may, on presentation of an affidavit setting forth the facts, take cognizance of a contempt arising out of disobedience of the order.

3. CONTEMPT $\hookrightarrow$ 54(4) — AFFIDAVIT — SUFFICIENCY.

A proceeding to punish for contempt is criminal in character, and the affidavit which is made the basis of the proceeding is the counterpart of a complaint in a criminal action; so, while a sufficient affidavit is necessary, the affidavit charging a contempt need not be more specific in its averments than a complaint or information charging a crime.

4. DISORDERLY HOUSE $\hookrightarrow$ 12 — OFFENSES — COMPLAINT.

A general allegation that premises were used for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution is sufficient to charge violation of Pen. Code, § 315, without alleging the names or characters of the frequenters of the premises.

5. NUISANCE $\hookrightarrow$ 86 — VIOLATION OF INJUNCTION — CONTEMPT — AFFIDAVIT — SUFFICIENCY.

In view of the fact that false allegations in an affidavit charging contempt in the violation of a decree made under St. 1913, p. 20, enjoining petitioner from using premises for prostitution, would be perjury under Pen. Code, §§ 118, 125, held, that an affidavit alleging that after the decree petitioner used the premises for purposes of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution was sufficient to support a judgment punishing petitioner for contempt.

6. NUISANCE $\hookrightarrow$ 86 — VIOLATION OF INJUNCTION — FINDINGS — SUFFICIENCY.

Where petitioner was charged with contempt in using premises for purposes of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution after such use had been enjoined in a proceeding under St. 1913, p. 20, findings that petitioner, in violation of the decree, conducted the premises for that purpose, are sufficient, without findings of any particular acts of lewdness, etc., to support a judgment punishing her for contempt.

7. STATUTES $\hookrightarrow$ 71 — UNIFORM OPERATION OF GENERAL LAWS.

The provision of Const. art. 1, § 11, that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation merely requires a law to act uniformly upon all persons in the same category, and operation upon different classes is proper if there is a reasonable basis for the classification.

8. STATUTES $\hookrightarrow$ 74(1) — UNIFORM OPERATION — PUNISHMENT FOR CONTEMPT.

As the mere keeping of a house of prostitution is a crime denounced by Pen. Code, § 315, petitioner, who was found guilty of contempt in violating an order made under St. 1913, p. 20, enjoining her from using premises for immoral purposes, may be punished as provided in section 6 of that act, notwithstanding the punishment was more severe than the general punishment provided for contempts; for such a classification was reasonable and did not violate Const. art. 1, § 11, requiring general laws to have a uniform operation.

9. STATUTES $\hookrightarrow$ 110½(1) — VALIDITY — TITLE OF ACT — RED LIGHT ABATEMENT LAW.

The title of St. 1913, p. 20, known as the Red Light Abatement Act, entitled "An act declaring all buildings and places nuisances wherein or upon which acts of lewdness, assignation or prostitution are held or occur, * * * and providing for the abatement and prevention of such nuisances by injunction," is sufficient to cover provisions fixing penalties for violations of the injunction.

10. NUISANCE $\hookrightarrow$ 77 — INJUNCTION — REMEDY.

Though courts already had power under the general laws to enjoin the maintenance of bawdyhouses, the provisions for an injunction in St. 1913, p. 20, known as the Red Light Abatement Act, are not nugatory; for the Legislature may provide two or more concurrent modes for obtaining a given end.

11. NUISANCE $\hookrightarrow$ 77 — INJUNCTION — RELIEF.

Under St. 1913, p. 20, known as the Red Light Abatement Act, the court may, pursuant to sections 3 and 6, enjoin the maintenance of premises as a bawdyhouse, without necessarily including the order of abatement contemplated by section 7.

Mary M. Selowsky was convicted of contempt of court, and she applies for writ of certiorari against the Superior Court of the County of Napa to review and annul the proceedings and judgment. Affirmed.

See, also, 177 Pac. 301.

Frank J. Murphy, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Nathan F. Coombs and Frank L. Coombs, both of Napa, for respondent.

LENNON, J. Certiorari to review and annul certain proceedings culminating in a judgment entered by the superior court of Napa county convicting the petitioner of contempt of court and sentencing her to pay a fine of $1,000 and to serve a term of six months' imprisonment in the county jail.

On November 19, 1917, the superior court of Napa county found, in an action instituted under the provisions of a statute known as the "Red Light Abatement Act" (Stats. 1913, p. 20), that the "Stone Bridge Saloon," situated within the said county, was owned, in the possession of, and maintained and conducted by the petitioner herein as a place of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution. A decree was duly entered in that action adjudging and declaring the said premises to be a nuisance and perpetually enjoining the petitioner from directly or indirectly using or permitting the use of the said premises for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution. On July 9, 1918, the said court, having found that the petitioner had used the said premises for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution on or about May 18, 1918, entered the contempt judgment here complained of.

The petitioner attacks this judgment on four grounds: (1) That none of the affidavits upon which the contempt proceeding was instituted alleged facts with sufficient detail to give the court jurisdiction to proceed in the matter; (2) that the findings upon which the contempt judgment is based are fatally defective in that they fail to detail any particular and specific act of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution found to have been permitted by the petitioner upon the premises in question; (3) that, in so far as the contempt judgment purports to be entered pursuant to section 6 of the statute in question, it is void, in this, that the said section 6 is violative of section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of California; (4) that the judgment is not in fact authorized by section 6 of the statute in question, and was not in fact entered pursuant thereto, and that there is no other statutory provision providing for and permitting the particular penalty imposed.

[1-3] Prior to the institution of the contempt proceedings, the court had entered a valid decree prohibiting the use of the premises in question for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution. The petitioner was duly served with a copy of the decree. Willful disobedience of the decree of a court having jurisdiction to make it ordinarily constitutes a contempt. Code Civ. Proc. § 1209; Pen. Code, § 166. Pursuant to section 1211 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court was empowered to take cognizance of a contempt thus committed in a proceeding instituted by the presentation of an affidavit setting forth the fact or facts constituting the contempt. The contempt charged in the proceedings here in controversy consisted in the willful use of the premises in question by the petitioner in defiance of the court's decree for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution. A sufficient allegation in the affidavit by which the contempt proceedings were instituted to the effect that the premises were so used was essential. But a proceeding to punish for contempt is criminal in character, and the affidavit which is made the basis of the proceeding is the counterpart of the complaint in a criminal action. Frowley v. Superior Court, 158 Cal. 222, 110 Pac. 817; Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 360, 33 Pac. 1112, 21 L. R. A. 751, 37 Am. St. Rep. 57. Therefore an affidavit charging the commission of a contempt need not be more specific in its averments of the facts constituting the contempt than a complaint or an information charging a crime.

[4, 5] In support of the contempt proceedings and judgment, the record shows the affidavit of one Kelton, sheriff of Napa county, wherein it is alleged:

"That on the 18th day of May, 1918, he, in company with officers of the law, visited the premises belonging to Mrs. M. Salowsky, mentioned and set forth in the judgment in said cause made, signed, and filed herein on the 10th day of November, 1917, and that at said time said Mrs. M. Salowsky was still the owner and in charge of said premises, and was keeping and maintaining a house of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, assisted by one Florence Ponta, as follows:

"That at said time said Florence Ponta occupied a room at said premises with a man, and, affiant verily believes, committed with him then and there the acts of illicit sexual intercourse.

"That thereafter, and on the same day, said Florence Ponta occupied a room at said premises with another man and, as affiant believes, committed such acts.

"That said premises set forth in said judgment hereinbefore referred to, and occupied by said Mrs. M. Salowsky, sometimes known as and called Mary M. Selowsky and Mrs. M. Krueger, on the 18th day of May, 1918, were in charge of said Mrs. M. Salowsky as the owner thereof, and was conducted as a house of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution.

"That Florence Ponta, one of the inmates thereof, is a prostitute, and was working in said house for said Mrs. M. Salowsky as a prostitute.

"That affiant, by reason of his long experience as a sheriff, is familiar with houses of prostitution and knows of his own knowledge that said premises, on said date, were being maintained, conducted, and operated by said Mrs. M. Salowsky as a house of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, and that all of said acts of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution committed on said premises were committed with the knowledge and approval of said Mrs. M. Salowsky, and for her personal financial gain, and for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution."

The petitioner contends that the affidavit was insufficient in that no specific act of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution was alleged except upon the belief of the affiant, and that the grounds upon which that belief was based were not set forth. Conceding that there may be no sufficient allegation of any specific act of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution, we are nevertheless of the opinion that the affidavit as a whole was sufficient to institute the contempt proceedings and to support the judgment. Ex parte Selowsky, 177 Pac. 301. The allegations of Kelton's affidavit that he knew of his own knowledge that the premises in question were in the possession of the petitioner and were being used and conducted by her as a place of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution stated an essential and ultimate fact. Clearly, if Kelton willfully and contrary to his oath averred that to be true which he knew to be false or which he did not know to be true, he was guilty of perjury. Pen. Code, §§ 118 and 125. Such a general allegation of the use of premises as a place of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution would be proof against demurrer in a complaint charging the violation of section 315 of the Penal Code, namely, the keeping of a house of ill fame. It is well settled that a general allegation of the use of premises for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution is sufficient in a complaint, and that it is unnecessary to allege the name or character of the frequenters of the house, or to allege particular acts of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution. State v. Patterson, 29 N. C. 70, 45 Am. Dec. 506; State v. Dame, 60 N. H. 479, 49 Am. Rep. 331; State v. Brunell, 29 Wis. 435; Betts v. State, 93 Ind. 375; State v. Schaffer, 74 Iowa, 704, 39 N. W. 89; Drake v. State, 14 Neb. 535, 17 N. W. 117; State v. Mamie Jones, 53 W. Va. 613, 45 S. E. 916. By a parity of reasoning, we are constrained to hold that the affidavit of Kelton was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to proceed and to pronounce judgment in the contempt proceedings.

[6] The foregoing discussion practically disposes of the contention that the findings of the court were insufficient in that they failed to detail any specific act of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution permitted on the premises in question by the petitioner. The court did find as a fact that on May 18, 1918, the petitioner did, in violation of the decree of the court, conduct the premises in question for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution. This was an amply sufficient finding of the ultimate fact in issue. Any finding as to particular acts of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution would have been out of place as being a recitation of purely evidentiary matter.

[7, 8] Considering the constitutional question, it appears that the court in the judgment here in question imposed penalties authorized by section 6 of the abatement act which are in excess of the penalties prescribed in the general Code provisions relating to contempts. It is urged that by reason of the fact that said section 6 provides a different and more severe penalty for a certain class of contempts, it is violative of section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution, which provides that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation. This provision only requires a law to operate uniformly upon all persons in the same category. Wigmore v. Buell, 122 Cal. 144, 54 Pac. 600. It is satisfied if the statute applies alike to all persons or objects within a class founded upon some natural and intrinsic distinction. Vail v. San Diego County, 126 Cal. 35, 58 Pac. 392. Operation differently upon different classes is proper if there is a reasonable basis for the distinction. Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, 155 Cal. 638, 103 Pac. 341. The application of these principles to the particular legislation here involved has been correctly stated by Mr. Justice Hart as follows:

"We know of no constitutional limitation upon the right of the Legislature to fix reasonable penalties for contempts of the judgments, decrees, orders, or processes of courts of justice, and, in admeasuring such punishments, to assign, as it may do and has done in cases of public crime, to certain acts of contempt a greater or less penalty than is annexed to others, according to the nature of the contempt with respect to the subject-matter of the adjudication violated and the consequences of such violation to the public or to individual rights." People v. Barbieri, 33 Cal. App. 770, 780, 166 Pac. 812, 816.

See, also, People v. Casa, 35 Cal. App. 194, 169 Pac. 454.

It is objected that every contempt is against the majesty of the law and the dignity and authority of the court, and that therefore classification on the basis of other circumstances affecting the public welfare must be held improper. The answer to this is that there can be no doubt that the Legislature has power to classify with respect to the penalty to be imposed not only upon the basis of the inherent nature of the offense, but also upon the basis of the nature of the circumstances attending the commission of the offense considered in their relation to the public welfare. People v. Finley, 153 Cal. 59, 94 Pac. 248; People v. Carson, 155 Cal. 164, 99 Pac. 970.

The contempt contemplated and condemned by section 6 of the abatement act is the keeping of a house of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution. We think there is much in the nature of this contempt which differentiates it from other possible acts of contempt and justifies the imposition of a different and more severe penalty. The keeping of a house of prostitution is itself a crime. Pen. Code, § 315. It is a crime involving moral turpitude. It is subversive of the public morals and decency and affects injuriously the sexual life of the people in a manner and to an extent unparalleled by any other act. It is not to be forgotten that morals, decency, and sexual purity have been protected by elaborate penal legislation from the earliest times on the theory that the fate of a nation depends on the breed of men it produces. It follows that it was competent for the Legislature to provide for a distinctive and more severe penalty for the commission of those acts of contempt contemplated and controlled by the statute in question.

Ex parte Clancy, 90 Cal. 553, 27 Pac. 411, cannot be relied upon as an authority against the foregoing conclusion. While in that case the writer of the main opinion said that it was not competent for the Legislature to provide one mode of reviewing judgments in contempt proceedings in general and another mode of reviewing contempt proceedings arising in cases under the insolvent act, and while a majority of the court concurred in the result, still it will be noted that the conclusion reached by the writer of the main opinion concerning the constitutional question involved did not receive the concurrence of the majority of the court. But, aside from this, in that case no reasonable basis for any classification was suggested, and probably none could have been suggested. There is, therefore, nothing in that decision which conflicts with our holding here.

Nor can the statute be assailed on the theory that it conflicts with section 1218 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section cannot be said to purport to fix the penalty for all contempts. Indeed, the next succeeding section provides a different punishment for certain classes of contempts, while a still different punishment is provided in the Penal Code for the contempts enumerated in section 166 thereof. People v. Barbi-eri, supra.

[9] There is no merit in the contention that the provisions of the statute in question fixing a penalty for the violation of the decrees provided for therein are not covered by the title of the act. The title reads:

"An act declaring all buildings and places nuisances wherein or upon which acts of lewdness, assignation or prostitution are held or occur or which are used for such purposes, and providing for the abatement and prevention of such nuisances by injunction and otherwise." Stats. 1913, p. 20.

This is sufficient to cover provisions for the punishment of the violation of injunctions provided for in the body of the statute.

"A title fairly expressing the general subject covers all proper means and instrumentalities which will or may facilitate the accomplishment or enforcement of the purpose expressed, such, for instance, as a provision prohibiting violations of the act or prescribing a penalty or other punishment for such violations." 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 588.

[10] There is no merit in the contention that injunctive relief is not "expressly provided for" in the act in question. This contention is apparently based upon the theory that, because the court had authority to grant injunctive relief pursuant to the provisions of an earlier statute, the abatement act, in so far as it purports to confer authority to grant injunctive relief, is nugatory, since it assumes to give what the court already has. It is undoubtedly competent for the Legislature to provide two or more concurrent modes of obtaining a given end, no matter how similar they may be. Granting that the court already had a general power to enjoin nuisances pursuant to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, it nevertheless appears that the abatement act does in terms authorize the entering of a permanent injunction, such as that entered in the original proceeding in this case on November 19, 1917. Since, therefore, section 6 of the act authorizes the penalty here imposed in case of the violation of any decree "expressly provided for" in the act, it follows that the contempt judgment herein complained of was in fact authorized by the act.

[11] It is suggested by the petitioner that there was in fact no proper judgment pursuant to the terms of the abatement act, because the judgment did not contain the order contemplated by section 7 of the act. That section, in words that are apparently mandatory, directs the entry of an order requiring the removal and sale of "all fixtures, musical instruments and movable property used in conducting, * * * the nuisance" and requiring the "effectual closing of the building * * * against its use for any purpose" and so keeping it closed for a year. In all respects, save that noted, the proceedings and judgment in the original action closely followed the words and provisions of the abatement act. Unless, therefore, the order of abatement is so inseparably connected with the injunctive relief provided for in sections 3 and 6 of the act that the intent of the Legislature is manifest that no injunction shall stand unless the abatement order is made part of the judgment, the petitioner's suggestion is entitled to no consideration. The injunctive relief may be had against any one maintaining the nuisance, whether owner or tenant. The abatement order is a remedy only against the owner. If the owner has been guilty of no contempts, he may, by filing a bond, stay the abatement order, which apparently runs out of itself in a year. The injunctive relief, on the other hand, can be made permanent. There may be cases where the owner is completely innocent, ignorant of the use of the property, and opposed to any immoral use thereof. In such case, the entire purpose of the statute would be accomplished by the injunction and an abatement order would not only serve no useful purpose but would work a positive injustice. Upon this analysis of the act, there is no doubt but that the court may enter a perpetual injunction pursuant to the abatement act without necessarily including in the judgment the order of abatement contemplated in section 7 of the act. Such an injunction was duly entered by the superior court of Napa county in the original proceeding in this case on November 19, 1917.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte MORCK. (Cr. 2253.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1919.)

HABEAS CORPUS — 50 — TIME OF APPLICATION.

Any question of excess of sentence will not be considered until the expiration of the time for which the prisoner may be lawfully confined.

In Bank.

Application by Andrew Morck for writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied.

Geo. D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. In view of the decisions of this court, we see no merit in any of the claims made in support of the petition for a writ of habeas corpus, with the possible exception of the claim that under the circumstances and in view of the provisions of section 220, Penal Code, the maximum penalty in petitioner's case was 14 years. As to this it is sufficient to say that, while the sentence imposed was one of 25 years, such judgment is not void in toto. It is a valid sentence for the term authorized by the law. The judgment was pronounced December 13, 1916. Obviously, therefore, the petitioner has not served the time for which he may be lawfully imprisoned. It is the established practice of this court not to consider any question of excess of sentence until the expiration of the time for which the prisoner may be lawfully confined. It is clear, therefore, that a writ should not be granted at this time. In what we have said we are not to be understood as definitely determining that the judgment in this case was not one authorized by law.

The application for a writ of habeas corpus is denied.

All concur, except LAWLOR, J., absent.

HITCH v. SCHOLLE. (L. A. 4933.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1919.)

1. HIGHWAYS — 159(2) — OBSTRUCTIONS — PUBLIC NUISANCE — ACTION TO ABATE — AVERMENT OF SPECIAL INJURY.

Action to adjudge the existence of a public highway over defendant's land, and to enjoin defendant from obstructing such highway, is an action by a private person, to abate a public nuisance, and the complaint must allege special injury in order to state a good cause of action.

2. HIGHWAYS — 155 — OBSTRUCTION — REMEDIES OF PRIVATE PERSONS — ABATEMENT.

If an obstruction wrongfully maintained in a public highway constitutes a nuisance, which injures a private person in common with the public, such person cannot maintain a private action to abate such nuisance, unless the free use of his property is interfered with by such obstruction.

3. HIGHWAYS — 159(2) — OBSTRUCTION — ACTION BY PRIVATE PERSON — SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS.

Where a complaint by a private person to abate a public nuisance alleges obstruction of a public highway, and that plaintiff must have ingress and egress, but fails to allege that such highway is the only mode of ingress and egress, it does not state a cause of action.

4. HIGHWAYS — 159(2) — OBSTRUCTION — ACTION BY PRIVATE PERSON — ALLEGATION OF IRREPARABLE INJURY.

An allegation of irreparable injury in the complaint, in an action by a private person to abate a public nuisance resulting from obstruction of a public highway, unsupported by any allegation showing the injury would differ in kind from an injury suffered by the general public, is not sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff.

5. HIGHWAYS — 155 — OBSTRUCTION — ACTION BY PRIVATE PERSON.

A private person cannot maintain an action to abate a public nuisance resulting from an obstruction in a public highway merely on the ground that he is subjected to personal inconvenience by the obstruction and must use another more circuitous route as his means of ingress and egress.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by J. W. Hitch against Ignas Scholle. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Chas. F. Blackstock, of Oxnard, for appellant.

Bowker & Sheridan and W. E. Shepherd, all of Ventura, for respondent.

LENNON, J. [1] In this action the plaintiff sought and secured a judgment decreeing the existence of a public highway over the lands of the defendant, and as an incident of the judgment the defendant was perpetually enjoined from obstructing said highway. The action is, as the defendant contends, one to abate a public nuisance by a private person not alleged to have been specially injured thereby. The complaint therefore does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the defendant's demurrer upon that ground should have been sustained.

[2] It is well settled, that, if an obstruction which is wrongfully erected and maintained in a public highway constitutes a nuisance which injuriously affects a private person equally in common with the public at large, a private action may not be maintained to abate the nuisance. Blanc v. Klumpke, 29

Cal. 156. It is only where the free use of the property of a private person is interfered with by such an obstruction that he may have his private action to abate the nuisance resulting therefrom. Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3493; Yolo County v. City of Sacramento, 36 Cal. 193, 195; Grigsby v. Clear Lake Water Co., 40 Cal. 396, 406; Shirley v. Bishop, 67 Cal. 543, 546, 8 Pac. 82; Gardner v. Stroever, 89 Cal. 26, 29, 26 Pac. 618.

[3, 4] The complaint herein alleged, in substance, that the plaintiff was the owner of certain farming land in the county of Ventura, upon which he raised lima beans, hay, and other crops commonly grown and harvested in that particular vicinity; that ingress and egress to and from this land was necessary in order to take his crops to market and for other purposes; that the defendant owned certain land in the vicinity subject to an easement of way in the public; that the defendant had obstructed this public highway by building and maintaining a fence across it, and was threatening to plow up the said highway; and that the plaintiff would suffer great and irreparable injury if these acts were not enjoined. The allegations of one of the paragraphs of the complaint were stricken out upon the motion of the defendant upon the ground that they were redundant, irrelevant, and immaterial. These particular allegations did no more than declare that the plaintiff's land was devoted to farming purposes, and that for these purposes ingress and egress to and from the land was necessary. Neither these allegations nor any other allegations in the complaint averred that the highway in question affords the only mode of ingress and egress to and from the plaintiff's land.

The complaint cannot be considered as attempting to state anything more or less than a cause of action to abate a public nuisance. The allegation that the way in question is a public highway is necessarily inconsistent with the existence of any private right therein in the plaintiff. So considered, the complaint is vitally defective for the reason that it fails to allege that the highway in question constitutes the only mode of ingress and egress to and from the lands of the plaintiff. Houck v. Wachter, 34 Md. 265, 6 Am. Rep. 332; Scrutchfield v. Choctaw, etc., R. R. Co., 18 Okl. 308, 88 Pac. 1048, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496. There is indeed an allegation of irreparable injury, but it is unsupported by the allegation of any fact showing wherein that injury would differ in kind from the injury which would be suffered by the public in general.

The defendant did, in his answer, deny that the plaintiff would suffer special injury, but that portion of the answer was stricken out upon motion before the trial. Nor can it be said that the issue of special injury was raised at the trial itself. There was no finding on the question of special injury, although a finding that the plaintiff would suffer such injury by reason of an obstruction of the highway was essential to support the judgment, inasmuch as it was found that the said highway was in fact a public highway.

[5] The evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff was to the effect that the highway in question constituted his only convenient mode of ingress and egress, but that there was another route available over other public highways which he sometimes used. This evidence would not, we think, be sufficient to support a finding of special injury. The weight of authority is to the effect that in actions of this character it should clearly appear from the pleadings and by the proof that the way in question constitutes the only means of ingress and egress to and from the land of the plaintiff. In short, there is no ground for an action by a private person to abate a public nuisance resulting from the obstruction of a public highway where it merely appears that the person would be subjected to personal inconvenience by the obstruction or placed under the necessity of traveling by a much more circuitous route to reach his destination. Houck v. Wachter, supra.

This view of the case makes it unnecessary to decide whether the evidence supports the finding that the way in controversy was in fact a public highway.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

CITY OF VENICE v. SHORT LINE BEACH
LAND CO. (L. A. 4886.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1919.)

1. DEDICATION 35(1, 3)—PUBLIC HIGHWAYS—ADVERSE POSSESSION — STATUTES—APPLICABILITY.

Under Pol. Code, § 2618, relating to the dedication, abandonment, and acceptance of land for public highways, neither improvement of the way by public authority nor payment of taxes by the public is necessary, and Code Civ. Proc. § 325, prescribing the conditions necessary to an adverse possession of land, is not applicable in a suit to determine whether land has been dedicated as a public highway.

2. DEDICATION 17—PUBLIC HIGHWAYS—INTENT—EXPRESS DECLARATION.

To constitute a dedication or abandonment by the owner of land for a public highway under Pol. Code, § 2618, the necessary intent need not be manifested by any contract or express declaration of the owner, but may be implied from his conduct.

3. DEDICATION 37—ACCEPTANCE—USER.

Acceptance by the public of a dedication or abandonment of land for a public highway under Pol. Code, § 2618, need not be manifested by any direct action, ordinance, or declaration of the public authorities, but may be shown by mere user for a reasonable length of time, notwithstanding payment of taxes by the property owner.

4. DEDICATION 44—HIGHWAYS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to quiet title to land alleged to have been dedicated by the owner to the public as a highway, evidence held sufficient to show an intent that the land in question should be used as a public street.

5. CORPORATIONS 425(4)—REPRESENTATION BY AGENT—ESTOPPEL TO DENY AUTHORITY.

Where a corporation having the exclusive sale of all the land within a subdivision gave its agents ostensible authority to make representations to purchasers that a certain strip of land was to be used as a public street, the corporation was estopped to deny the authority of its agents.

6. CORPORATIONS 432(6) — EVIDENCE 158(26)—AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

The authority of an agent to act for a corporation need not be proved by the minutes of its board of directors or by a contract in writing, but may be shown by evidence that the person did business for the corporation and on its behalf, as agent, with the knowledge and acquiescence of its directors or general manager or by their direction.

7. TRIAL 90—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—FAILURE TO MOVE TO STRIKE—WAIVER.

Where evidence is apparently admissible and no motion is made to strike it out when the contrary is shown, the objection as to its admissibility is deemed to have been waived.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. T. Dewirst, Judge.

Action by the City of Venice against the Short Line Beach Land Company to condemn land for a public street, with cross-action to quiet title. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff on the cross-complaint, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William H. Fuller, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Rush M. Blodget, City Atty., of Venice, and Fredericks & Hanna, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The Short Line Beach Land Company appeals from a judgment in favor of the city of Venice declaring that a certain strip of land claimed by said company is a public street or highway in the city of Venice.

The proceedings in the court below were initiated by a complaint filed by the city of Venice against said land company to condemn said land and other parcels for a public street. This complaint was filed on September 27, 1912. An answer was filed thereto, and the cause was continued from time to time until May, 1914, when the court, pursuant to a stipulation of the parties, made an order granting the land company leave to file a cross-complaint concerning the particular parcel now in question, on condition that the issues raised by the cross-complaint should be determined and disposed of before the issues raised upon the complaint in condemnation were determined. The cross-complaint was filed accordingly, and the city of Venice made answer thereto. The issues upon this cross-complaint came on for trial in 1915. In the meantime the city of Venice had dismissed its action for condemnation. The only questions for decision here are those arising upon the cross-complaint. The parcel of land is described as lot 38 of block 10 of the Short Line Beach subdivision No. 1, as recorded in Map Book 2, page 59, in the recorder's office of Los Angeles county.

The cross-complaint is in the form of an ordinary suit to quiet title. The answer thereto alleges that said parcel of land is a public street or alley in the city of Venice. The court found that it was such public street, and the only question presented for consideration is whether or not the evidence is sufficient to support this finding.

The contention of the respondent is that the owners of the tract in question dedicated it to public use as a street or alley, and that such dedication was accepted by the public. It is not claimed that there was any express dedication, or that the owners ever executed any contract, deed, or map showing their intention to make such dedication. In March, 1914, some two months before the filing of the cross-complaint, the city of Venice passed an ordinance reciting that said strip of land had been offered for use as a street, and formally accepting it as such street. The respondent does not rely wholly on this acceptance, but contends that there was also an acceptance by the common use of the land by the public as a street and by other acts showing acceptance of the property as a street.

[1] There is no merit in the appellant's contention that section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure, prescribing the conditions necessary to an adverse possession of the land, is applicable to this question. Land used for a highway could not be inclosed or cultivated, and no improvement thereof by the public authorities is necessary to constitute it a highway. The law relating to highways is indicated by section 2618 of the Political Code, declaring that such highways are roads, streets, alleys, etc., "laid out or erected as such by the public, or if laid out or erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public." To accomplish such dedication or abandonment and acceptance by the public, neither improvement of the way by public authority nor payment of taxes by the public is necessary. All that is required is a dedication or abandonment by the owner and an acceptance thereof by the public.

[2, 3] In order to constitute such dedication, or such abandonment, by the owner, his intention to that effect must appear. Such intent need not be manifested by any contract, writing, or express declaration of the owner. It may be implied from his conduct. "If the donor's acts are such as indicate an intention to appropriate the land to the public use, then, upon acceptance by the public, the dedication becomes complete." People v. Marin County, 103 Cal. 228, 37 Pac. 203, 26 L. R. A. 659. In that case it is said that, in the case of an express dedication by words or acts, "the intention to appropriate the land to public use is manifested by some outward act of the owner manifesting his purpose," but that an implied dedication may be proved "by acts or conduct not directly manifesting the intention, but from which the law will imply the intent." As stated in Helm v. McClure, 107 Cal. 204, 40 Pac. 437, the question "whether a dedication of land for highway purposes has occurred in any instance is a conclusion of fact to be drawn from the circumstances of the particular case; that such circumstances must clearly show an unequivocal intention, manifested by appropriate words or conduct, or both, on the part of the owner, to devote his land to the wayfaring uses of that somewhat vague entity called 'the public.'" Sussman v. San Luis Obispo County, 126 Cal. 539, 59 Pac. 24; Smith v. San Luis Obispo, 95 Cal. 466, 30 Pac. 591; Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 647. It is not necessary that the acceptance by the public be manifested by any direct action, ordinance, or declaration of the public authorities. "Such acceptance may be shown by mere user without any formal action in relation thereto by the municipal authorities." Monterey v. Malarin, 99 Cal. 293, 33 Pac. 840. "The use of the street by the public for a reasonable length of time" is sufficient evidence of acceptance. Smith v. San Luis Obispo, supra, 95 Cal. 470, 30 Pac. 591. This case further holds that the payment of taxes on the property by the owner is not sufficient to rebut the proof of dedication, if such proof is otherwise sufficient. Upon applying these principles to the case, we find that there is sufficient evidence to sustain the findings of the court.

Block 10 is a parcel of land between Canal street, lying easterly, Pacific avenue, otherwise called Trolleyway, westerly, Center street, southerly, and Mildred avenue, northerly, in the subdivision mentioned in the description aforesaid. Its width from Pacific avenue to Canal street is 235 feet. The frontage on Canal street is about 500 feet; that on Pacific avenue about 644 feet. The difference between these sides is caused by the fact that Mildred avenue is not at right angles to the side lines of the block. It contains 38 lots. Seventeen of them are on the Canal street side. Twenty of them front on Pacific avenue. All of these are 100 feet in length, thus leaving a strip 35 feet wide in the center of the block, extending from Mildred avenue to Center street and lying between the respective tiers of lots. This strip is designated on the map as lot 38. The land was subdivided for sale by a syndicate composed of some six or more persons, and the subdivision and sale thereof was committed by the owners entirely to one member of the syndicate, a real estate firm known as Strong & Dickinson, and their subagents. Prior to the filing of the map, a tentative map had been made showing what is now called lot 38, not as a lot, but as an alley or street. At that time it was expected that a street car line would be built through the tract upon this strip of land, and it was intended to be used for that purpose. By some change of plan it was determined that the street car line would not be so located. Before it was filed, this strip was designated on the map as lot 38, and a similar strip through block 9, lying southerly of block 10, was designated as lot 42. The evidence showed that nearly all of the lots were thereafter sold by the owners through Strong & Dickinson and subagents authorized by them, and that in making sales of lots they stated, or authorized the statement, to several of the purchasers that this strip would be left open for a public street. The street car line which was built on Pacific avenue, or Trolleyway, was so constructed that there was no adequate room for the passage of teams along that street. Purchasers made objections to this frontage, and were told that they would have access to the lots over the strip of land in question. Houses were built upon the lots on each side of this strip; the lots fronting on Pacific avenue being almost entirely built upon. Several of the owners made sidewalks in front of their lots upon the alleyway, so called, designated on the plat as lot 38. Some of these sidewalks were made as early as the year 1906. From about the year 1905 until the time of the trial this strip was continuously used as a public way, and was commonly known as "Strong's Drive." It was the only means of access to the buildings situated on the westerly side of the strip that could be conveniently used by delivery wagons and other vehicles. There is evidence that the owners of the property, through their local agents in charge of the property, were fully aware of this use of the strip of land. The city of Venice improved Center street and Mildred avenue with sidewalks, and at the corners of this alley upon those streets insets in the sidewalk were made which plainly indicated that it was supposed to be a public way. At the time the map was filed the title to the property was held by the Union Trust & Realty Company in trust for the members of said syndicate. Shortly afterwards the members formed the appellant corporation, and the title was thereafter transferred to the corporation, but the agency for the making and control of the sales continued as before.

[4] This evidence sufficiently shows the intention of the owners that this strip of land should be used by the public as a public street or alley for the convenience and benefit of the public and of the owners of lots abutting thereon. The general use by the public was a manifestation of its acceptance thereof, and upon the rules laid down in the foregoing authorities the street was in this manner completely "dedicated and abandoned" to the public use.

It is true that the managers and agents of the syndicate above referred to, and some members of the syndicate, as well, testified that they made no such declarations concerning the use of the street, and that they never intended to dedicate the property for that purpose. But the testimony of other persons concerning declarations made by them was sufficient to create a conflict of the evidence, which was determined by the court below in favor of the respondent.

[5] It is also suggested by the appellant that there is evidence that the directors of the appellant corporation never in any manner authorized its agents to dedicate this land to the public use. It is apparent, however, that the corporation is estopped to deny the authority of its agents in the matter. The entire subject of making the sales was left to the control of its agents, and they had at least ostensible authority to make the declarations referred to. Southern Pacific Co. v. Pomona, 144 Cal. 347, 77 Pac. 929.

[6, 7] Appellant complains of the ruling of the court allowing testimony of the declarations made by Carroll Daly with regard to the use of this strip of land as a public street, claiming that he had no authority to make such statements. It appears that he was a member of the syndicate that subdivided the land, and that he has been a director of the appellant corporation ever since its organization; that he was also secretary and treasurer of the corporation; that he took an active part in its business and was a subagent under Strong & Dickinson for the sale of the lots; and that as such he negotiated several sales of the lots by the company. Having obtained the benefit of his solicitations and representations to induce purchases, the company denies his authority to make them. It is not the law that the authority of an agent to act for a corporation can only be proven by the minutes of its board of directors or by a contract in writing. It may be shown by evidence that the person does business for the corporation and on its behalf, as agent, with the knowledge and acquiescence of its directors or general manager, or by their direction. The company, in such a case, is bound by his acts and declarations within the scope of the business entrusted to him. Crowley v. Genesee M. Co., 55 Cal. 276. It may be that Daly's declarations to W. A. Rennie in negotiating a sale by Daly of his own lot to Rennie was not admissible against the company. But they were given before it was disclosed that the lot belonged to Daly at a time when it appeared that it was one of the lots of the company. It was then apparently admissible, and no motion was made to strike out the evidence when the contrary was shown. Hence the objection must be deemed to have been waived.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re NUTT'S ESTATE. (L. A. 6047.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 345(1)—TIME FOR TAKING APPEAL—PENDENCY OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—NOTICE OF INTENTION.

Provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 939, that if proceedings for new trial are pending, time for appeal shall not expire until 30 days after entry of order therein, is limited to cases where new trial proceeding is regularly initiated by the filing and service of notice of intention, as required by section 663.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 345(1)—TIME FOR TAKING APPEAL—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—FAILURE TO FILE NOTICE OF INTENTION—ADVERSE PARTIES.

Where one "B." contested for incompetency of testator, probate of two alleged wills and beneficiaries under earlier will contested second will for undue influence, and court tried contest of beneficiaries to first and postponed trial of other issue, an appeal from judgment for contestants is properly taken, under Code Civ. Proc. § 939 within 30 days after entry of order denying new trial, though "B." was not served with notice of intention; since, if "B." was an adverse party on whom notice must be served, failure of service did not deprive court of jurisdiction to hear the motion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Carolyn E. Nutt, deceased. Proceedings to probate two alleged wills, in which W. Ray Simpson was proponent of later will and Martha Nutt and another were proponents of earlier will, and contestants were Ann Nutt Baker, contesting both wills, and proponents of first will, contesting later will. From a judgment for contestants of later will, proponent appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Hahn & Hahn, of Los Angeles, and Stephen G. Long, of Long Beach, for appellant.

M. B. Butler, of Pasadena, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal taken by W. Ray Simpson, the proponent of an alleged will of deceased, from a judgment sustaining the opposition of two heirs of deceased to the probate thereof. One of the grounds of the motion is that the appeal was not taken within 60 days after the entry of judgment. But it was taken within 30 days after the entry of an order denying proponent's attempted motion for a new trial, which was in time if such a proceeding was duly initiated. Section 939, Code Civ. Proc.

[1] Under section 663a, Code of Civil Procedure, the party desiring to initiate such a proceeding must serve on the adverse party and file with the clerk of the court a notice of intention within a time specified. We have held that, unless the notice of intention be both served and filed within the specified time, there is no initiation of a proceeding on motion for new trial, and no such "proceedings * * * are pending" within the meaning of section 939, Code of Civil Procedure (Whiting-Mead, etc., Co. v. Bayside Land Co., 172 Pac. 598), with the result that in such a case the right of appeal expires 60 days after the entry of judgment. This ruling was made in a case where there was no filing of any notice of intention within the specified time, with the result that there was no initiation of a proceeding on motion for new trial as to any adverse party.

[2] The situation here is different. The point in the case at bar is that no such proceeding was initiated for the reason that the notice of intention was never served on one Ann Nutt Baker, claimed to be an adverse party. The facts in this connection are as follows: There were two alleged wills of deceased, one dated August 17, 1917, and the other dated September 24, 1917. Both have been filed for probate and opposition to probate presented as to each, Ann Nutt Baker contesting both wills, and Martha Nutt and David Nutt, beneficiaries under the earlier will, contesting the will of September 24th. As to the will of September 24th, offered for probate by one W. Ray Simpson, the sole beneficiary thereunder, the contest of Martha Nutt and David Nutt was on the ground of fraud and undue influence, while that of Ann Nutt Baker was on a ground of incompetency to make a will. The question of the admission to probate of the alleged will of September 24th being before the court, and the two oppositions to such admission pending, for some reason the court proceeded with a trial of the issues presented by the opposition of Martha and David Nutt only; the opposition of Ann Nutt Baker being postponed to await the determination of the other opposition. This trial resulted in a verdict for the contestants, with a consequent judgment declaring the will of September 24th to be "null and void." This is the judgment attempted to be appealed from.

The notice of intention to move for a new trial was addressed only to Martha and David Nutt, and was served on them alone and filed within the specified time. This was upon the theory, doubtless, that under the circumstances Ann Nutt Baker was not an adverse party, and need not be made a party to the new trial proceeding. We may assume that this view was erroneous, but we are of the opinion that it does not follow that no new trial proceeding was duly initiated. To the contrary it is clear that by the service and filing of the notice on Martha and David Nutt within the specified time such a proceeding was duly initiated as to them at least, and that the trial court had jurisdiction to determine the motion.

If it be true that Ann Nutt Baker was an adverse party in the sense that unless by service she was made a party to the proceeding on motion for a new trial the trial court could not properly grant the motion, that fact would be a reason requiring the denial of the motion, but it would not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction to hear and determine the motion. This, we think, is the effect of the authorities. See Johnson v. Phenix Ins. Co., 146 Cal. 571, 80 Pac. 719, and cases there cited. So it may not be held that a new trial proceeding was not pending in this case. Its facts clearly distinguish it from Whiting-Mead, etc., Co. v. Bayside Land Co., supra, where there was no initiation of a new trial proceeding as to any adverse party. It follows from what we have said that the appeal taken within 30 days after the entry of the order denying a new trial was in time.

The other ground of the motion to dismiss was that no sufficient notice of appeal was ever filed. As to this ground we orally stated our views from the bench at the time of the hearing of the motion, to the effect that the notice should be held to be sufficient. No useful purpose would be subserved by further discussion of this point.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

PEOPLE v. RICO. (Cr. 2235.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1919.)

HOMICIDE $\S$ 230, 232—EVIDENCE—DELIBERATION AND PREMEDITATION—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

In a murder trial, evidence that accused, who was boarding with deceased, upon being ordered to leave for failure to pay his board, left in the morning, but, returning in the evening, attacked deceased and killed her with a razor, was sufficient to warrant the jury's finding of a deliberate purpose and intent on his part to kill, although there was evidence that he had been drinking whisky that day.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Pedro Rico was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

Albert D. Trujillo, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendant, Pedro Rico, charged by information with the crime of murder, was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals from the judgment pronounced on such conviction.

It is shown by the evidence that the defendant, who for some time immediately preceding the commission of the homicide was a boarder in the household of Mrs. Manuela P. de Ortiz and her husband, in the city of San Bernardino, was on the morning of October 29, 1918, ordered by both Mr. and Mrs. Ortiz to leave the premises, the reason apparently being that he had failed to pay for his board and lodging. He left, and shortly thereafter returned and obtained his clothes, which he took away. During the early evening of the same day, between 5 and 6 o'clock, he again returned to the house, and finding Mrs. Ortiz in the kitchen engaged in her work, he made an assault on her with a razor and cut her throat, inflicting a wound from which she instantly died. It appeared that he had been drinking whisky to some extent during the day, but the evidence in regard to this is such that it cannot be held that the jury was not warranted in concluding that he knew fully what he was doing, and was acting with a deliberate purpose and intent to kill the deceased. Upon the question of the effect of intoxicants the jury was correctly instructed. The principal point made in the appellant's brief is substantially that the evidence fails to show the premeditation which is an essential element of the first degree of the crime of murder. As said in People v. Machuca, 158 Cal. 62, 64, 109 Pac. 886, 887, "this court has repeatedly declared that the question of the degree of crime is exclusively for the jury, and that their determination will not be disturbed when there is any evidence to support it." In this case there was clearly sufficient evidence to sustain the conclusion of a deliberate purpose and intent on the part of the defendant to kill.

A few rulings of the trial court in the matter of admission of evidence are complained of. Counsel has not specified wherein the error as to any of these rulings exists, and, so far as we can see, each of the rulings was correct.

This being a capital case, we have carefully examined the whole record. To our minds it discloses no reason to doubt that the proceedings in the court below were entirely without error, and that the conclusion of the jury is fully sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by the Fowler Gas Company against A. A. Weber and the First National Bank of Fowler. Judgment for plaintiff, and the last-named defendant appeals. Reversed.

L. L. Cory, of Fresno, for appellant.
Gallagher & Aten, of Fresno, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Judgment was rendered in the court below in favor of the plaintiff against the First National Bank of Fowler and A. A. Weber, for $3,897.84. The defendant First National Bank of Fowler alone appeals.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff had money on deposit in its name in said bank, and that, without authority from the plaintiff and against its will, and with intent to defraud the plaintiff, said bank, on December 5, 1913, paid out of the said deposit a certain sum of $3,897.84, in satisfaction of a draft for that sum, which draft said bank had previously received and honored and then held; that plaintiff was not then or at any time, indebted to said bank, or to any or either of the defendants; and that Weber received said money from the bank with knowledge of said facts and of said fraudulent intent.

The answer of the bank alleges that said draft "was honored and paid with the full knowledge and consent of said plaintiff and with its authority," and that it was not paid to Weber, but was paid to Smith-Booth-Usher Company, the drawers thereof. It further avers that on December 5, 1913, there was deposited in said bank in the name of the plaintiff, the sum of $14,000; that on said day the plaintiff authorized and directed the bank to pay from said deposit all drafts, orders, and vouchers bearing the O. K. of the defendant Weber; that said Weber had attached his O. K. to said draft; and that thereupon with said authority defendant paid the draft from said deposit.

The court below made findings sustaining the allegations of the complaint, except as to the alleged fraudulent intent. It is contended by the appellant that the finding to the effect that the payment of $3,897.84 by the bank out of the deposit account of the plaintiff therein was unauthorized, is contrary to the evidence, and also that by reason of the adverse rulings of the court the appellant was prevented from fully proving the facts which constituted its defense, and was thereby deprived of its right to a fair trial. Upon a careful examination of the record we are of the opinion that these points are well taken.

The draft which it is claimed was satisfied by the alleged payment reads as follows:

"Los Angeles, California, Nov. 25, 1913.

"At sight pay to the order of the First National Bank of Fowler (\$3,897.84) three thousand eight hundred ninety-seven and $\frac{84}{100}$ dollars. Value received and charge to the account of

To Mess. Weber & Wilson, Dinuba, Cal.

"Smith-Booth-Usher Co.

"E. H. Law."

The evidence shows that Weber & Wilson had purchased a lot of pipe suitable for gas mains from Smith-Booth-Usher Company for $4,097.84, of which $200 had been paid, that said pipe had been shipped to the town of Fowler, consigned to Weber & Wilson, and that this draft was drawn for the purpose of obtaining payment of the balance due therefor. It is to be noted that there is nothing on the face of the draft to indicate that the Fowler Gas Company was in any way concerned with its payment. The business of Weber & Wilson was done by Weber alone, and we will use his name in referring to it.

At the outset of the trial the court was of the opinion that the authority of the bank to pay the draft aforesaid out of said deposit could not be shown, except by proof of an acceptance thereof in writing by said company. Efforts of the appellant to show transactions between Weber and the gas company, tending to establish the liability of the gas company for the debt represented by the draft, were thwarted by rulings based on this ground. This, of course, was erroneous. The court was also of the opinion that no authority for the payment of the $3,897.84 out of the plaintiff's account could be shown except by orders to that effect entered on the minutes of its board of directors. Other evidence to prove the authority was excluded by rulings to that effect. Later, after the trial had been postponed for a period of six months, the appellant again endeavored to show the transaction which it contended warranted the charge of this sum against the account of the plaintiff, and offered evidence of the dealings between Weber and the gas company for that purpose. Weber testified, "I had a contract and erected the plant," but the court would not allow him to state what the contract was, nor with whom it was made. After much difficulty and over repeated interruptions and objections, some of the facts concerning the deal were elicited, the court stating in explanation that the evidence was admitted tentatively only, subject to a motion to strike out the same in case the matter was not connected by proper legal evidence of the authority from the gas company. In this way the appellant introduced such scraps of evidence as the record contains on the subject. From the remarks of the court in making its rulings it is reasonably certain that its final decision was made in entire disregard of this evidence. The plaintiff, however, was careful to make no motion to strike out any of it, and we have no express ruling of the court declaring it immaterial.

[1] From the uncontradicted evidence introduced, the following facts appear: About September 1, 1913, Weber began preparing for the construction of the gasworks and distributing system in Fowler, apparently with the expectation of interesting other persons therein before its completion. On November 18, 1913, the plaintiff corporation was organized for the purpose, among other things, of acquiring and operating gasworks and conducting its principal business in Fowler. At that time Weber had the gas plant partially constructed. About that time he ordered the pipe aforesaid, from Smith-Booth-Usher Company to be used in the laying of mains for the said gas plant. Negotiations ensued between the organizers and directors of the company and Weber, the nature of which was not allowed to be shown, for the purchase by said company of the said plant from Weber. The court refused to allow the complete terms of the contract finally made to be given in evidence, but by persistent effort the appellant finally succeeded in eliciting from Weber testimony to the effect that he sold the plant to the plaintiff and agreed to complete the same, in consideration of 15,000 shares of the capital stock of the gas company of the par value of $1 each, and $14,000 in money; that the money was all paid, and that the $3,897.84 paid by the bank in satisfaction of the aforesaid draft was a part of the said cash payment of $14,000; that he agreed to complete the plant for said price and turn it over to the company; that he did complete it and turned it over to the company on February 25, 1914. It also appeared that on December 5, 1913, the gas company deposited in the bank said sum of $14,000; that on the same day the bank officials entered a charge against said account for $10,565.02; that this charge consisted of $5,594 on account of a check made by the gas company to pay a note of Weber to the bank for money borrowed by him in September, 1913, the item of $3,897.84 on account of the draft in controversy, another item of $457.93 for freight paid by the bank at Weber's request, on the pipe above mentioned, and 24 other small items which had been paid on Weber's account by the bank, either on that day or previously, making the total amount above stated. All of these charges, except the note, were approved by Weber. None of them was objected to at the time, though known to Patton, the secretary of the plaintiff. The terms of the contract of sale by Weber to the company, of the gas plant, so far as they may have related to the purpose of the $14,000 deposit, were not given in evidence other than as above stated; the defendants apparently were deterred by the adverse rulings from pursuing the inquiry. But the evidence as a whole raised a strong inference that the $14,000 deposited in the bank by the gas company on December 5, 1913, represented the purchase price to be paid in cash to Weber for the sale and final completion of the plant, and that it was deposited in that manner in order to make sure that it should be applied and used as far as it would go, or as far as necessary if it were more than enough, in the payment of bills then already incurred by Weber in the construction of the plant, including the $10,565.02 aforesaid, and the balance to the further expenses of Weber in completing the plant. There was no contradiction of the facts above stated, nor of the facts which, as we have said, raised the aforesaid inference.

It may be that from these facts alone the inferences just mentioned would not of necessity follow. But there was other evidence, also undisputed, which establishes them as facts proven. The pipe for which the $3,897.84 was due was at Fowler, ready for laying in the distributing system of the plant at the time the deal was closed. The officers of the company knew this, and the company agreed to pay the bills for freight thereon, and did pay them by directing a charge therefor against the $14,000 deposit. They knew that the pipe was intended for use in the plant, and also that it was so used. In February, 1914, a settlement for the construction work was made by Weber with Patton, secretary of plaintiff, and also assistant cashier of the bank, and Avenall, a director of the plaintiff, and also cashier of the bank. The plant was accepted, and Weber paid plaintiff $322.01, ascertained to be due from him on said settlement. At that time the charge of $10,565.02 against the $14,000 deposit, which charge included the sum of $3,897.84 paid for the pipe, was standing on the books of the bank, uncontested. If it had not been credited to the plaintiff in the settlement, Weber would not have owed the $322.01, but plaintiff would have owed him $3,575.83. Weber's testimony that the entire $14,000 had been paid to him stands uncontradicted, and it is clear that it was not paid in any other manner than by the charges to the gas company against its deposit. Furthermore, in May, 1914, in an application to the Railroad Commission for leave to issue bonds, the gas company declared that the cost of the pipe laid for its mains was $4,097.84, and that it had paid for the same. This could be none other than the pipe bought by Weber from Smith-Booth-Usher Company, and the payment was obviously made in the manner above stated and not otherwise. The charge made on December 5, 1913, by the bank of this item of $3,897.84 against plaintiff was not objected to at all until April, 1914, on the occasion of a change in the position of manager of plaintiff. J. R. Lovely testified that he then became manager, that as such he got a statement from the bank, and found the draft of Smith-Booth-Usher Company returned by the bank as a voucher for $3,897.84, charged against the company and that he then investigated the bank account, as he said, "for the simple reason that I knew there was never no such stuff bought by the Fowler Gas Company." That the pipe was bought by the company when it bought the plant of Weber was a fact incontrovertibly established by the evidence. His reason merely showed his ignorance of previous transactions, and implies that, if he had known that the pipe had been bought of Smith-Booth-Usher Company by Weber, that the draft was for the price thereof, that the pipe had been used in the plant and had been paid for as a part of the price to Weber for the plant, he would not have made the objection.

From all this evidence there can be no other conclusion than that the cost of this pipe was included in the price paid to Weber by the deposit of the $14,000 in the bank, and its subsequent application to the bills due for construction and material, and that the charge and payment complained of was in that manner authorized by the plaintiff. The findings should have been against the plaintiff on this vital issue.

The rebuttal evidence of plaintiff was confined to an effort to show that at the meeting of December 5, 1913, the directors of plaintiff did not direct the bank to pay this draft out of plaintiff's account or to pay for any shipment of pipe out of said account. There was a sharp conflict of evidence on these points. But the pipe was then delivered at Fowler, the draft, so far as Smith-Booth-Usher Company was concerned, had been paid by the bank at Weber's request, and the matter was then in the shape of an item on the "Teller's Cash Ledger" of the bank. There was no occasion for any special discussion regarding that item. It was not denied by any one that Weber was to have the equivalent of $14,000 for the completed plant, including the pipe, nor that he got it only in the manner we have stated. It is suggested, rather than claimed, by the plaintiff that compensation to Weber for the pipe included in the transfer of the plant to the plaintiff was covered by the payment of the $5,500 note charged against the plaintiff's deposit. If there is evidence of this fact the plaintiff will be at liberty to produce it upon a new trial. There is none in the record before us.

It is unnecessary to consider in detail the many adverse rulings made by the court during the progress of the trial. The issues presented the question whether the charge of the amount of this draft against the account of the plaintiff was authorized. This opened a wide field of inquiry, and justified the introduction of evidence of any transactions between Weber and the gas company tending to show that the gas company assumed the payment of the debt and provided for its payment in the manner above stated. The action of the court in preventing the introduction of the evidence except in the limited manner above stated was erroneous.

[2] For the guidance of the court upon a new trial we will say further that it is not true that the minutes of the board of directors of the plaintiff constituted the only evidence admissible for the purpose of showing authority for the payment of this sum by the bank out of the plaintiff's funds. If a corporation allows its officers to conduct its business and third persons act upon the apparent authority thus shown, it cannot defeat the rights of such persons arising from transactions done and completed under such ostensible authority by failing to enter upon its minutes any order giving its officers authority to act. Fresno, etc., Co. v. S. P. Co., 135 Cal. 208, 67 Pac. 773; Blood v. La Serena L. Co., 134 Cal. 370, 66 Pac. 317; Crowley v. Genesee M. Co., 55 Cal. 276. If minutes are not kept, other parties have the right to prove what actually occurred at the meetings of the directors, if such proof tends to establish their rights. We are of the opinion that a new trial is necessary, at which the appellant may be allowed fully to present the evidence under the rules we have stated.

The judgment is reversed.

GREELY v. NOBLE. (Civ. 2769.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 11, 1919.)

MECHANICS' LIENS — 272, 279—FORECLOSING — PLEADING—NOTICE OF COMPLETION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, requiring contractor's liens to be filed within 60 days after completion of the work or within 90 days if the owner fails to file a notice of completion, a contractor bringing an action to foreclose an original lien under section 1191 for street improvements, who filed the lien 62 days after completion, must allege and prove the failure of the owner to file his notice of completion in order to estop such owner from pleading the 60-day limitation in defense.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John T. Nourse, Judge.

Action by M. A. Greely against Gerard E. Noble. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Samuel Knight and F. E. Boland, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. Plaintiff appeals upon the judgment roll alone in an action to foreclose an original contractor's lien for street improvements, claimed by plaintiff under the provisions of section 1191 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff alleged, and the court found, that the work upon which the lien was based was fully completed and performed on June 4, 1917, and that plaintiff's claim of lien was filed in the office of the county recorder on August 6, 1917, more than 60 days after the completion of the work. From these facts the court reached the conclusion of law that the claim of lien was not filed within the time required by section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and was therefore invalid. There is neither allegation in the complaint nor finding as to the filing, or want of filing, by the owner of the notice of completion provided for in said section.

The appeal presents the single question as to whether or not it is incumbent upon the plaintiff, in order to obtain the benefit of the 90-day period for filing liens specified in the closing sentence of section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, to allege and prove that the owner did not file the notice of completion therein provided for. Counsel for appellant state that this question has never been considered by the appellate courts of this state, and we have found no case in which the exact question is involved. In Meyer v. City Street Improvement Co., 164 Cal. 645, 130 Pac. 215, it was held that a claim of lien for street work under section 1191, Code of Civil Procedure, was in time if filed within 90 days after the completion of the work. That decision is based upon an interpretation of the Mechanic's Lien Law as it existed prior to the amendments of 1911, and expressly states that it does not determine the effect of the revised act. The present provisions of section 1187 apply to liens claimed under any section of the chapter on mechanics' liens. Bosch v. Waldmann, 31 Cal. App. 245, 254, 160 Pac. 180.

In order to maintain an action for the foreclosure of a lien under section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, it was necessary for plaintiff to allege that his claim of lien was filed within the time therein specified. That time is limited to a period of 60 days after the completion of the work, with the proviso that, if the owner fails to file the notice of completion therein provided for, he—

"shall be estopped in any proceedings for the foreclosure of any lien provided for in this chapter from maintaining any defense therein based on the ground that said lien was not filed within the time provided in this chapter: Provided, that all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of any building, improvement or structure, or the alteration, addition or repair thereto."

This is a statutory declaration of an estoppel against the owner, based on his failure to file the notice referred to. It is settled law in this state that:

"If the plaintiff relies on waiver or estoppel as to any defense which would otherwise be available to the defendant under the facts stated in the complaint, the facts constituting such waiver or estoppel must be pleaded in the first instance." Goorberg v. Western Assurance Co., 150 Cal. 510, 519, 89 Pac. 130, 133 (10 L. R. A. [N. S.] 876, 119 Am. St. Rep. 246, 11 Ann. Cas. 801); Newhall v. Hatch, 134 Cal. 269, 273, 66 Pac. 266, 55 L. R. A. 673.

The complaint alleges facts which show that plaintiff has no cause of action under the 60-day limitation contained in the first part of section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, and fails to plead any facts showing that the 90-day limitation is applicable to his case. In other words, plaintiff pleads himself without the terms of one portion of the section, and does not plead himself within the other portion thereof. The 60-day limitation is a defense which is available to the defendant, unless he is estopped from relying upon it by reason of his failure to file the notice of completion. In order to prove the filing of his lien within the statutory period, plaintiff must rely upon this estoppel. If he so relies, he must plead and prove the facts constituting such estoppel. Having failed to do so, the trial court was correct in holding that his lien was too late, and for that reason invalid.

The judgment is affirmed.

GROTHER v. PANAMA-PACIFIC LAND CO. (Civ. 2625.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 30, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER —109—RESCISION OF LAND SALE CONTRACT—"FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION."

Where a land sale contract bound defendant vendor to exercise diligence in carrying out its terms, which provided for certain street improvements which were not made within six years, during which time purchaser was paying purchase-price installments vendor's breach constituted a clear failure of consideration within the provisions of Civ. Code, § 1689, providing that a party may rescind a contract if the consideration "before it is rendered to him fails in a material respect from any cause."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Failure of Consideration.]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER —114—RESCISION—WAIVER.

Where a land sale contract provided that vendor should complete certain street improvements and because of vendor's delay purchaser objected to making further payments, and an agreement was made to delay payments until the work was performed, and plaintiff purchaser still urged that the neglected work be done, purchaser did not waive the right to rescind the contract.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 118—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — BREACH OF AGREEMENT—EXCUSE.

As regards vendee's right of rescission for vendor's failure to perform an agreement to improve streets, it is not a defense to vendor that he was unsuccessful in getting permission of city engineer and superintendent of streets to place culverts, where the conditions were known to vendor prior to contract, and particularly where much of the work left undone was of a character not requiring official permission.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by F. R. Grotheer against the Panama-Pacific Land Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Jordan & Brann, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Myrick & Deering and James Walter Scott, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff and defendant on October 10, 1910, entered into a contract by which the latter sold to the former and agreed to convey to her a lot of land situate within the municipality of Oakland, at the corner of Sunnyvale avenue and Stanley road. The price of the lot was $1,580, part of which was paid upon the execution of the agreement, and the balance thereof was payable in monthly installments. The agreement contained the following provisions:

"Time is hereby expressly made of the essence of this agreement.

"The seller agrees as follows, viz.:

"(a) To construct concrete curbing and cement sidewalks.

"(b) To grade and macadamize and concrete gutter all streets.

"(c) To lay sewers and water mains.

"Improvements will be carried on with due diligence until completed, all at the expense of the seller."

The plaintiff made her payments regularly until May, 1914, at which time she paid on account of principal the sum of $1,005, together with $172.85 for interest and $17.55 for taxes. At that time she called upon the secretary of the defendant, and stated to him that the company was not living up to its agreement with reference to the construction of street improvements; that she did not wish to find herself in the position of having completed her payments before all the street work was done, but at the same time she did not wish to stop them and have interest accrue against her. The secretary of the company replied that the position assumed by the plaintiff was a reasonable one, and promised to take up the matter with his board of directors; and some months thereafter, on December 11, 1914, the company communicated to the plaintiff a resolution adopted by it relieving her of further payments until the street work in front of her lot had been completed. No further work having been done by the defendant in connection with the plaintiff's lot she, on November 16, 1915, rescinded the contract and demanded the return of the money paid thereunder by her, the refusal of the defendant to comply with this request resulting in the bringing of the present action.

Defendant answered, admitting that it had failed to construct cement sidewalks, concrete curbing, and concrete gutters in Stanley road, but alleged in this behalf that said work was not done by it because of the impossibility of securing from the city of Oakland the necessary permission for such improvement. It also set up as a separate defense that the plaintiff for a valuable consideration had waived the making of the omitted improvements.

The court found against these contentions of defendant and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount demanded.

[1] The defendant appeals, and urges as its first point that the record shows no ground entitling the plaintiff to the equitable relief of rescission. It argues that at most there is merely a breach of a simple contract, for which the only remedy is in damages, and that there is no damage shown.

Undoubtedly the rule in most jurisdictions is as stated by the appellant. This rule, however, has been changed in several states, including our own (Conlin v. Osborn, 161 Cal. 659, 120 Pac. 755). Section 1689 of the Civil Code provides under what conditions the remedy of rescission, formerly exclusively equitable, is available. The Legislature has there enacted that a party to a contract may rescind if the consideration, "before it is rendered to him, fails in a material respect, from any cause." We think the present case comes within this provision of the Code. The evidence disclosed that there existed throughout the length of Stanley road, including that part of said road in front of plaintiff's lot, a ditch several feet wide and deep, which served the purpose of carrying off storm waters from neighboring lands, and also, as we have seen, that certain street improvements agreed to had not been made, rendering the lot of little value for residence purposes, for which it had been sold. This situation still existed six years after the execution of the contract, which bound the defendant to the exercise of diligence in carrying out its terms, even to the making of time of the essence thereof. This long-continued failure to comply with essential provisions of its agreement constituted a clear failure of consideration (Coulin v. Osborn, supra; Sterling v. Gregory, 149 Cal. 117, 85 Pac. 305; Richter v. Union Land, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 372, 62 Pac. 39; Brown v. National Electric Works, 168 Cal. 336, 143 Pac. 606) and, under the terms of subdivision 4 of the section of the Civil Code above referred to, entitled the plaintiff to rescind the contract.

[2] It is further contended by the appellant that the plaintiff waived her right (if any) to rescind by agreeing with it as to what the consequence of the delay in making the improvements should be, referring to the fact that, upon the objection of plaintiff to continuing her payments while appellant was behind in the prosecution of the work of street improvement, appellant in writing notified her that further payments could be deferred until the work was completed. We do not give to this incident the scope thus claimed for it. The plaintiff was still urging that the neglected work be done, and, although for some time she took advantage of the appellant's permission to defer further payments, this did not prevent her after a reasonable time from insisting that the terms of appellant's contract be lived up to. Woodard v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 171 Cal. 513, 153 Pac. 951. The plaintiff waited such reasonable time, for it was not until nearly a year after the extension of time impliedly given to the appellant for the completion of the work (during which time no further work was done) that the plaintiff formally rescinded the contract and commenced this action.

[3] It is also argued by the appellant, as negating the court's finding that it did not diligently prosecute the work of street improvement, that the evidence shows that it was impossible for it to do so because it was unable to obtain the permission of the authorities of the city of Oakland for the doing of the work. The only support in the record for this contention is that the appellant on several occasions unsuccessfully sought the permission of the city engineer and of the superintendent of streets to place a culvert over the storm water ditch in Stanley road. As to this, it may be said that the ditch was in existence and known to the appellant at the time it entered into the contract; that if, in order to comply with its contract, it was necessary to provide for carrying off the storm waters by some other means and fill up the ditch, it had assumed the obligation to do so. Such an operation, of course, would entail considerable expense, but that consideration would not excuse performance of an obligation, and, so far as refusal of permission by the city engineer and the superintendent of streets is concerned, it was merely a refusal to allow the ditch to be covered by a culvert; nor does the record disclose any application to the proper municipal authorities for whatever permission was necessary. Finally, it may be said that much of the work that was left undone was of such a character as not to require any official permission. The record thus abundantly sustains the finding of the trial court as to the appellant's lack of diligence in carrying out its contract.

Judgment affirmed.

BOURGUIGNON et al v. PENINSULAR RY. CO. (Civ. 2673.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 17, 1919. On Motion for Rehearing in Supreme Court in Bank, June 17, 1919.)

1. CARRIERS ⇐321(23) — PASSENGER'S PERSONAL INJURY ACTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a passenger's action against carrier for personal injuries sustained in a derailment, instruction as to the burden of proof under the doctrine res ipsa loquitur held not erroneous where the complaint contained averment of general negligence and specific acts of negligence; the case being tried on theory that both general and specific negligence were alleged.

2. NEW TRIAL ⇐26—GROUNDS—VARIANCE—FAILURE TO RAISE QUESTION.

In a passenger's action for injuries in derailment, where the parties proceeded on theory that general and specific negligence were alleged, defendant could not insist on motion for new trial that plaintiff, having alleged special negligence, must prove it; defendant having made no objection to the sufficiency of plaintiff's showing in first instance.

3. TRIAL ⇐296(3)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE OF ERROR.

In a passenger's action for injuries in a derailment, an instruction that defendant must show that the overturning of car was result of inevitable casualty which human foresight could not prevent, held not erroneous, in view of the other instructions given.

On Motion for Rehearing in Supreme Court in Bank.

4. NEGLIGENCE ⇐134(1) — DEFENSES—PRESUMPTIONS.

In negligence cases, where the accident raises a presumption of negligence, defendant will not be held blameless, except upon a showing either of a satisfactory explanation of the accident or of such care in all possible respects as necessarily to lead to the conclusion that the accident could not have happened from want of care, but must have been due to some unpreventable cause, although the exact cause is unknown.

5. CARRIERS ⇐318(6)—PASSENGER'S PERSONAL INJURY ACTION—EVIDENCE OF DUE CARE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a passenger transported by a carrier is injured in a derailment, and the carrier attempts to give a satisfactory explanation of the accident, or to show such care in all respects as to exclude the conclusion of want of care, the explanation or care shown must be most satisfactory.

6. CARRIERS ⇐318(1) — PASSENGER'S PERSONAL INJURY ACTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where the accident by which a passenger transported by a common carrier is injured raises the presumption of negligence, the carrier, to overcome such presumption, need not do so by a preponderance of evidence, but it is sufficient for him to give such proof of the truth of his explanation of the accident, or of his contention that he exercised due care in all particulars, as to offset the presumption in the minds of the jury, and produce a balance in their minds on the question of its truth; the burden always being on plaintiff to prove his case by a preponderance of evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Naomi Bourguignon and another against the Peninsular Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Louis Oneal, Wm. F. James, and James P. Sex, all of San Jose, for appellant.

E. M. Rea, of San Jose, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiffs in this action recovered judgment against the defendant for the sum of $18,001.35 as damages for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff Naomi Bourguignon while a passenger upon one of the defendant's cars, through the alleged negligence of the defendant by reason of which said car was derailed and overturned while rounding a curve in the defendant's railroad.

The first and main contention of the appellant herein is that the trial court committed error in the giving and refusing of certain instructions having reference to the burden of proof in the case and the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to it in the light of the averments of the plaintiff's complaint with respect to the defendant's alleged negligence.

The averments of the complaint with respect to the defendant's negligence read as follows:

"That the said car left the said rails and track and turned over on its side, as herein alleged, through the negligence, carelessness, and wanton recklessness of the said defendant in the management and operation of its said car, and the maintenance of said roadbed or tracks, and without any fault or negligence on the part of the said Naomi Bourguignon, and that at the time of said derailling of said car the said plaintiff Naomi O. Bourguignon was occupying as a passenger a seat on the inside of said car, said seat being a seat provided for passengers by said defendant; that said car left said tracks on account of the sagging or giving way of one of the rails of said track, coupled with the negligent operation of said car, which consisted in going over said curve at a high rate of speed."

No demurrer was filed to the sufficiency of the complaint, but the defendant answered, denying this averment, and the cause proceeded to trial. Upon the trial the plaintiff proved the fact of derailment and overturning of the car while she was a passenger upon it and the consequent injuries, and rested her case. No motion for nonsuit nor other objection to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's showing was made by the defendant, but it proceeded to introduce evidence tending to show an entire absence of negligence on its part and to support its claim that the injuries to the said plaintiff were the result of an unavoidable accident. Upon producing such evidence the defendant rested its case. Whereupon the plaintiff offered proof to rebut the evidence which the defendant had presented; and, the cause having been submitted, the court proceeded to instruct the jury. In so doing it gave certain instructions, one of which was the following:

"Plaintiff has established a prima facie case against defendant if she shows that she was injured by the overturning of the car while being carried as a passenger by defendant without fault on her part; in such case there is a presumption that the accident was caused by the negligence of defendant, and the duty is then upon the defendant to show that the accident happened from inevitable accident or from some cause beyond the power of human care or foresight to prevent."

The court also gave certain other instructions which substantially restated the rule expressed in the foregoing instruction. The appellant now urges that the giving of these instructions was error, basing its insistence in that regard upon the proposition that, the plaintiff having alleged specific negligence on the defendant's part, the rule of res ipsa loquitur as above stated does not apply, and hence that the plaintiffs were bound in the first instance to prove that the accident was caused by specific acts of negligence alleged in their complaint.

[1] There are several answers to this contention. In the first place, the averment of the plaintiffs' complaint above quoted is, we think, fairly open to the construction that both general negligence on the part of the defendant in the management and operation of its car, and also specific acts of negligence on its part in maintaining a defective track and in rounding the curve at a dangerous rate of speed, are mingled in the same averment. In this respect the case strongly resembles the case of Roberts v. Sierra Ry. Co., 14 Cal. App. 180, 111 Pac. 519, 527, in which the precise question presented here arose, in dealing with which the court used the following words:

"Plaintiff, however, not only alleged specific acts of negligence, but he also alleged general negligence. It is true that he did not set up his alleged specific and general negligence in separate counts, as was done in Green v. Pacific Lumber Co., 130 Cal. 435, 62 Pac. 747, but there was no demurrer addressed to this feature of the complaint; the averments of the complaint were specifically denied, the evidence went in without objection touching the issues as thus presented, and defendant makes no pretense of being surprised. Inasmuch as there was an issue of general negligence presented, a presumption of negligence arose upon proof made of plaintiff's injury while a passenger on defendant's cars. And the case was tried upon the theory that both specific and general negligence were alleged."

[2] The closing passage of the above quotation furnishes an added reason why the point urged by the appellant cannot be held to be well taken. This case, like the Roberts Case, was tried apparently upon the theory that the allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint were such that upon proof of the accident and of the resulting injury a presumption of negligence upon the part of the defendant arose; for when upon proof of the occurrence of the accident and of the resultant injuries the plaintiffs rested their case no motion for nonsuit or other objection to the sufficiency of the plaintiffs' showing in the first instance was made, but the defendant at once assumed the burden of proving the absence of any negligence on its part, and, having tendered such proofs as it possessed upon this subject proffered no objection to the plaintiffs' counter-showing upon the ground that it should have been made in the first instance. This court, in the case of Roberts v. Sierra Ry. Co., supra, dealing with that precise condition, and quoting from 6 Thompson on Negligence, § 7473, said:

"Where parties, without adhering closely to the written pleadings, proceed without objection and make a particular case by the evidence, and the court allows that case without objection to go to the jury, it is a violation of all correct rules of law then to assail the case thus made for the first time by the motion for a new trial on the assignment of error in the appellate court on the ground of failure of proof."

[3] The appellant further contends that the trial court, in giving one of its instructions, wherein the foregoing rule with regard to the burden of proof is stated in a somewhat different form, erred in instructing the jury that the defendant must show:

"That the overturning of the car was the result of inevitable casualty which human foresight and care could not prevent, for the law holds it responsible for the slightest negligence, and will not hold it blameless except upon the most satisfactory proofs."

The instruction from which the foregoing excerpt is taken was adopted by the trial court from the case of Bonneau v. North Shore R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 406, 93 Pac. 106, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68, in which the precise instruction was approved by the Supreme Court. Aside from these considerations, however, we find from an examination of the record that the trial court not only gave the foregoing instructions, but it then proceeded to give some 30 or more instructions covering every phase of this immediate subject, a large number of which instructions were prepared by the defendant and given at its request. In the light of these very full and very fair instructions, it is impossible to perceive how the jury could have been misled to the defendant's injury in its deliberation upon the case. The appellant's objection that the trial court refused to give certain of its instructions is sufficiently answered by the liberality with which the court gave almost every one of the instructions requested and which fairly covered every phase of its defense.

We are further satisfied from a careful reading of the voluminous record herein that the evidence was amply sufficient to justify the verdict, not only as to the defendant's negligence, but as to the nature and extent of the injuries suffered by the said plaintiff.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

On Motion for Rehearing in Supreme Court in Bank. (S. F. 8499.)

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing is denied. Such denial, however, is not to be taken as a complete approval of the instruction that the defendant must show "that the overturning of the car was the result of inevitable casualty, which human foresight and care could not prevent, for the law holds it responsible for the slightest negligence, and will not hold it blameless, except upon the most satisfactory proofs."

[4] The true rule is that, where the accident is of such a character that it speaks for itself, as it did in this case, and raises a presumption of negligence, the defendant will not be held blameless, except upon a showing either (1) of a satisfactory explanation of the accident; that is, an affirmative showing of a definite cause for the accident in which cause no element of negligence on the part of the defendant inheres; or (2) of such care in all possible respects as necessarily to lead to the conclusion that the accident could not have happened from want of care, but must have been due to some unpreventable cause, although the exact cause is unknown.

[5] In the latter case, inasmuch as the process of reasoning is one of exclusion, the care shown must be satisfactory, in the sense that it covers all causes which due care on the part of the defendant might have prevented. In the case of an accident to a passenger in the course of transportation by a railway company, the explanation or care shown, as the case may be, must be most satisfactory, in the sense that the carrier is held to a very high degree of care.

[6] But the proof which is required of such explanation or care is a different matter from the explanation or care itself. The explanation or the care shown, if true, may be perfectly satisfactory. The proof of its truth may or may not be satisfactory. On this point the rule is the same as in the case of any other presumption which a defendant must meet; that is, he is not obliged to overcome the presumption by a preponderance of evidence, but it is sufficient for him to give such proof of the truth of his explanation, or of his contention that he exercised due care in all particulars, as to offset the presumption in the minds of the jury, and produce a balance in their minds on the question of its truth. Throughout the plaintiff must prove his case by a preponderance of evidence. See Haun v. Tally, 181 Pac. 81.

The instruction in question was taken verbatim from Bonneau v. North Pacific R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 406, 93 Pac. 106, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68, where it was approved. An examination of that decision, however, shows that the criticism which the appellant there made of that particular instruction was not directed to the point that it required most satisfactory proof, as distinguished from a satisfactory explanation, or a showing of satisfactory care. The rule in regard to proof is discussed with reference to another instruction, and is stated to be as above.

In the present case the instruction, while open to criticism in the particular indicated, could not have misled the jury, when considered in connection with the other instructions given as to the effect of a presumption and the requirement that the plaintiff prove his case by a preponderance of evidence.

MARR v. CITY OF GLENDALE et al.
(Civ. 2560.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES — 201 — PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY — DUTY OF MUNICIPALITY TO FURNISH WATER.

A municipality, engaging in the business of supplying its inhabitants with water, cannot be compelled to extend its system to make available its supply of water to a remote and isolated inhabitant, where the cost of such extension would be great, particularly where such inhabitant already has available, from a private corporation, water in sufficient quantity and of reasonably good quality.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Winifred F. Marr against the City of Glendale and others. Judgment for defendants and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Winifred F. Marr, in pro. per.

Evans, Abbott & Pearce and W. E. Evans, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment denying to the plaintiff a writ of mandate. Plaintiff brought this action for the purpose of compelling the city of Glendale and its officers to furnish her water for domestic and other uses. Her complaint contained three causes of action, the first and third of which only were relied upon at the trial. Under the first alleged cause of action the right claimed was that of a property owner who, having been regularly served with water by the vendor thereof, is arbitrarily cut off from the supply. The right claimed under the third alleged cause of action was different, and depended mainly upon the question as to whether an inhabitant of a city, which city is engaged in furnishing water for the use of such inhabitants, can in every case compel the municipality to connect the property of such inhabitant with its supply pipes. In the first alleged cause of action plaintiff set forth that a number of years prior to the date of the commencement of the action her property had been connected to a 4-inch water main owned by the Glendale Consolidated Water Company, which main was in turn supplied from a certain stream flowing in Verdugo canyon; that this pipe was disconnected from the stream several years prior to the commencement of the action, and that subsequent to its being so disconnected the city of Glendale acquired all the water rights and the distributing system of said Consolidated Water Company; and that subsequent thereto plaintiff's property had been without water, except such as was brought upon it by use of a pail. In the third cause of action facts were set forth showing that the city of Glendale had engaged in the business of supplying water to its inhabitants and had acquired a water system for that purpose.

The answer denied that plaintiff's property was not provided with a water service, although it was admitted that this service was not being given by the city of Glendale. The preliminary facts, as stated by the complaint, were admitted, and an affirmative defense was made, which was available in answer to both the first and third causes of action. In this defense it was alleged as follows:

"The defendants allege that the property mentioned in plaintiff's petition is located in the Verdugo canyon more than one mile north and east of any of the distributing lines used in connection with the water system of the city of Glendale; that said property is located at an elevation of more than 200 feet above any reservoir owned by said city from which water could be furnished to her from its present distribution system; that in order to furnish the plaintiff with water for domestic use the city of Glendale would be compelled to construct a reservoir somewhere in the vicinity of plaintiff's property at such an elevation as is necessary to furnish proper pressure, and would then have to lay and conduct pipes from such reservoir to plaintiff's said property, all of which would amount to a large expenditure on the part of the defendant city of Glendale, such as would not be justified from any income that could be derived from such construction; that at this time and for many years prior thereto the Forest Grove Land & Water Company and its predecessors in interest, who are the original owners and subdividers of the tract of land on which plaintiff is located, owns, operates, and conducts a distributing system in said tract, and that plaintiff's said property is bounded on the east and south by the distributing line laid in the street abutting plaintiff's said property, from which line the plaintiff could receive adequate water service; that said Forest Grove Land & Water Company's system was constructed for the express purpose of furnishing this plaintiff and other residents of this vicinity with water for domestic uses; and defendants are informed, and upon said information and belief allege, that the reason why plaintiff is not now receiving water from said Forest Grove Land & Water Company is that she has been disconnected by said company by reason of nonpayment of her water bills. Defendants allege, furthermore, that they could not furnish the plaintiff water service on her said property without paralleling the lines of said private water company, and in event this defendant should be required to so parallel the lines of said water company, it would be necessary for this defendant city of Glendale to charge much more for such service than she would be required to pay to said private water company for similar service; that the defendant city of Glendale has never furnished any water to any residents of the city of Glendale located in said Verdugo canyon for the reasons hereinabove set forth."

The court found the facts in accordance with this special defense, which showed that appellant's property had available to it adequate water supply and service pipes, and showed, contrary to plaintiff's allegations, that when the 4-inch pipe had been disconnected from the stream, it was supplied with water from another source, and that that supply had subsequent thereto been continuous and adequate, and that the pipes carrying the same immediately abutted plaintiff's property. It showed that for the city to be compelled to extend its system to the property of appellant would cause the municipality great expense. It further showed that plaintiff could receive all the water she needed by merely complying with the rules and regulations of the company owning the supply pipe abutting her property, which rules and regulations we must assume were reasonable.

Plaintiff makes no contention that she had any right to the use of the waters of the particular stream from which the 4-inch pipe passing her property originally received its supply; in other words, she had no right in any part of the water at any time. With that admission, and with the facts as pleaded in the answer and found by the court before us, we can see little reason to give any extended consideration to the claim made under the first alleged cause of action. Appellant, having no interest in the water, would have no right at all to complain because the company furnishing her might have sold all or any part of the water from which it supplied her at any particular time, so long as it kept in its pipes other water of fair quality and reasonable in quantity and pressure; and this is exactly what the company did, under the facts as they were alleged and determined to be. Without any right of use in the water itself, even though the company had abandoned its business of supplying property owners with water and thus left its supply pipes empty, plaintiff could not have complained.

"We do not mean to say that a corporation engaged in the distribution of water to public uses may not abandon its property and quit the business, without being subject to mandatory proceedings to compel it to continue to carry it on. It may find it impossible to go on. Its supply may become exhausted, or be insufficient for paramount needs; the rates fixed by law may be too small to enable it to operate at a profit, or without substantial loss; or it may conclude, without reason which the law would consider sufficient, that it will not continue. In case of a natural person, it might become physically impossible. We do not intend to declare that in any such case mandatory process would be issued to compel the personal performance of the duty." Fellows v. City of Los Angeles, 151 Cal. 52, 90 Pac. 137.

This case does not reach that far in its facts; plaintiff has never been deprived of the right to take water from the pipes abutting her property, and her supply from that source would be adequate and sufficient.

Under the third alleged cause of action, we think, also, the facts as found by the court are such as to conclusively bar the plaintiff from any right to the relief herein sought. From the fact that the municipality may engage in the business of supplying its inhabitants with water, it does not follow that every property owner or taxpayer, however remote his land may be situated from the distributing system, can by mandate compel such extension of the system as will make available to him that supply. It would be most unreasonable to hold that a municipality must establish an expensive system of distributing lines to reach isolated inhabitants or to supply one or two persons living in places remote from well-settled districts; and more particularly is this true where the person asking for such service already has at his door water in sufficient quantity and of reasonably good quality. In our opinion, the appellant failed to show facts which would justify the court in extending to her the relief demanded in her complaint.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

40 Cal. App. 676

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 16, 1919.)

CRIMINAL LAW §1130(4) — APPEAL — ABSENCE OF BRIEF FOR ACCUSED.

Where on appeal no appearance by brief or otherwise has been made for accused, it is not the duty of the appellate court to scrutinizingly examine the record to search for possible errors which might be found, upon mature reflection, to have been detrimental to accused's rights; but a general or cursory examination of the record suffices.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Fortunato Medaini was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals from the judgment and order denying new trial. Judgment and order affirmed.

E. S. Bell, of Napa, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. Early of the evening of July 7, 1918, at St. Helena, Napa county, the defendant shot and killed his wife, Mary Medaini. The homicide appears to have been the result of jealousy or a suspicion on the part of the defendant that the deceased had been unduly intimate with an employé of the defendant. The defendant was arrested and in due time charged with and tried in the superior court of Napa county for the crime of murder. He interposed at the trial the defense of insanity. The jury found him guilty of murder of the second degree, and he was thereupon sentenced by the court to imprisonment in the state prison at Folsom. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The transcript on appeal was filed in this court on the 31st day of January, 1919. The case was placed on the calendar of the late (April, 1919) term of this court for hearing, and the attorney for the defendant and the Attorney General regularly and duly notified of the day upon which it would be called for argument. No brief has ever been filed on behalf of the defendant in support of the appeals, nor was there any appearance by or for him when the cause was, in its regular order, called for hearing and argument. There was, therefore, no other course open to the Attorney General but to submit the case upon the record, or, perhaps, to move for a dismissal of the appeals. That officer chose the former course.

While it is perhaps the duty of a reviewing court, where a criminal case, in which no appearance by brief or otherwise has been made for the accused, has been submitted upon the record, to give the record such an examination as will enable such court to determine whether obvious errors, likewise prejudicial to the accused, have been made, still, in such cases so submitted, the law does not cast upon the appellate courts the duty of scrutinizingly examining the record for the purpose of searching for possible errors which might be found, upon mature reflection, to have been detrimental to the rights of the accused. If the record, upon its face, shows that error prejudicial to the accused has been committed—if, for instance, it plainly appears that the information states no public offense—then, no less in a case where no brief has been filed or oral argument made on behalf of the defendant than in a case wherein briefs have been filed and oral arguments presented, should a reviewing court hesitate to order a reversal. But, as stated, we do not regard it necessary, where a criminal case is submitted under such circumstances as this case has been submitted, that a reviewing court should enter into a minute examination of the facts. A general, or cursory, examination of the record is all that is required. This we have given this record. Indeed, in view of the fact that the defendant was tried for and convicted of the crime of murdering his own wife and of the further fact that he set up insanity as a legal excuse for his act, we have gone further and examined with painstaking care both the evidence and the charge of the court. The defense, as the plea of insanity implies, admitted at the trial that Medaini shot and killed his wife, and the evidence clearly discloses that, unless the accused was at the time he fired the fatal shot bereft of all sense and reason, or, in other words, was insane, the killing amounted to a deliberate, legally unprovoked, and cruel murder. As to the instructions, it is to be remarked that in its charge the court, with singular clearness, stated to the jury every principle or rule of law applicable and pertinent to the case as it was made by the information and the proofs. Nor, in our examination of the record, have we encountered any rulings touching the question of the legal propriety of any of the evidence which, even where strictly not correct, could have resulted in injury to the defendant. In a word, the cause appears to have been in all particulars well and fairly tried, and the defendant therefore accorded a fair and impartial trial.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

HOWELL et al. v. PEDERSEN et al.
(Civ. 2780.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 2, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐956(2)—REVIEW—DISCRETION — SETTLING BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

The court on appeal will not review the trial court's discretion in refusing relief from failure to present a bill of exceptions in time, except in a case of clear abuse of such discretion.

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF ⇐40(4)—COMPLIANCE WITH REQUIREMENTS—TIME OF FILING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, authorizing the trial court to extend the time for the preparation of bill of exceptions, such extension must be obtained within the 10 days allowed by law for the preparation and service of the bill.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐117—EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF ⇐53(3)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE —SETTLEMENT OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

An order refusing to settle a bill of exceptions is not appealable, the only remedy being by mandamus.

4. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF ⇐43(1)—TIME OF FILING—DEFAULT—MOTION TO RELIEVE DEFAULT—ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Denial of plaintiffs' motion for relief from their default in failing to prepare and serve their proposed bill of exceptions within the time allowed by law was not an abuse of the court's discretion; no showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect having been made.

5. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF ⇐42—TIME OF FILING—OBJECTIONS TO DELAY—WAIVER—INTENT.

No intention of defendants to waive their objections to plaintiffs' failure to prepare and serve their bill of exceptions within the time allowed was shown, where upon admission of service of the bill and the stipulation setting the matter down for hearing defendants added words expressly preserving objections on account of the proposed bill not being prepared and served on time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Suit by Elizabeth F. Howell and others against J. C. Pedersen and another. From an order refusing to settle plaintiffs' bill of exceptions and an order denying plaintiffs' motion to be relieved from their default, plaintiffs appeal. Appeal from order refusing to settle the bill of exceptions dismissed, and order denying motion for relief affirmed.

Fred S. Howell, of Petaluma, for appellants.

Kellogg & Kyle, of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. [1] This is an appeal from an order of the trial court refusing to settle and allow plaintiffs' bill of exceptions on appeal from the main judgment in the case, and denying plaintiffs' motion for relief from their default in failing to prepare and serve their proposed bill of exceptions within the time allowed by law therefor. The discretionary power of a trial court in proceedings of this character is not to be interfered with, except upon a clear abuse of discretion. The trial court has decided that the plaintiffs did not make a showing of excusable neglect, and it would seem that such a conclusion was warranted. The only excuse offered by plaintiffs for their failure to prepare and serve this bill of exceptions in time was that the transcript could not be secured from the reporter in time. But upon plaintiffs' own showing, the facts appear to be that on January 31, 1918, judgment was entered in the case and notice of entry of judgment was served upon plaintiffs on February 18, 1918.

[2, 3] Appellants did not apply to the court for an extension of time within the 10 days allowed by law for the preparation and service of the bill. It has been repeatedly held that an extension of time, permitted under section 1054, Code of Civil Procedure, must be obtained within the period during which the original right is still alive. Clarke v. Crane, 57 Cal. 629; Oppenheimer v. Radke & Co., 165 Cal. 220, 131 Pac. 365; Union Collection Co. v. Oliver, 162 Cal. 755, 124 Pac. 435; Curtis v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 390, 11 Pac. 652. The time within which the court might extend plaintiffs' time had expired at the date when the court made the order upon the ex parte application of the plaintiffs extending their time for 30 days, and such order could give the plaintiffs no rights in place of those which had been lost by their delay. Plaintiffs therefore were in default, and the court was justified in refusing to settle their bill of exceptions. The order refusing to settle said bill is not appealable, and the remedy is by mandamus. Potter v. Pigg, 35 Cal. App. 697, 170 Pac. 1066; Brode v. Goslin, 158 Cal. 609, 112 Pac. 280.

[4] We have discussed the question upon its merits, because it is linked with the question properly presented for our consideration upon this appeal, which is whether or not there has been an abuse of discretion by the trial court in refusing to grant plaintiffs' motion to be relieved from their default. We think this motion was properly denied, as the plaintiffs made no showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. As heretofore stated, the notice of entry of judgment was served upon February 18, 1918. Plaintiffs then had 10 days within which to prepare their bill of exceptions, or within which to ask for an extension of time for that purpose. Had they been diligent in guarding their rights, they might have had 40 days from February 18th, which would have allowed them until March 30th. It appears, also, that plaintiffs were not diligent in ordering the transcript from the reporter. It was not ordered until March 8th—18 days after notice of entry of judgment. But irrespective of this fact, and despite this delay in ordering the transcript, plaintiffs, if they had secured a proper extension of time, would yet have had the transcript in their hands 10 days before their time expired for serving their proposed bill of exceptions, for it appears by their own showing that the transcript was delivered to them 12 days after it was ordered, or on March 20th. Under such circumstances, this court cannot say that there was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court. It is only in exceptional cases that orders of this kind will be reversed. An appellate court is very loth to substitute its own opinion and thereby divest the trial court of the discretionary power reposed in it. Smith v. Riverside, etc., Co., 19 Cal. App. 165, 124 Pac. 870; Utah-Nevada Co. v. De Lamar, 9 Cal. App. 759, 100 Pac. 884.

[5] Appellants next contend that the defendants waived their objections to the delay of the plaintiffs in serving their proposed bill of exceptions by requesting and receiving from plaintiffs additional time within which to propose amendments to such bill. It is asserted by appellants that the stipulation requested by defendants extending such time reserved no objection to the time within which the proposed bill of exceptions was served, and that therefore that objection was waived. An examination of the stipulation relied upon discloses that the stipulation provided that the defendants and respondents should have until the 30th day of April, 1918, within which to propose any amendments or make any objections to the proposed bill of exceptions. If this language is not sufficiently broad to reserve the right now asserted by defendants and respondents, it is nevertheless true that an intention to waive is an essential element to effect a waiver. Los Angeles First National Bank v. Maxwell, 123 Cal. 360, 368, 55 Pac. 980, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64. The defendants, clearly, never intended to waive their objections, and plaintiffs had no reason to believe that they did, for upon the admission of service of the bill the defendants added the words:

"But objections on account of not being prepared and served on time are preserved for presentation when the bill of exceptions is presented for settlement."

And the stipulation setting the matter down for hearing, which is signed by the attorneys for both parties, concludes with the words:

"This stipulation is made with the understanding that said defendant does not waive, and does hereby expressly reserve, any and all objections that he may have on account of plaintiffs' proposed bill of exceptions in the above-entitled action not having been prepared and served within the time allowed by law."

Under these facts, it is manifest that there was never any intention to waive this objection, and such objection was not waived either in terms or by implication.

The appeal from the order refusing to settle the bill of exceptions is dismissed, and the order denying plaintiffs' motion to be relieved from their default is affirmed.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨265(5)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

A presumption of negligence on the part of the master does not arise where a servant is injured by an explosion while babbitting the bearings of a machine.

3. EVIDENCE ⇨553(4) — EXPERT TESTIMONY.

In a servant's action for personal injuries, offered expert evidence to explain how the accident might have happened was rightfully rejected, where there was no evidence of facts upon which the questions could be predicated.

4. EVIDENCE ⇨553(3, 4) — HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS—OPINION OF EXPERT—NECESSITY OF FACT BASIS.

While hypothetical questions on which the opinion of an expert is to be based may include any stated facts which the evidence tends to prove, they must nevertheless be based on facts which are in evidence, and not upon mere surmise.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Snow against Joseph R. Harris, for personal injuries. From a judgment of nonsuit, the plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for appellant.

Myrick & Deering and James Walter Scott, all of San Francisco, and Wallace Rutherford, of Napa, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for personal injuries.

The case has already been before the Supreme Court, where it was held that the plaintiff was a casual employé, and therefore not entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 748, 158 Pac. 1031. Plaintiff thus being relegated to an action for damages, he seeks judgment against defendant, by whom he was employed at the time of the injury complained of, alleging that defendant was negligent in two particulars: First, in that he supplied an improper helper, whose negligence contributed to the injury; second, that he failed to supply proper tools with which to do the work. To avoid the common-law defenses on the part of the defendant of assumption of risk and act of fellow servant, plaintiff contends that the provisions of section 1 of the Roseberry Act (Stats. 1911, p. 796), abolishing these defenses and modifying the defense of contributory negligence, were not repealed by the Boynton Act (Stats. 1913, p. 279), and that they govern this action.

[1] Whether this be true or not, a discussion of the question becomes unnecessary, for, in the absence of proof of negligence, defendant cannot be held liable for the injuries complained of, and we are of the opinion that the record fails to show any negligence whatever on the part of the defendant. The trial court in granting a nonsuit so declared, and from a careful reading of the record we are of like opinion.

From the evidence, which is without conflict, it appears that the defendant was a farmer, and among other machinery which he used in cultivating his land was a caterpillar tractor. Plaintiff was employed by defendant to repair this machine, and while in the act of babbitting one of its bearings an explosion occurred, and plaintiff lost the sight of both his eyes. Plaintiff was an experienced machinist, and had agreed to do the work at a stipulated price per day, using his own tools together with those owned by defendant. On the day of the accident plaintiff had removed the boxing of the rear axle of the machine, which was separated into two halves. After babbitting the lower half he cleaned the upper part with tools and heat, placed the axle in position, and then made a mold of cardboard and clay to hold the molten metal, and caused the box to be heated by a flare torch operated by his helper. He then with the assistance of this helper poured the babbitt metal into a pour hole, and returned the pans which had contained the alloy to the side of the forge close by. After waiting for a time sufficient in his opinion to allow the metal to solidify he removed a portion of the dam he had constructed to hold the metal, and looked into the pour hole to inspect the result of his work, when of a sudden an explosion occurred, which threw the molten metal upward, causing the injury complained of. At the time of the accident, plaintiff was alone at the bearing, defendant not having been present at any time during the day; in fact, defendant had nothing to do with the work either in assisting or in the giving of instructions as to the manner in which it should be done, and nowhere in the evidence is there anything which shows that the tools used by the plaintiff contributed in any degree to the accident. Plaintiff had complete charge of the work, was experienced in babbitting bearings, and he testified that he did not know of anything that the helper did or failed to do that in any way contributed to his injury. The evidence further discloses the fact that babbit metal explodes when brought in contact with moisture, and it is conceded that moisture in some form, either direct or indirect, was the cause of the accident. There is, however, no evidence showing how the moisture was produced. Plaintiff's theory of the accident is that the helper, while holding the blow torch on the bearing for the purpose of heating it, negligently knocked a portion of the damp clay forming the dam into the hole. There is no evidence, however, to support this contention. On the other hand, defendant suggests causes for the presence of the moisture, among which is that the plaintiff himself might have knocked the clay into the hole, or that he might have left moist clay in the box before the pouring of the molten metal commenced. Varied as are these different theories of the parties, there is no evidence as to the real cause of the presence of moisture which produced the explosion, nor is there any evidence that the accident occurred through any negligent conduct of the defendant.

[2, 3] No presumption of negligence exists in favor of plaintiff by reason of the mere happening of the accident; and he having produced no proof of any negligence on the part of defendant, and the burden being upon him so to do, it was the duty of the trial court to grant the motion complained of.

Appellant assigns as error justifying a reversal certain rulings of the trial court rejecting expert evidence to explain how the accident might have happened. The offered evidence was rightfully rejected, for the reason that there was no evidence upon which the questions could be predicated.

Where, as here, the evidence leaves the cause of the accident uncertain, and shows that any one of several causes may have produced it, it is not for the jury to guess, when there is no satisfactory foundation in the testimony for a verdict; and sympathy for the unfortunate victim of the accident does not justify a departure from the rule that the burden rests upon the plaintiff to establish negligence. It is not sufficient for an employé to show that the employer may have been negligent. The evidence must show the fact that he was. If he is unable to do this he fails in his action. Patton v. Tex. Ry. Co., 179 U. S. 658, 21 Sup. Ct. 275, 45 L. Ed. 361.

[4] While hypothetical questions on which the opinion of an expert is to be based may include any state of facts which the evidence tends to prove, they must, nevertheless, be based only on facts which are in evidence. Graves v. Union Oil Co., 173 Pac. 618. Here the hypothetical questions, the rejection of which is complained of, were based upon mere surmise, and not upon inferences from established facts. Inferences must be reasonable, and not possible conjectures, surmise, or speculation.

Other questions do not require consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1919.
 Rehearing Denied June 30, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨781(6)—DISMISSAL
 OF APPEAL—MOOT QUESTIONS.

Where, after judgment for plaintiff in a personal injury action, plaintiff assigned an undivided one-half interest therein to his attorney; and thereafter compromised with defendant without the attorney's consent, whereupon the judgment was satisfied of record, which satisfaction was subsequently vacated at the attorney's request, an appeal by defendant will not be dismissed on the ground that the controversy had been compromised and the questions were moot, since at least as to one-half of the judgment the case was not moot.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨267(1) — INJURIES TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

In a railroad employe's action for injuries in a collision, testimony concerning the stopping of the watch of one of the passengers on the wrecked train to show the time of the collision was relevant; its weight being for the jury.

3. WITNESSES ⇨290 — REDIRECT EXAMINATION—REPETITION.

In a railway conductor's action for personal injuries sustained in a wreck of his train, an objection to a question on redirect examination of defendant's expert witness, whether he would consider it safe to have in his employ an elevator man or a locomotive engineer who had had syphilis for a long period of time, was properly sustained, where the witness had already gone into the general subject of such disease exhaustively.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1046(5)—REVIEW—CURE OF ERROR.

In a railway conductor's action for injuries sustained in a wreck, wherein it was claimed that the physical condition of plaintiff precluded him from properly fulfilling his duties, a remark by the court that he would rather take a wife's testimony as to the peculiar conditions of her husband than that of all the physicians, if prejudicial, was cured by subsequent admonitory instructions.

5. DAMAGES ⇨216(7) — INJURIES TO SERVANT — INSTRUCTIONS — FUTURE PAIN AND SUFFERING.

In a railway conductor's action for injuries in a collision, an instruction that the jury might allow compensation for such disability and suffering as the evidence shows is "reasonably probable" will result in the future was erroneous, as being in contravention of Civ. Code, § 3283, allowing compensation for damages "certain to result in the future."

6. EVIDENCE ⇨472(1) — OPINION — QUESTION FOR COURT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—RULES—INTERPRETATION.

In an action by a conductor for injuries in a collision, opinion evidence as to the interpretation and application of the company's printed operating rules, objected to as invading province of court and jury, was erroneous; for, if the rules required elucidation, it was the duty of the court to interpret them in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2102.

7. EVIDENCE ⇨501(1)—INJURY TO SERVANT—RULES—BASIS OF OPINION.

In an action by the conductor of an electric interurban train for personal injuries sustained in a collision, opinion of a witness as to the meaning of defendant's rules, based upon standard rules governing the operation of trains, which were different from those of defendant, was erroneous.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1053(3)—REVIEW—CURE OF ERROR.

In an action by a conductor of an electric interurban train for injuries sustained in a collision, error in admitting expert evidence as to meaning and application of the operating rules held not cured by an instruction that if plaintiff failed to call up the train dispatcher before leaving the terminal, and such failure was the proximate cause of the accident, he could not recover.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Horace G. Richman against the San Francisco, Napa & Calistoga Railway. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Myrick & Deering, of San Francisco (James Walter Scott, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Theodore A. Bell, of San Francisco, and E. S. Bell, of Napa, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff in a railroad wreck, when two trains of the defendant company collided between Collins and Hatch, stations situated on the line of its railroad, in Napa county. The jury found a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $15,000. The defendant has appealed from the judgment entered thereon, and from an order denying a new trial.

[1] Before considering the points relied upon for a reversal of the judgment and order denying a new trial, we will dispose of the motion to dismiss the appeal. The motion was made on the ground that, the controversy having been compromised, the questions presented were moot. After judgment the plaintiff assigned an undivided one-half interest therein to his attorney, E. S. Bell. It appeared that before the opening brief of the appellant was filed an agreement to compromise the controversy was entered into between the parties; James Irvine, the president of the company, representing the defendant, without the participation of its counsel, and the plaintiff acting for himself, without the consent of his counsel, and satisfaction of judgment was accordingly entered in the office of the county clerk of Napa county. Mr. Bell thereupon brought an action to vacate and set aside the satisfaction of judgment, so far as it related to his undivided one-half interest. Plaintiff and the defendant company were both made parties to the suit, and upon the trial it was decreed that Bell was the owner of the interest claimed, the satisfaction of judgment was annulled and set aside, and the judgment was thereupon restored, and entered by the clerk in favor of Bell against defendant, in the sum of $7,658.25. This action, resulting in favor of Bell, was based upon the fact that notice of the assignment had been given to representatives of the defendant company prior to the settlement with plaintiff. The trial court found that the defendant company had such notice, and that it wrongfully conspired with the plaintiff to cheat and defraud Bell of his interest in the judgment. No appeal was taken from this judgment, and it has become final. It is apparent from the foregoing that there is no compromise as to half of the judgment at least, and the case is not moot. The motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground of a compromise, therefore, cannot be sustained.

The defendant is a common carrier of passengers and freight, and operates a single line electric railway between the towns of Vallejo and Calistoga. For the purpose of controlling the movement of its trains the company employs train dispatchers at its depot at Napa City, and maintains a telephone line connecting with all its main stations, including Vallejo and Collins. On the morning of June 19, 1913, plaintiff was operating one of defendant's trains in the capacity of conductor. His train was known as No. 6, and was due to leave Vallejo at about 9 o'clock, and to arrive at Collins some 16 minutes later. At this station, according to schedule, train No. 6 was to meet train No. 5, south-bound. This latter train reached Collins on schedule time, but No. 6 was late. The conductor of No. 5 called up the train dispatcher from Collins and asked for orders. He was directed to take orders, and after the dispatcher called up the agent at Vallejo, and ascertained that No. 6 was still there, received orders to meet No. 6 at Hatch. The latter train started for Collins, and at a point south thereof the two trains met in a head-on collision, were telescoped, 13 persons were killed, and many others were injured, among whom was the plaintiff. The cause of action was based upon the claim that the company was responsible for the collision because the dispatcher ordered train No. 5 out of Collins without first giving notice to train No. 6.

The company contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, because he took train No. 6 out of Vallejo without first calling up the dispatcher. The other facts pertinent to this appeal will appear in the discussion of the points relied upon for reversal. There are many assignments of error, but for the purposes of this opinion it will not be necessary to mention all of them.

[2] 1. The admission of testimony concerning the stopping of the watch of Tracy Fay, one of the passengers on the wrecked train, for the purpose of showing the time of the collision, is assigned as error. This testimony was to the effect that the witness discovered that, when he returned to the scene of the accident at noon, his watch had stopped at 9:30 a. m. We think criticism might more properly be addressed to the weight, rather than to the admissibility, of the testimony. The testimony was relevant for the purpose, and it was for the jury to determine the weight to be given to it. Moreover, we do not perceive that the exact time of the collision had any particular materiality.

[3] 2. Appellant assigns error to the refusal by the court to allow certain testimony concerning the effect of syphilis. It was claimed by appellant that plaintiff had been a syphilitic since he was 14 years of age. Dr. W. G. Alvarez, called by the defendant, testified at great length as to the effect of this disease on the mind and body. When being examined on redirect the following occurred:

"Q. Would you consider it safe for example to have in your employment an elevator man, or to have in your employ a locomotive engineer, who had syphilis for some long period of time?"

"Mr. Bell: We object to it as incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and not proper redirect.

"The Court: Sustained."

The witness had already gone into the general subject of syphilis and its effects so exhaustively that we cannot say that the ruling was erroneous, even though the inquiry was relevant and the question properly framed.

[4] 3. Error is assigned because of the following remark by the court with regard to the testimony of the wife of the plaintiff concerning his physical condition:

"I think a wife can beat all the physicians on earth telling about the peculiar conditions of her husband. I would rather take the wife's testimony than all the physicians as to the physical condition of her husband."

This remark was addressed to counsel in the presence of the jury touching a question of fact, and of course should not have been made. But we think that any prejudicial effect the remark may have caused at the time was cured by an admonitory instruction, that—

"You will not consider for any purpose in this case * * * any comments of the court made to counsel during the trial upon testimony, or the relative weight of the testimony of any witness, or of any class of witnesses. * * *"

4. An exception was taken to an instruction of the court upon future damages; the portion objected to reading as follows:

"If you further find that the plaintiff's injuries are permanent, and will to some extent disable him in the future, and cause him pain and suffering hereafter, you should also allow him such further sum as, paid now in advance, will reasonably compensate him for such further disability, pain, and suffering as the evidence shows is reasonably probable will result to him in the future, not to exceed in all the amount alleged in plaintiff's complaint."

It is urged in support of the objection that the court committed prejudicial error by the use of the phrase in the instruction, "reasonably probable will result," in contravention of section 3283 of the Civil Code, which reads:

"Damages may be awarded, in a judicial proceeding, for detriment resulting after the commencement thereof, or certain to result in the future."

The question of damages for future detriment was gone into at great length at the trial and the record shows that the defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed on the subject. It was testified by plaintiff and his wife that, because of the injuries to the head and back and the leg of the plaintiff, he would be incapacitated in the future; that his memory was no longer reliable; that at times his mind becomes blank and that he cannot think connectedly; that he is affected by dizziness, is deprived of sufficient sleep, and suffers continually from headache; that he has lost his hearing on the left side; and that the slightest jar to the head causes the blood to rush to it.

The meaning of section 3283, Civil Code, has been considered in a number of cases. In Melone v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 113, 91 Pac. 522, an instruction was given to the jury that an element of damage was "such reasonable sum as the jury shall award him on account of the pain and anxiety that he has suffered or may suffer by reason of his injuries," and further that "in estimating the damages to be awarded you may take into consideration * * * how far his injuries are permanent in their character and results, as well as the physical and mental suffering he may have sustained or may undergo in the future by reason of the injuries," and it was said that—

"These instructions were erroneous in permitting the jury to estimate prospective damages upon what they believed might be the plaintiff's future suffering. * * * It is true that in a succeeding instruction the court declared that plaintiff was entitled to recover not only such damages as he may have suffered, but also 'such damages as by the evidence it is reasonably certain he will suffer in the future.' Herein is a declaration of the true rule, but none the less the instructions upon the matter are conflicting, and it cannot be said by which the jury was guided."

The phrase "reasonably probable" was used in an instruction considered in Hersperger v. Pacific Lumber Co., 4 Cal. App. 460, 88 Pac. 587, 591. The instruction is as follows:

"In this action the plaintiff, if he has shown himself entitled to recover, is entitled to recover for all damages which he has suffered up to the time of the trial and for all damages that it is reasonably probable that he will sustain in the future, not exceeding the sum claimed in the complaint. In estimating the compensatory damages in cases of this character, all the consequences of the injury, future as well as past, are to be taken into consideration, including the bodily and physical pain and suffering which is shown by the proof to be reasonably certain to have naturally resulted from the injury."

The court said:

"The mere reading of the whole instruction is sufficient to show there is no error in it."

That case is cited with approval in Lonnegan v. Stansbury, 164 Cal. 488, 129 Pac. 770; the court holding that the instruction given in both cases was identical. The court further declared:

"The phrase 'reasonably probable' may well be omitted from all such instructions and the statutory requirement of the Civil Code (section 3283) strictly adhered to. * * * But the instruction here in question, while using the unhappy phrase 'reasonably probable,' sums up its declaration of the law with the pronouncement of the correct rule."

In other words, the two phrases "reasonably probable" and "reasonably certain" were both used, and the error in the former was cured by the latter. In the recent case of Wiley v. Young, 174 Pac. 316, it was held upon the authority of Melone v. Sierra Ry. Co., supra, that the expression "reasonably certain to result" is in accord with section 3283. The term "reasonably probable" was not used in Wiley v. Young, supra.

The instruction before us was given by the court of its own motion, and the basis of the award of future damages is not touched upon elsewhere in the charge, nor in any instruction proposed by either of the parties.

[5] The use of the expression "reasonably probable" was clearly erroneous, and might well have led the jury to believe it would be proper to allow damages for suffering or other injury which they believed the plaintiff would probably suffer in the future, instead of for such suffering and injury as they believed were certain to result. So much is left to the discretion of the jury in the determination of the amount of damages in cases of this character, it is of great importance that their attention should be called particularly to the basis upon which, and upon which only, an award must be founded for future detriment.

The respondent concedes that the phrase "reasonably probable" does not literally comply with section 3283, but urges that the defect is cured by another instruction which the court gave:

"I instruct you that, if plaintiff is entitled to recover, the measure of his recovery is what is termed compensatory damages; that is, such sum as will compensate him for the injuries he has sustained."

Stein v. U. R. R. Co., 159 Cal. 368, 113 Pac. 663, is cited in support of this contention. But that case uses language which expresses the view that the word "sustained" does not refer to future injury. It was said:

"True, if the sentence stood alone, it might be open to the objection urged against it; but its vice is nullified by the very next sentence, which limits the jury's award to the injury 'sustained'—not to a future, contingent injury." (Italics ours.)

It will not be necessary to consider this point further, or to appraise the gravity of the error, in view of the conclusion we have reached on the next point.

5. The court, over objection, admitted the opinions and conclusions of certain witnesses in the interpretation of the printed operating rules of the company, the application of the rules, the duty of the train dispatcher under the rules, the priority of one rule over another, as to which of two trains was superior and the relative duties of the plaintiff and the train dispatcher. This, appellant claims, was prejudicially erroneous, and constituted an invasion of the province of both the trial court and of the jury. It is to be kept in mind that train No. 6 was at Vallejo awaiting the arrival of the boat of the Monticello Steamship Company to take on its passengers. The boat, as frequently happened, was late. No. 6 was due under time-table schedule to leave Vallejo at 9:02 a. m. and to arrive at Collins at 9:18 a. m., where it was to meet No. 5. The latter train arrived at the meeting point on schedule time. No. 6 not being in sight, B. E. Patten, the conductor of No. 5, called up the dispatcher at Napa and was told to take an order. The order given was to meet No. 6 at Hatch. Three minutes later No. 5 started for the latter point, and when about 1½ miles south of Collins the trains collided.

In the controversy over the question of liability, rules 268, 230, and 203, among others, were considered and admitted in evidence. Rule 268 reads as follows:

"When trains running in opposite directions are to be moved toward each other by train orders, the train whose rights are to be restricted must first receive the order and the complete before the order is given to the train to be moved against it or toward it."

Rule 230 provides in part:

"All regular trains, * * * when becoming ten minutes late, must report to the dispatcher, and will also report for each successive ten minutes lost."

Rule 203 declared:

"A train must not leave its initial station * * * without order or clearance, and until it is ascertained by asking the dispatcher whether all trains due have arrived or departed, mentioning particularly the last train due, giving the train number."

There was also a bulletin rule, of more recent adoption, to the effect that the conductor of a north-bound train at Vallejo must in every instance call up the dispatcher 5 minutes before the scheduled time for leaving.

It was admitted by plaintiff that he did not call up the dispatcher 5 minutes before the scheduled time to leave, nor when No. 6 was 10 minutes late. But he positively asserted that he telephoned the dispatcher just before leaving Vallejo, which he states was about 9:19 a. m. E. J. O'Leary, the dispatcher on duty when the collision occurred, called as a witness for the company, admitted that he did not give the restricting order to No. 6, but stated that he did call up the agent at Vallejo and learned that No. 6 was still there, loading Wells Fargo express, before he gave the order and complete to No. 5. The appellant has strongly contended that plaintiff took No. 6 out of Vallejo without calling up the dispatcher at all, and that this was the proximate cause of the collision. Plaintiff testified that he telephoned to the dispatcher, "No. 6 at Vallejo ready to leave the wharf," and that the answer came back, "No orders for No. 6," which meant that No. 6 should proceed to Collins to meet No. 5. F. M. Monning, whose wife left on No. 6, testified that the plaintiff entered the telephone booth, remained there about 2 minutes, and then came out and signaled the motorman to start the train. On the other hand, several other employes, who were listening on the telephone line when plaintiff declared he telephoned to O'Leary, flatly contradicted plaintiff on that point. Both sides agreed that the case turned on this question, for in the words of the appellant, "Around this point the trial centered." It was testified on behalf of the company that, owing to plaintiff's syphilitic condition, he might have entered the telephone booth to call up the dispatcher, but forgot to do so.

As an illustration of the objectionable testimony, we quote from the examination of W. J. Juarez, the motorman on No. 5, as to the application of rule 268 to the situation:

"Q. Mr. Juarez, taking the circumstances as they existed while you were at Collins station on that morning, June 19, 1913, there as you say on time, north-bound No. 6 not there, but due, you receiving orders through your conductor, written orders to proceed to some other station for the purpose of meeting No. 6, what was the rule under those circumstances which governed, so far as notification of No. 6 was concerned, of the orders given you?"

To this the witness replied that all he had to do was to carry out his orders.

"Mr. Bell: I have not asked you about that. I have asked you now if you know, and you do, Mr. Juarez, don't you, what the company, under that rule and practice followed, had to do with No. 6 before they gave you the order to proceed? A. Well, I suppose they had to give that train No. 6 orders."

Juarez finally stated:

"I say, with respect to that rule 268, that I never have heard whether it applied to a train at a terminal or not."

Questions of similar import were asked of the witness Patten, who testified that rule 268 applied to a train lying at a terminal and that it was the duty of the dispatcher under rule 268 to transmit the restricting order to train No. 6 before giving the "complete" to No. 5, and that he had no right under the rule to order No. 5 out of Collins until this was done. Patten was allowed to give further testimony to the effect that, in the absence of a restricting order to No. 6, that train had the right of way over the track from Vallejo to Collins as against No. 5. Again, he was permitted to testify as to which was the superior train under the circumstances presented, and further that there was no priority between the rule which required the dispatcher to give the restricting order before letting the other train move against it and the rule which required the conductor of a train at an initial or a terminal point to call up the dispatcher in each case before leaving.

[6] The admission of this testimony was clearly error. If the printed rules required elucidation, it was the duty of the court to interpret them, and not for the witnesses to establish by their opinions and conclusions the meaning of the rules and the duties of plaintiff and the dispatcher thereunder. 26 Cyc. 1472; section 2102, Code Civ. Proc. Many of the objectionable questions and answers went directly to the very question of fact in controversy. For instance, it was testified that the dispatcher had no right to order No. 5 out of Collins until the clearance was given to No. 6, and that in the absence of orders No. 6 had the right to the track from Vallejo to Collins as against No. 5. These and similar propositions of fact involving an interpretation of the printed rules were freely testified to by these witnesses. Nor was the vice of the rulings relieved by the fact that Juarez and Patten on cross-examination weakened the probative force of their direct testimony by the admission, for instance, that they did not know whether rule 268 applied to No. 6.

[7] L. G. Eby, an agent of the Southern Pacific Company, called as an expert witness by the plaintiff, testified, over objection, as to the meaning of the operating rules of the defendant company, which, he admitted, he had merely glanced at and had not studied, as compared with the standard rules governing the operation of trains in parts of the United States, Canada, and Mexico. The objections to the testimony were that he was not qualified as an expert on the subject, because he was not acquainted with the rules in controversy, that the standard rules were irrelevant and immaterial, and that his testimony consisted of opinions and conclusions based upon rules that were not those of the defendant company. This testimony should not have been allowed, even if the standard rules referred to by him could properly be made the basis of interpretation of the printed rules of the defendant company.

[8] It is insisted by the respondent that, as this testimony came from witnesses experienced and versed in railway operation, it was not improperly admitted, for the reason that it did not "involve an interpretation of the abstract language of the rule, but simply went to the application of the rule in practice." With this we cannot agree. Practically every one of the questions contained such a phrase as "rule, custom, and practice." So that an affirmative answer carried the interpretation of the printed rule. The proper mode was for the witness to state as a fact the custom and practice, and, if necessary, for the court to interpret the meaning of the printed rules, and then for the jury to determine what rules governed the situation. But as conducted the inquiry was calculated to take from the jury the solution of the vital questions of fact in the case.

Respondent relies on 17 Cyc. 77, but we find nothing in that citation that supports the rulings complained of. It is contended that, even if these rulings were erroneous, the error was cured, for the reason that the pivotal question of fact in the case was whether plaintiff called up the dispatcher, and, the court having repeatedly instructed the jury that if the testimony of the plaintiff on this point were not true he could not recover, it must be implied from the verdict that the jury reached the conclusion that the plaintiff told the truth. Assuming that this reasoning is sound, yet it cannot be accepted, because the premise is false.

The court did not instruct the jury that if it was found that the plaintiff did not call up the dispatcher he could not recover. If such an instruction had been given, there might be warrant for holding that, as the jury had found in favor of the plaintiff on the question of fact, the erroneous ruling would be immaterial. But the instructions that were given to the jury on this point were to the effect that if the plaintiff failed to call up the dispatcher, and such failure was the proximate cause of the accident, he could not recover. It cannot, therefore, be implied from the verdict that the jury, under the evidence and the instructions, may not have concluded that the plaintiff did not call up the dispatcher, yet that this dereliction of duty was not the proximate cause of the collision, but that, relying on the testimony complained of, the proximate cause was the giving by O'Leary of the order and the complete to No. 5 without restricting No. 6. For this reason, and because of what we shall say on the next point, it cannot be held that the error in the rulings was cured.

We have considered from another angle whether the admission of this testimony was prejudicial, and this involves the question whether the opinions and conclusions of the witnesses were in fact true, for, if so, the error in allowing the interpretation to come from the witnesses, instead of from the court, would not, perhaps, be material. We are convinced, however, that the interpretation by the witnesses was not correct. In our view, rule 268 had no application to a train at an initial or terminal point. It had reference only to trains already started on a trip. Hence we must conclude that, even if the court itself had held that rule 268 did apply, we would be called upon to reverse the judgment. Further, there was other testimony that the rule did apply, but that it was not always followed. William H. Howe, a witness for the plaintiff, and who, for 6 years prior to November, 1913, when he retired, had served as conductor and dispatcher for the defendant company, and at one time was in charge of train No. 6, testified, over objection, that rule 268 did apply, but that in a number of instances, when he was in charge of No. 6, train No. 5 arrived at Vallejo without the restricting order being given by the dispatcher to him as conductor of No. 6. O'Leary testified further that he was instructed by the chief dispatcher, who was also the assistant superintendent, that it was not the practice to give orders to No. 6 when that train was held at Vallejo, and No. 5 was given clearance. He stated further that—

"Under the settled practice of the company during the 6 months I was dispatcher and I was conductor, it was the uniform rule and custom that the conductor at Vallejo should receive his orders whether clearance or limiting —at the time he left the Vallejo wharf north-bound, and not before. It was the practice, for example, if I wanted to move train 5 down south, because of the lateness of train 6 in departing from the terminal, simply to phone my order to Collins for that train to proceed, and to give my order to the north-bound train and its conductor later on, when the north-bound train called up, 'Ready to go.' That was the custom we worked under always. The first train called would get the order."

So here was testimony tending to prove, on the one hand, that rule 268 did apply, but that it was not always followed, and, on the other hand, that rule 268 had no bearing on a train at Vallejo. In fact, O'Leary testified that he did not know about rule 268 until after the collision. With such contrariety of testimony, as to the question of the applicability of rule 268 and the custom and practice, the admission of the opinion and conclusion testimony must have inevitably entered into the solution of the question of proximate cause and prejudicially affected the rights of appellant.

We think this is the rationale of the matter. The railway was operated in connection with a steamship line, and the steamers, on account of the action of the tides, were frequently late. The company, so far as the operation of the trains was concerned, would naturally seek, in order to minimize delay to passengers, especially those making a round trip to San Francisco and other points, to expedite south-bound trains, when the boat was behind time, and so it was made the duty of the dispatcher to make all possible headway with those trains when north-bound trains were late. To accomplish this expedition, with due regard to the safety of the traveling public and the company's employes, rules 230 and 203 were put in force. To further realize this object, the bulletin rule requiring north-bound trains to call up the dispatcher 5 minutes before leaving time, was adopted. Thus under these rules the dispatcher would be left free to forward south-bound trains without being hampered by having to transmit restricting orders to north-bound trains at Vallejo. He could therefore move the south-bound trains from station to station without regard to north-bound trains until they were actually reported as being ready to leave Vallejo. Hence, if the plaintiff failed to call up the dispatcher, this was the proximate of the collision, for we entertain no doubt that the duty to establish communication with the dispatcher rested solely on the plaintiff; but if, on the other hand, he established communication with the dispatcher and received the response, "No orders for No. 6," instead of an order to meet No. 5 at Hatch, the proximate cause of the accident is traced to such erroneous order. We think that upon the entire record, including the evidence, the error in the rulings in question resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Section 4½, art. 6, Const.

HARPER v. SLOAN et al. (Sac. 2327.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Sierra County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Opinion in department, reversed in bank (177 Cal. 174, 169 Pac. 1043), but referred to by Melvin, J., in his dissenting opinion to the opinion of the court in bank.

Frank R. Wehe, of San Francisco, and W. I. Redding, of Downieville, for appellant.

Charles F. Hanlon, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. From the judgment following such order, the plaintiff appeals.

The theory of the amended complaint is that the transactions described therein were such as created a mining partnership between plaintiff and defendants, that appellant held the property of said partnership in trust, and that he was entitled to a lien thereon for certain advances made by him. The complaint avers substantially the following facts:

McGregor and Lewis owned a certain described mining claim in Sierra county. This was and is an unpatented lode mining claim possessed by virtue of a location made in 1895 in accordance with the mining laws of the United States and the local rules then in force in that county. The claim was of such a nature that large sums of money were required for its development. On December 24, 1896, McGregor and Lewis entered into a written agreement with Harper, the plaintiff in this suit, whereby the said Harper was to work and develop the claim and deposit the gross yield therefrom with one Sayles, who was to deliver such deposit to the vendors in case Harper should fail to pay the purchase price of $6,000, one-half payable by November 1, 1899, and the balance on or before May 1, 1900. It was provided that upon full payment of the purchase price McGregor and Lewis would convey their title to Harper. Immediately following the execution of the contract Harper took possession of the claim, and on February 9, 1899, entered into a written agreement with the defendants, Sloan and Dwyer, whereby Harper promised to convey to them a two-thirds interest in his contract with McGregor and Lewis upon these terms: $4,000 on or before March 1, 1899, and $3,000 on or before June 1, 1899, "and if" (to quote directly from the agreement) "in the opinion of the parties of the second part [Sloan and Dwyer] it should be necessary, the further sum of three thousand (3,000) dollars, on or before the 1st day of September, 1899." It was stipulated that all of the money so paid, with the exception of Harper's expenses, should be used to pay for work on the claim under his direction and control. The contract further provided that if McGregor and Lewis should convey to Harper under the terms of their agreement the latter would, "within a reasonable time," make a conveyance to Sloan and Dwyer of a two-thirds interest in the mine, and that "thereafter" Harper should have management and control of the operating of the mine for which he should be paid "an adequate compensation." There was also a clause in this agreement providing as follows:

"If the development and working of the Diadem Quartz Claim should be permanently abandoned by the party of the first part [Harper] and any money paid by the parties of the second part should be unexpended, the party of the first part shall return the same to J. T. Sloan, one of the parties of the second part."

The pleading contains further averments that:

"Upon the making of said contract last set out plaintiff, on behalf of himself and said defendants Sloan and Dwyer, continued in the possession of the said property and actually engaged in working the same and commenced to extract the mineral therefrom, and that said plaintiff and said defendants Sloan and Dwyer then actually engaged in the working and development of said claim and extraction of the mineral therefrom, and ever since have continued in the actual working of said claim, and then became, and ever since have been, mining partners, and that said mining partnership has never been dissolved, except that said defendants Sloan and Dwyer have refused to contribute their proportion of the expenses of the said working of said property other than as hereinafter alleged."

Next follow allegations that defendants paid $7,000 according to the terms of their agreement; that all of this money was expended in actual mining operations; that it became necessary for the working of said property that the further sum of $3,000 should be paid on or before September 1, 1899; that plaintiff asked Sloan and Dwyer to pay such amount, but that they refused to do so. There are statements in the pleading that plaintiff and defendants continued in the possession of the claim, "said plaintiff managing and actually working the same for said partnership as aforesaid, and continued in the said working until he had expended upon the said claim all of the said sum of $7,000, and other sums of money, exceeding more than $2,000 advanced by himself." It is averred that after the expenditure of more than $9,000 the plaintiff Harper had extracted from the mine $8,000, out of which he paid the purchase price, $6,000, to McGregor and Lewis, who, on December 8, 1899, conveyed their interest in the property to Harper "in trust for himself and for said defendants Sloan and Dwyer as provided for in said contract, which said deed was recorded at page 143 et seq. of Book No. 15 of Deeds, Sierra County Records, to which reference is hereby had, and then and thereby said plaintiff and said Sloan and Dwyer became the owners of said mining claim in equal shares; that is to say, one-third each." We may remark, in passing, that this averment is in direct contradiction of the contracts which did not provide for a conveyance in trust by the vendors to Harper, and did not contemplate the ownership by the defendants of an interest in the claim until an actual conveyance should be made to them by Harper.

Plaintiff pleads the following excuses for not making a deed to Sloan and Dwyer of two-thirds interest in the mine: (a) Plaintiff was informed and believed that on July 17, 1899, Sloan conveyed a one-half interest in the mining property to Lord William Beresford. (b) Sloan instructed plaintiff to make no deed to any person of any portion of the mining claim until he (Sloan) should give further instructions. (c) On May 21, 1901, Dwyer conveyed all of his share in the property to Sloan. (d) Prior to July 2, 1901, Lord Beresford died and his widow, as executrix of his last will, reconveyed to Sloan. (e) Plaintiff, although always ready to execute a deed agreeably to the strict terms of his contract, was unable to ascertain to whom he should convey until further instructed by Sloan.

It is further pleaded that after the execution of the trust deed to Harper he and the defendants, as mining partners, continued to work the claim. This work was prosecuted until the end of December, 1900, but yielded no profit. Plaintiff called upon defendants to contribute to his expenses the $3,000 "as provided in the contract," but they refused to make further payments, although Sloan consented to the work and advised Harper to continue it. Acting upon said advice, and with Sloan's approval, plaintiff "continued the said work until said partnership became indebted in the sum of about $2,000, during the said year 1900." To pay this indebtedness Harper mortgaged the mine to Sayles for $1,377.84, and thereafter Sayles' assignee demanding payment and Sloan and Dwyer refusing to contribute to the settlement of said debt, Harper negotiated a loan from Sharon and executed a note and mortgage for $2,252.30 to pay the Sayles note and discharge the earlier mortgage. From December, 1901, plaintiff was unable to work the claim continuously, but each year, to and including 1913, he expended for the alleged partnership more than $100 for assessment work. Plaintiff sues for compensation for all of his time employed in the management and control of the property for more than one year and 6 months up to the end of December, 1900, and for one month of each of the following 13 years; also for the taxes paid by him until 1913, inclusive.

There are allegations that Dwyer departed from California about 4 months after entering into the contract with Harper, and did not return, and that Sloan departed at the same time, but returned to California in December, 1900, remaining but 5 months, during which time he was informed of the conditions of the mining property "and of its indebtedness, and he consented to the same and promised to pay and advance to the said partnership the whole thereof." It will be seen at once that appellant's claims against the defendants must depend upon the existence of a mining partnership as defined by section 2511 of the Civil Code, which is as follows:

"A mining partnership exists when two or more persons who own or acquire a mining claim for the purpose of working it and extracting the mineral therefrom actually engage in working the same."

Examining the written instrument which is pleaded as the basis of the claims of Harper against defendants, we see at once that it is not a copartnership agreement whereby from its execution Harper, Sloan, and Dwyer were to work the claim as partners. The others advanced money for the purchase of Harper's interest in the mine in case he ever acquired any interest. There was no provision by which they were to share in the output or be responsible for Harper's expenses in the operation of the property until there should have been an actual conveyance of an interest to them by Harper after he should have acquired it from the original locators. Towards them Harper did not sustain the relation of a mining partner for he had not owned nor acquired the claim with them for the purpose of working it and extracting the mineral therefrom. He was in much the same position as was the plaintiff in Stuart v. Adams, 89 Cal. 367, 26 Pac. 970, who had contracted with the owners to work the mine, pay one-half the expenses thereof, and receive one-half of the product for his labor. Such an arrangement as this court decided does not make the parties to it mining partners. Harper's arrangement with his vendors differed only from the one discussed in the Adams Case in that he was to pay all of the expenses of working the mine and to place the product in escrow, meanwhile having nothing but an option to purchase the claim and the product within a certain time for a stated amount of money. Similarly the contract of Harper with the defendants gave the latter the right to a conveyance of part of Harper's interest if he ever should purchase, after which he should be entitled to an adequate consideration for "the management and control of the operating of said mine." We see no escape from the conclusion that there was to be no partnership until Sloan and Dwyer became part owners.

The excuses offered by plaintiff in his pleading for his failure to convey are not sufficient. Sloan's rumored conveyance to Lord Beresford surely was not sufficient reason for Harper to ignore the terms of his agreement with defendants. Nor did Sloan's instructions to delay conveyance justify a change in the written agreement, and, of course, such directions were of no effect in relation to Dwyer. Nor did Lady Beresford's reconveyance to Sloan operate to change the contract. Dwyer's conveyance to Sloan had no such effect either. Both of the transactions last mentioned occurred more than a year after plaintiff obtained title, and he never had created a mining partnership nor any other sort by making the conveyance prescribed by the written agreement to be made within a reasonable time after he should become the owner of the claim. The engagement of the defendants was to buy a two-thirds interest in a mine if it should be acquired. They paid $7,000 for such interest, but Harper worked the mine on his own account, and never carried out his promise to convey. Therefore he cannot take advantage of his own violation of the agreement of sale and at this late day seek to compel defendants to pay a mortgage placed by him upon his own property without their consent. Nor may he compel them to compensate him for work done upon his own claim without authorization from them. A contract to buy an interest in a mine is not a mining contract. Prince v. Lamb, 128 Cal. 120, 60 Pac. 689. An agreement to the effect that if A. should secure a paying mine through the efforts of B., said A. would, in addition to wages, give B. an interest in the mine, is not an agreement establishing a mining partnership. Berry v. Woodburn, 107 Cal. 504, 40 Pac. 802. An agreement that upon the happening of some contingent future event the parties to the contract will operate a mine does not constitute a mining partnership. Dorsey v. Newcomer, 121 Cal. 213-216, 53 Pac. 557.

The conveyance of the property to plaintiff in trust for him and the defendants did not create a mining partnership. Before they could be charged as partners they must have engaged in working the mine. Peterson v. Beggs, 26 Cal. App. 760, 148 Pac. 541. As there was no mining contract the whole fabric of appellant's argument is destroyed, and it follows that the superior court did not err in sustaining the demurrer.

Judgment affirmed.

In re SHIRLEY'S ESTATE. (L. A. 5941.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1919.)

1. WILLS $\S$ 651—VALIDITY OF PROVISIONS—FORFEITURE IN CASE OF CONTEST.

Provision of will, "Should any one to whom I have made a bequest * * * undertake to break my Will I desire such persons bequest becomes void and be set aside," is a dispositive provision, and not a mere expression of wish or desire, addressed to no particular person, and is effective to bring about a forfeiture of legacy on violation of its terms.

2. WILLS $\S$ 639—CONDITIONS—SPECIFIC APPLICATION.

Where words in a will are used which dispose of property or impose a condition on a bequest given elsewhere in the will, they need not be addressed to any one, as it is enough that they show the intent and will of testatrix regarding property or legacy.

3. WILLS $\S$ 464—UNGRAMMATICAL EXPRESSION.

Civ. Code, § 1322, providing that a clear bequest cannot be affected by other words, not equally clear, in another part of the will, does not apply to a clause "Should any one to whom I have made a bequest * * * undertake to break my Will I desire such persons bequest becomes void and be set aside," though ungrammatical, since intention is clear.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Louise F. Shirley, deceased. Appeal by Lucy C. McKinney, legatee, from order denying her the right to participate in distribution of assets petitioned for by George Puterbaugh, executor. Order affirmed.

Henning & McGee and F. B. Andrews, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Johnson W. Puterbaugh and Eugene Daney, both of San Diego, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by Lucy C. McKinney, one of the legatees mentioned in the will of Louise F. Shirley, from an order and decree of the superior court made on September 19, 1918, granting the petition of the executor to partially distribute the assets of the estate, and denying the right of the appellant to participate in said distribution.

The appellant was a sister and one of the heirs at law of the testatrix. The will gave to Lucy C. McKinney a legacy of $1,000, and to 12 other persons legacies in different sums varying from $50 to $5,000, and the residue to two young sons of George H. Van Arnem. Following the residuary bequest she appointed George Puterbaugh as the executor of the will. Then follows the language which is responsible for the appeal, as follows:

"Should any one to whom I have made a bequest of any portion of my Estate undertake to break my Will I desire such persons bequest becomes void and be set aside."

The court found that Lucy C. McKinney did undertake to break the will by contesting probate thereof; that on the trial of said contest the decision was against her, and that said will was thereupon duly admitted to probate. It is obvious that this attempt brings her within the terms of the clause just quoted, and that if said clause constitutes a condition to the legacy in her favor she has violated the condition, and thereby forfeited her right to receive such legacy.

[1] The appellant contends that the clause above quoted is not a dispositive provision of the will, but a mere expression of a wish or desire, addressed to no particular person, and entirely ineffective to bring about a forfeiture of the legacy upon a violation of its terms. In support of this construction of the clause she relies on the decisions of this court in Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 666, 61 Pac. 964, 64 Pac. 1071, Kauffman v. Gries, 141 Cal. 295, 74 Pac. 846, Estate of Mitchell, 160 Cal. 618, 117 Pac. 774, and Estate of Purcell, 167 Cal. 176, 138 Pac. 704. These decisions each involved the question whether or not a precatory trust was created by the terms of a will purporting to impose upon the devisee or legatee a duty to a third person with reference to the property devised or bequeathed. They are applications of the rule of interpretation governing words addressed to the devisee or legatee concerning the property devised or bequeathed to him, as distinguished from the interpretation of general or particular expressions of the testator's will not so addressed, or, as it is sometimes stated, "addressed to the executor." The distinction is thus stated in Estate of Marti (132 Cal. 671, 61 Pac. 965):

"While the desire of a testator for the disposition of his estate will be construed as a command when addressed to his executor, it will not, when addressed to his legatee, be construed as a limitation upon the estate or interest which he has given to him in absolute terms."

Appellant seizes upon the phrase "addressed to the executor" in the above passage, and therefrom draws the inference that when the word "desire" is used, and it is not in terms or expressly addressed to any person, it is not to be construed as indicating the intention of the testator to dispose of his estate or to effect a disposition thereof, but is a mere ineffective statement of his hope or wish. The phrase quoted was used in that case only as a convenient form of expression, and the passage is not to be taken as rigidly as the appellant claims. Other words have been held equally effective. In Board v. Culp, 151 Pa. 470, 25 Atl. 118, quoted with approval in Estate of Tooley, 170 Cal. 166, 149 Pac. 574, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 516, the rule is said to be that where words of request and the like "are used in direct reference to the estate, they are prima facie testamentary and imperative, and not precatory." In Estate of Tooley, the testatrix, after a positive gift of all her property to her daughter, followed it with the statement that if the daughter died without husband or children, "I desire that any property that may be left divided equally among my sisters and brother." The word "desire," so used, was held to be a word disposing of the estate and qualifying the preceding gift thereof. The court said:

"The rule is practically universal that words in a will indicating the wish of the testatrix regarding the disposition to be made of her property by the law at her death are to be taken as a dispositive provision," and that, where "directed to the executor or to the law and not to a devisee or legatee," the word "desire" is sufficient "to declare a disposition of the property."

[2] The fact that the clause here involved is not formally addressed or directed to any person as one by whom the bequest should be set aside is of no importance. Where words are used which dispose of property or impose a condition upon a bequest given elsewhere in the will, they need not be addressed to any one. It is enough that they show the intent and will of the testatrix regarding the property or legacy. If they do this, the court and the law will carry it out by probating the will and distributing the estate as is provided therein.

[3] The appellant also invokes the rule that a clear and distinct bequest in a will cannot be affected by any other words, not equally clear and distinct, in another part of the will. Civ. Code, § 1322. The words of the qualifying clause first above quoted are not grammatical in form, but they are entirely clear and distinct as an expression of the will of the testatrix that, if any legatee or devisee shall undertake to contest the will, the legacy given to such person shall be thereby forfeited. The rule referred to does not apply to the case.

We are of the opinion that the court below correctly construed the will, and properly held that the appellant was not entitled to the legacy. Estate of Hite, 155 Cal. 436, 101 Pac. 443, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993; Estate of Miller, 156 Cal. 119, 103 Pac. 842, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 868.

The order is affirmed.

MILLIRON v. DITTMAN et al. (L. A. 4944.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1919.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY — 59—LIABILITY OF SURETIES—EXTENT—PUBLIC BONDS.

The liability of sureties cannot be extended beyond a fair import of the express undertaking in the bond, unless the bond be given in pursuance of a governmental order or for a public purpose, in which case the law becomes a part of the bond.

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY — 59—EXTENT OF SURETY'S LIABILITY — LAW AS PART OF BOND.

The rule that the law under which a public bond is given is part of the bond has no application where its undoubted effect would be to impose a liability necessarily and absolutely inconsistent with the unequivocal intent of the parties as disclosed by the express terms of the bond itself.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 703(1)—JITNEYS—BONDS — CONSTRUCTION—INCLUSION OF PROVISIONS OF ORDINANCE.

A bond given by a casualty company covering the operation of a jitney bus, not expressly obligating the insurer to pay to injured third persons damages for injuries resulting from the negligence of the insured, was properly construed to include the requirements of an ordinance that the bond be conditioned for payments directly to the damaged person or his duly authorized representative, so that the casualty company was properly joined with the insured in an action for injuries due to the negligent operation of the motorbus.

Department 2.

Appeal from the Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by C. J. Milliron against F. G. Dittman, T. H. O'Neill, and the Pacific Coast Casualty Company. From a judgment for plaintiff against the two last-named defendants, the latter appeal. Affirmed.

V. J. Cobb and Chas. L. Evans, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ward Chapman, L. M. Chapman, H. J. Fish, and Clyde R. Burr, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against two of the defendants, O'Neill and Pacific Coast Casualty Company, in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused the plaintiff by the negligence of O'Neill. The negligence charged arose out of the operation by O'Neill of a jitney bus in which the plaintiff Milliron was riding as a passenger on July 8, 1915.

The casualty company was joined as a defendant in the action, because it had executed upon the application of the defendant

O'Neill an indemnity bond pursuant to the requirements of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles. This ordinance made it unlawful to operate a motorbus unless there should be given and kept on file in the office of the city clerk, and in full force and effect at all times during the operation of such bus, a good and sufficient bond or policy of insurance. The ordinance provided that this bond or policy of insurance should be conditioned for the payment of various specified sums of money for injury to or the death of one or more persons and for damage done to the property of others resulting from the operation of such motorbus. The ordinance further provided that—

"Said bond or policy of insurance shall be conditioned that said bond or policy of insurance shall inure to and be for the benefit and protection of any one who shall sustain any damage or injury, or to the heirs * * * of any such person who may be so damaged or injured or suffer death by reason of negligence or misconduct on the part of the driver or operator of any motorbus operated under any such permit or from the defective construction thereof. Such bond or policy of insurance shall be a continuing liability, notwithstanding any action or recovery thereon. Said bond or policy of insurance shall also be conditioned that payments required to be made thereunder shall be made in case of injury or damage, directly to the insured or damaged person or his duly authorized representative."

The bond in question, although covenanting to pay directly to the insured such sums as might be adjudged against him as damages for injuries resulting from the operation of his motorbus, did not expressly obligate the defendant company to pay to injured third persons such sums as they might be entitled to recover as damages for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the motorbus. The bond in question, however, did provide that—

"In the event of a final judgment covering any loss or claim under this policy is rendered against the assured, the company guarantees the payment of said judgment direct to the plaintiff securing such judgment, provided that any action by the said plaintiff to recover under this clause is commenced within twelve months next after such final judgment shall have been rendered."

The trial court read into the bond the provision of the ordinance requiring the bond to be conditioned for its payments "directly to the * * * damaged person or his duly authorized representative." Accordingly it was held that the casualty company was properly joined as a defendant in the action and was liable to the plaintiff upon the bond. This holding is asserted to be error upon the theory that the liability of the defendant company could not be extended beyond the express words of the bond nor measured by anything outside of the bond.

[1] It is true, as the appellants contend, that the general rule is to the effect that the liability of sureties cannot be extended beyond the fair import of the express undertaking in the bond. There is, however, an exception to this general rule in the case of bonds given in pursuance of a governmental law for a public purpose. The exception is clearly and concisely stated in the case of State v. Nutter, 44 W. Va. 385, 30 S. E. 67, where it is said:

"The law in force at the date of a public bond, fixing a certain condition for it, and saying what its obligations shall be, is a part of it as effectually as if such obligations were in words inserted in it. * * * By signing the parties adopt the law as a part of the bond. If we do not so hold we frustrate the plain purpose of the statute."

To the same effect are Crawford v. Ozark Insurance Co., 97 Ark. 549, 134 S. W. 951; State, for U. S., etc., Co. v. McGuire, 46 W. Va. 328, 33 S. E. 313, 76 Am. St. Rep. 822; State v. Wotring, 56 W. Va. 394, 49 S. E. 365, and Macready v. Schenck, 41 La. Ann. 456, 6 South. 517.

[2, 3] Of course, this exception to the general rule would have no application where its undoubted effect would be to impose a liability necessarily and absolutely inconsistent with the unequivocal intent of the parties as disclosed by the express terms of the bond itself. Graeter v. De Wolf, 112 Ind. 1, 13 N. E. 111. There is no provision, however, in the bond in question which expressly excludes a direct right of recourse by the injured party against the bonding company. Moreover, the bond as it read at the date of the accident was a contract made not only for the protection of the operator of the motorbus, but also directly for the benefit of injured passengers in so far as it expressly promised to pay directly to an injured party any amount for which the operator of the bus might be adjudged liable. To read the statutory requirement into the bond, while it accords to the plaintiff the privilege of joining the casualty company in a suit against the operator of the bus, introduces no necessary inconsistency into the contract and leaves the substantial rights of the parties unimpaired. The only ground upon which it is suggested that the rights of the defendants might be injuriously affected is that a jury might be expected to return a larger verdict for the plaintiff in a suit in which the casualty company appears as a party defendant, because they would necessarily know that the operator of the bus, whose act actually caused the injury, was insured. The jury would presumably know in any event that the operator was insured, since the law requiring the filing of the bond was one of which all persons would be presumed to have knowledge. Nor can we doubt that the casualty company must be presumed to have taken the knowledge of the jury into account in fixing its charges for executing a bond or policy of insurance issued in assumed pursuance of an ordinance unequivocally prescribing that the bond should be enforceable in favor of the persons injured by the act of the operator of the motorbus.

It is not claimed that the judgment appealed from is erroneous as to the defendant O'Neill if it is to be sustained as to the defendant casualty company. The foregoing discussion disposes, therefore, of all of the issues presented in the case.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

STANFORD HOTEL CO. v. M. SCHWIND
CO. (S. F. 8250.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1919.)

1. ACTION $\S$ 27(2)—LANDLORD AND TENANT $\S$ 229(1)—RIGHT TO REMEDY—SUIT FOR LAND AGAINST TRANSFeree OF TENANT CORPORATION.

An action by plaintiff to recover by attachment rent under a lease from a new corporation continuing the business of the lessee corporation, which had dissolved, is not an action ex delicto for fraud, but an action upon contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, and therefore, within Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 537, subd. 1, an action in which an attachment may issue.

2. ATTACHMENT $\S$ 4—SCOPE OF REMEDY—LEGAL OR EQUITABLE ACTION.

It is not essential under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 537, providing that an attachment may issue in an action upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, that such action be strictly legal or strictly equitable or partly legal and partly equitable, if its purpose is recovery upon such contract.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT $\S$ 229(1)—RIGHT TO REMEDY—CAUSE OF ACTION—CONTRACTS—INVOKING EQUITABLE PRINCIPLES—EFFECT.

Where a lessor seeking to recover by attachment from a transferee of the lessee corporation money due as rent alleges facts showing not only that the transferee took the property as part of a scheme to defraud creditors, but that the transferee is in fact the original debtor under another name, it is entitled to an attachment under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 537, subd. 1, by virtue of suing for a recovery upon a contract; the fact that certain equitable principles are invoked not converting such action into one ex delicto.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚡229(1)—NATURE OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

In a suit by the lessor against a new corporation, transferee of the lessee corporation, which had dissolved, where the complaint asked that it be decreed that defendant hold the property transferred to it charged with a certain sum, plaintiff's claim for rent, with interest and costs, and that the property be sold for payment thereof, a money judgment is asked for, and the complaint sufficiently states a cause of action upon an express contract for direct payment of money entitling plaintiff to an attachment under Code Civ. Proc. § 537, subd. 1.

5. CORPORATIONS ⚡579(1) — REORGANIZATION—LIABILITIES OF ORIGINAL CORPORATION—RENT.

Where a corporation operating several restaurants reorganized under a new name, but with practically the same stockholders and directors, assigned all of its assets to the new corporation except plaintiff's lease, and continued to carry on the same business, equity will regard the new corporation a continuation of the old and hold it liable for rent due plaintiff from the former corporation.

6. CORPORATIONS ⚡580—ACTION TO ENFORCE LIABILITY AGAINST REORGANIZED CORPORATION—PARTIES—JOINDER OF FORMER CORPORATION.

Where a suit is brought by the lessor under a lease with a former corporation against a new corporation having practically the same officers and stockholders and continuing the same business, and to whom all the former corporation's property had been assigned except plaintiff's lease, to recover by attachment rent due from such former corporation, it is not necessary to make the former corporation a party defendant.

7. ATTACHMENT ⚡111 — AFFIDAVIT — AVERMENTS—NONRESIDENCE OF DEFENDANT.

Where plaintiff, seeking to attach the property of a nonresident, states a cause of action coming under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 537, 538, subd. 1, it need not show the nonresidence of the defendant in the affidavit on attachment, the nature of the cause of action rather than defendant's residence being controlling, such showing being necessary only in causes arising under subdivisions 2 and 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by the Stanford Hotel Company against M. Schwind Company, in which plaintiff prays for an attachment to issue. From an order denying defendant's motion to dissolve the attachment, defendant appeals. Order affirmed.

G. B. Benham and Edward Lande, both of San Francisco (Frank A. Duryea, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

W. W. Sanderson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to dissolve an attachment.

The Stanford Hotel Company is the lessor in a certain lease upon which the Maryland Dairy Lunch Company, a California corporation and the original debtor, is obligated in the sum of $3,617.60, as unpaid rent from March 1, 1916, to October, 1916; the monthly rental of the demised premises being $452.25. The lunch company, prior to January 26, 1916, carried on an extensive restaurant business in San Francisco in four locations, one of which was the premises leased from the plaintiff at 250 Kearny street. One M. Schwind was the president and a director of the lunch company and the owner of nine-tenths of the capital stock thereof. From the complaint it appears that the lunch company was solvent and meeting its ordinary and current liabilities, when, some time prior to January 26, 1916, the said Schwind and the other directors of the lunch company contrived a fraudulent scheme to evade the payment of the rent due to the plaintiff and to escape further liability upon its said lease. They organized a Nevada corporation, the M. Schwind Company, the defendant in the present action, with a perpetual charter permitting the carrying on of business elsewhere than in the state of Nevada, and also providing an exemption of stockholders' liability. 996 shares of 1,000 shares of said company were issued to M. Schwind, who became a director thereof; the other four directors holding but one share each. On January 25, 1916, this corporation duly complied with the laws of California and filed its articles of incorporation. Meanwhile the Maryland Dairy Lunch Company had deliberately refused and neglected to pay its license tax and franchise tax to the state of California, thereby forfeiting its charter on March 4, 1916. On January 26, 1916, the lunch company held a meeting of its board of directors and passed a resolution selling and transferring to the defendant corporation its three places of business with the leasehold rights of occupancy in the same, and in all its property. No mention of the business carried on at 250 Kearny street was made in this bill of sale, nor was the lease included therein. The bill of sale was not acknowledged and recorded until after the dissolution of the lunch company, namely, on March 24, 1916. The M. Schwind Company continued ostensibly to carry on business at 250 Kearny street after the bill of sale was made and delivered, but before it was acknowledged and recorded, that is, until March 14, 1916, when the premises were vacated and the lease abandoned by the lunch company. It is further alleged that the purpose and effect of this transaction was to eliminate the lunch company as a corporation, and as a result there was left no property whatever to come into the hands of its directors as trustees for its creditors, and that the transfer to the M. Schwind Company was entirely without consideration; the purpose of the deal being the continuation of the business of the lunch company under a new corporation which was in substance and effect but a continuation of the old, and owned substantially by the same stockholders, and carrying on its business without interruption or delay.

The complaint was filed on October 23, 1916. The prayer was for a temporary injunction restraining the defendant corporation until after a full hearing of this cause from selling or otherwise disposing of any of the property involved in the bill of sale; that the said sale be declared void and of no effect; that it be adjudged and decreed that the defendant holds the property charged with the payment of the plaintiff's claim for $3,617.60, with interest and costs; that the property be sold for the plaintiff's claim and costs; and for other further and proper relief. On the same day Isaac Harris, president of the Stanford Hotel Company, made affidavit for the attachment of the said property. The affidavit conforms strictly to the requirements of subdivisions 1 of section 537 and section 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the filing of the affidavit and the undertaking the writ was issued. Whereupon the defendant, on October 28, 1916, without answering the complaint, moved to dissolve the attachment upon the grounds, briefly stated: (1) That the cause of action is not one in which a writ of attachment could issue; (2) that the writ was improperly issued; (3) that the writ was irregularly issued; (4) that the affidavit upon which the writ was issued is false in the statement therein that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,617.60 over and above all legal set-offs or counterclaims upon an express contract for the direct payment of money, to wit, to pay rent under a lease of certain real property; (5) that the affidavit is false in the statement that the contract was made and is payable in this state. The only evidence taken on the hearing of the motion was that of Isaac Harris, the president of the plaintiff corporation. The motion to dissolve was denied; whereupon the defendant appealed.

[1] 1. Appellant relies chiefly on the contention that this is not an action in which an attachment may issue, in that it appears upon the face of the complaint that the suit is not one upon contract, but that it is an action ex delicto for fraud. Hallidie v. Enginger, 175 Cal. 505, 166 Pac. 1, cited by appellant in support of this contention, correctly states the law of this state that an attachment will not lie in an action ex delicto for fraud. The action in that case was held to be one of that character. But nothing declared in that case, nor in the cases therein cited, can be taken as authority supporting the contention of appellant that this is such an action. The action in Hallidie v. Enginger, supra, was brought by the plaintiff, as trustee for the stockholders of the corporation, which had forfeited its charter, to recover a sum of money received by the defendant from dividends and as proceeds from the sale of stock which the defunct corporation had been induced to sell to the defendant by his false representations. It was clearly and essentially an action grounded in fraud, and not one for the direct payment of money upon contract, express or implied. Whatever liability existed on the part of the defendant arose solely through his fraudulent representations, and consequently the gravamen of the action was fraud.

[2, 3] But such is not the case here. The recovery which is sought by the plaintiff is a definite sum of money, due on a contract of lease for the payment of rent. The question here is whether this action is one within the purview of subdivision 1 of section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That subdivision does not contemplate the right of attachment in an action ex delicto for fraud. This statement is in accord with Hallidie v. Enginger, supra. The action must be one upon contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money. If a recovery upon such a contract is the purpose of the suit, so far as the right of attachment is concerned, it is immaterial whether the action be regarded as strictly legal or strictly equitable, or partly legal and partly equitable. The subdivision does not in terms prescribe that the action must be one in law, or that it may not be one in equity, or that it may not be one of either law or equity, or of both. Hence it is not necessary in order to uphold the writ of attachment to establish the proposition that the action is either legal or equitable. What must be established is that the action is based upon contract, either express or implied, for the direct payment of money. It is clear that this action addresses itself to both the legal and the equitable powers of the court. But that circumstance will not operate to deny the plaintiff a writ of attachment if he is seeking recovery upon the breach of such contract. It is to be kept in mind that there is no suggestion that fraud entered into the making of the contract. The respective obligations of the parties thereunder were for a time performed, and then one of them committed a breach of the contract. So the basis and essence of the action is an executed contract for the direct payment of money, and in order to have satisfied any judgment that may be recovered for such breach the plaintiff sues out a writ of attachment. In order to establish the proposition that the property attached should be responsive to such a judgment, the plaintiff invokes certain well-recognized equitable principles. But this does not have the effect of converting the action on the express contract for the direct payment of money into one ex delicto for fraud. Consequently, even if such an action may properly be regarded as partially legal and partially equitable, it will make no difference. The plaintiff is nevertheless entitled to a writ of attachment by virtue of the fact that he is suing for a recovery upon the contract which is the gravamen of the action. In stating, as we have, that it does not matter that the relief sought partakes of both law and equity, we do not mean to be understood as holding that an attachment may be issued upon a creditors' bill to set aside transfers of property in fraud of creditors. In such a case the gravamen of the cause of action against the transferee is the fraud. But in the present action the facts alleged in the complaint make out not merely a case where the transferee took the property as part of a scheme to defraud creditors, but one where the transferee is in fact the original debtor masquerading under a different name. If the action were one against the tenant by name to recover the rent due, it could not be questioned but that it was one upon a contract for the direct payment of money. Yet that is what the present action really is.

[4] But the appellant argues in support of his contention that this is an action ex delicto for fraud that the plaintiff did not in his prayer to the complaint ask for a money judgment. The only direct reference to the claim in the prayer is in these words:

"That it be adjudged and decreed * * * that the said defendant holds said property * * * charged with the payment of the plaintiff's claim for $3,617.60, with interest and costs; that the said property be sold for the payment of plaintiff's claim and costs."

While the prayer does not in express terms ask for a money judgment, it is nevertheless plain that such a judgment was the purpose of the suit. However, the respondent stated in oral argument that a motion would be interposed in the court below to have the complaint amended in that regard. This may be done. It was said in Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 9, 33 Pac. 741:

"Even on demurrer to the complaint the defendants cannot object to the prayer, and certainly, so long as the complaint contains every essential of an action upon contract, they cannot upon motion for an attachment accomplish what they could not upon demurrer; a motion to dissolve the attachment cannot reach the defects in the complaint."

It was further held in that case that a motion to dissolve an attachment could not be turned into a demurrer, but that on such motion we are—

"simply to determine whether: (1) The complaint showed the action to be founded upon contract, express or implied; (2) whether it states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendants; and, if not (3) does it appear therefrom that it can be so amended as to state a cause of action upon contract."

The complaint sufficiently states a cause of action upon an express contract for the direct payment of money to satisfy the requirement of subdivision 1 of section 537.

[5, 6] 2. The appellant further contends that attachment will not lie herein because of lack of privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant corporation. This is equally without merit. It is true that the contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the Maryland Dairy Lunch Company, and that the lunch company assigned all of its assets to the defendant corporation except this lease with the plaintiff. As the lease was not included in the bill of sale, the law will not imply a promise on the part of the defendant corporation to pay the rent. 7 R. C. L. 183; 76 Am. St. Rep. 800, note. But it is well established in this state that under circumstances such as these, where a corporation reorganizes under a new name, but with practically the same stockholders and directors, and continues to carry on the same business, a court of equity will regard the new corporation as a continuation of the former corporation, and will hold it liable for the debts of the former corporation. Blanc v. Paymaster Mining Co., 95 Cal. 524, 30 Pac. 765, 29 Am. St. Rep. 149; Higgins v. Cal. Petroleum Co., 122 Cal. 373, 55 Pac. 155; Id., 147 Cal. 363, 81 Pac. 1070; Strahm v. Fraser, 32 Cal. App. 447, 163 Pac. 680. The allegations of the complaint as to the scheme to avoid fraudulently the payment of the plaintiff's rent go to the point of making out, as they do, that the defendant, by name the M. Schwind Company, is, in fact, the tenant formerly by name the Maryland Dairy Lunch Company. That equity will strip off the mask of a separate corporate identity, when it is but a mask, is amply sustained by these authorities. Nor is it necessary, as asserted by appellant, to make the former corporation a party defendant. Blanc v. Paymaster Mining Co., supra.

[7] 3. Objection is raised to the sufficiency of the affidavit to support the attachment on the ground that it does not state the fact that the defendant corporation is a nonresident. The question thus presented is whether, within the meaning of sections 537 and 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in every case of a nonresident defendant, the fact of nonresidence must be averred in the affidavit on attachment? We think not. Under subdivisions 1 it is the nature of the cause of action against a nonresident defendant rather than the fact of his residence that controls. Only in those cases wherein the cause of action is one contemplated by either subdivision 2 or 3 is it necessary to aver that the defendant is a nonresident. In the case at bar, while the defendant corporation is a nonresident, the cause of action comes within subdivisions 1, and, as already stated, the affidavit is in strict accord with those subdivisions. Subdivisions 1 do not mention the subject of the residence of the defendant. It is only in subdivisions 2 and 3 that the requirement appears. These latter subdivisions are drawn expressly for the benefit of those seeking to attach the property of nonresidents. It follows that in attaching property of a resident the affidavit must be drawn under subdivisions 1; but it does not follow, as claimed by appellant, that in seeking to attach the property of a nonresident the attachment cannot be sued out under subdivisions 1 without averring the fact of nonresidence. It is only when a plaintiff has a cause of action different from the kind contemplated by subdivisions 1 that advantage may be taken of the more liberal requirements of subdivisions 2 and 3. These apply only to nonresidents, and in every instance the fact of nonresidence must be averred. Where the cause of action comes under subdivisions 1 of these two sections, the residence of the defendant is immaterial. The affidavit is sufficient.

Order affirmed.

HYMAN BROS. BOX & LABEL CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 8890.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §348—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—STATUTE APPLICABLE.

The rights of an injured servant are measured by the Workmen's Compensation Act in force at the time of the injury.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(3)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—CERTIORARI—JURISDICTIONAL QUESTION.

Determination of question whether or not certain described actions of an employé amounted to willful misconduct within the Workmen's Compensation Act goes to the jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission, and therefore is reviewable on certiorari.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §380—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—"WILLFUL MISCONDUCT."

A 20-year old employé working at a press was not, as a matter of law, guilty of willful misconduct within the Workmen's Compensation Act in catching at certain falling or loose cards, so that his hand was caught between the bed and platen of the press, though he had been warned against the danger of so doing; the act being possibly instinctive.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Willful Misconduct.]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT §385(11)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—COMPENSATION TO INJURED MINOR—"AFTER."

Under Workmen's Compensation Act 1913, § 17c, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1086, § 6, in case of injury to an employé in his twentieth year, the Industrial Accident Commission had no power to compute compensation on basis of probable wages which employé might obtain long after reaching his majority; "after," as used in the section in relation to the average weekly earnings of a minor employé being the weekly sum he would probably be able to earn "after" attaining the age of 21 years, meaning "at."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, After.]

In Bank.

Certiorari by the Hyman Bros. Box & Label Company and the Aetna Life Insurance Company, to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission under the Workmen's Compensation Act in favor of Fred Weiss, a minor, represented by Mathiew Weiss, his guardian ad litem and trustee. Award annulled, and matter remanded to commission.

E. L. Stockwell and Redman & Alexander, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Christopher M. Bradley and Warren H. Pillsbury, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Certiorari to review the award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Fred Weiss, who was injured by having his hand caught in a printing press to which he was "feeding" pieces of pasteboard that were cut by the machinery into proper shape for use in the making of pasteboard boxes.

[1] The injury was suffered by the applicant for compensation in the month of December, 1917, and his rights must be measured by the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913, as amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1079), which was then in force.

The applicant was 20 years of age at the time of the injury. He had worked for the Hyman Bros. Box & Label Company, generally as a "press feeder," three times, his terms of employment aggregating about 19 months. He had worked for another corporation, also as a press feeder, for 2 years and 2 months. It thus appears that he was an experienced workman almost of the age of majority.

The press at which Mr. Weiss was working when he was injured was equipped with a stationary upright plate called the "bed" and a plate called the "platen," which repeatedly opened and closed against the "bed." In operating the press he stood in front of it, removing the cut pasteboard with his left hand and inserting the uncut sheets with his right hand. Sometimes a cardboard sheet would slip off the bed of the press and fall into the body of the press, and sometimes some of the uncut pieces would fall into the press from the "feed board" upon which the operator kept a supply. In such case the press could be stopped at once by moving a lever, and the card or cards could be removed without danger. The injury to the applicant occurred while he was reaching into the body of the moving press for a sheet or sheets which had fallen. Asked by the examiner if that was a proper thing for him to do, he said, "Well, it might not have been," and to the question "Why not?" he replied as follows:

"When I first came to Hyman Bros. Box & Label Company, I was told not to grab any sheets, when I first came there. That was 3 or 3½ or 4 years ago. Then I left Hyman Bros. again and came back, after feeding that many years, and, being that I was experienced in feeding, I was not told that any more."

Following this statement the questions and answers were as follows:

"You knew then that that instruction had been given you, and you knew it was not a proper thing to do? A. Yes.

"Q. Had anybody ever seen you do that before, any of the foremen? A. I don't know. I couldn't tell you that.

"Q. You had done it two or three times before? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And you did it this time? A. Yes, sir."

At another place in the return to the writ his testimony is reported as follows:

"Q. Mr. Weiss, if you were reaching into that machine to take out loose cards that had fallen in there while the machine was in motion, you were doing something you knew was not exactly proper, weren't you? A. The loose ones, you mean?

"Q. Yes. A. Yes, sir.

"Q. But nobody had said anything to you in the last year or two about doing that? A. No, sir.

"Q. But when you first came there, as I understand you, you were instructed never to reach into the machine? A. When I first started to learn. That was the first place I fed. I was just starting to learn to feed at that time.

"Q. What did they say to you? A. They told me, 'You don't want to put your hand into the machine if any sheets fall down, because you can get more sheets than you can hands.'

"Q. What would have been the right thing to have done if those sheets had fallen in there? A. Stop the machine. It didn't do any harm, and you could still keep running."

In his application to the Industrial Accident Commission for compensation Mr.

Weiss had described the occasion of the injury as follows:

"Some sheets of box board dropped from the feed board into the press, and applicant reached with his left hand to catch them; the left hand and arm being caught between bed and platen."

[2] The Industrial Accident Commission found that in attempting to catch the card "the employé acted instinctively without reflection, and such act did not constitute willful misconduct, and that therefore said injury was not caused by willful misconduct of the employé." Petitioners attack this finding as contrary to the evidence. This they say, is the case of an employé who, with full appreciation of the danger, violated specific instructions given him for his own protection. The question before us, therefore, is whether or not the described actions of the employé amounted to willful misconduct. That an answer to such a problem goes to the jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission is settled by decisions of this court. Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35; Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 171 Cal. 728, 154 Pac. 834, L. R. A. 1916D, 903.

[3] The doctrine that an unpremeditated and impulsive act in violation of orders may not be willful misconduct finds some support in the authorities but usually nonage is an element of the decisions in which such doctrine has been upheld. It seems to us, however, that the age of the person injured does not necessarily make a material difference. The tendency to recover something falling from a machine; to reach for a hat blown off the head by a sudden gust of wind; to apply the brakes to a "skidding" automobile—in short to perform acts of many sorts upon the impulse of the moment, is not the failing of youth alone. The true tests to be applied have reference to the nature of the work being performed and the circumstances of each particular case. This court has been at pains more than once to define "willful misconduct." Perhaps the best definition (and, incidentally, the one cited by both parties to this controversy) is the one found in the opinion in Great Western Power Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 170 Cal. 180, at page 189, 149 Pac. 35, 40. The court used this language:

"Willful misconduct means something more than negligence. It does not include every violation or disregard of a rule. Casey v. Humphreys (1913) 6 B. W. C. C. 520. But it cannot be doubted that a workman who violates a reasonable rule made for his own protection from serious bodily injury or death is guilty of misconduct, and that where the workman deliberately violates the rule, with knowledge of its existence and of the dangers accompanying its violation, he is guilty of willful misconduct. Brooker v. Warner, 23 L. T. R. 201."

In that case (known in the profession as the "Mayfield Case"), the applicant had entered upon the duty of handling wires used for the transmission of high tension electric current, without putting on the nonconducting gloves which the rules of his employer, well understood by him, required him to wear at such times. From the very nature of the act it was one which involved deliberation and a willful disobedience of a salutary rule. There was no room for the application of the doctrine of sudden impulse. The facts of the present case are vastly different. Admittedly, the petitioner Weiss knew the rule. Admittedly, he did something in apparent violation of the rule, which, if it had been the result of deliberate intention, would have amounted to willful misconduct; but the circumstances were such that any person, experienced or not, might have impulsively put himself in jeopardy as this young man did, without any intent to violate a known rule. There is evidence to support the conclusion reached by the Industrial Accident Commission, and we are of the opinion that upon this branch of the case a correct conclusion was reached. At the rate of the running of the press, the feeder was given at most a little more than one second for the entire operation of removing each cut piece of cardboard and inserting one that was uncut. Upon seeing a card fall into the machinery he was given but the smallest degree of time for deliberation and for determining whether or not he should reach for the pasteboard. It needs no argument to convince a court that a person in such a situation will not be judged by the same standards as one who breaks a rule by means involving time for reflection and excluding the possibility of sudden impulse. It is doubtless true that such an accident might come under the doctrine of the "Mayfield Case," as, for example, where an operative habitually and intentionally ignored the rule; and if the commissioners had believed the testimony of one witness who stated that after the injury Weiss admitted reaching into the moving press for fallen cards hundreds of times before, a finding of willful misconduct would have resulted. But the applicant denied the interview and the alleged statements attributed to him. Therefore we cannot disturb the finding made by the triers of facts.

The authorities sustain the views expressed above. In Whitehead v. Reader, [1901] 2 K. B. 48, it was held that where a man tried to replace a belt which had slipped from the machinery, such act may be regarded as venial, and not willful misconduct on his part. In McNicholas v. Dawson, [1899] 1 Q. B. 773, it was announced that each case must depend upon its own peculiar facts, and that the breaking of rules does not necessarily constitute serious misconduct.

In Peru Basket Co. v. Kuntz (Ind. App.) 122 N. E. 349, it was held that an employé with defective eyesight, who inadvertently placed his hand contrary to directions in a place where it was caught by a cutting machine, was not guilty of willful disobedience.

Petitioners have cited many authorities to the effect that where a servant goes outside of the scope of his authority, although still upon the employer's premises, he may not recover for any injury. Typical of such decisions is Williamson v. Industrial Accident Commission, 171 Pac. 797. The facts there disclosed were these: The applicant for compensation had gratuitously undertaken to clean a light well. She was injured while performing this task, but it was held that as she was not engaged to do that sort of work she was not entitled to compensation for her injuries. Undoubtedly that and similar authorities announce a correct rule, but one having no application to the facts now before us. Not one of them involves the conduct of an employé confronted with a sudden and unexpected situation furnishing almost irresistible occasion for impulsive action.

[4] Petitioners' only other objection is to the amount of the award which, it is asserted, was in excess of that which the commission was empowered to give. With this view we agree.

Section 17c of the Workmen's Compensation Act is in its essential parts as follows:

"If the injured employé is under twenty-one years of age, * * * his average weekly earnings shall be deemed * * * to be the weekly sum, that under ordinary circumstances he would probably be able to earn after attaining the age of twenty-one years, in the occupation in which he was employed at the time of the injury, or the occupation to which he would reasonably have been promoted, if he had not been injured." St. 1915, p. 1086, § 6.

The Industrial Accident Commission made the award upon the assumption that "after attaining the age of twenty-one years" means a reasonable time after majority. It was the theory that if the wages being earned at the time of injury were essentially "boy's wages," then the commission might base the amount of compensation upon "the adult's wages which the same individual would be expected to reach within the few months, or perhaps even a few years after passing the age of twenty-one."

With this view of the law we cannot agree. The infirmity of the rule must be apparent when we remember that there is no rule by which the exact difference between "boy's wages" and "man's wages" may be computed. This applicant was in his twenty-first year at the time of the injury. Under the statute quoted above the commission was bound to find his probable earnings at the age of 21 years. Such an interpretation of the word

"after" is fully in accord with sound reason and authority. For example, bequests to take effect "after death" vest at death. In re Swinburne, 16 R. I. 208, 14 Atl. 850; Downing v. Wherrin, 19 N. H. 9, 49 Am. Dec. 139; Atwell's Executors v. Barney, Dud. (Ga.) 207. In 2 C. J. 395, among the definitions of "after" given are "as soon as; at or immediately after; on; simultaneously; upon." That the framers of the Compensation Act intended the word "after" to mean "at" is obvious when we have in mind that different parts of a statute are to be so construed as to make them consistent and harmonious, giving proper effect to each of them. If the young man had been 21 years and 1 day old when he was injured, the commission would have been under the necessity of fixing his compensation in accordance with his wages at that time. To hold that because he was a few months under the age of 21 a much more flexible rule should apply would be an interpretation of the statute in a manner out of harmony with the part having reference to adults. Therefore we must hold that the Industrial Accident Commission had no power to compute the compensation upon the basis of probable wages which appellant might obtain long after reaching the age of 21 years.

The award is annulled, and the matter is remanded to the Industrial Accident Commission, to the end that such proceedings may be taken as are not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

WESTERN PAC. R. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 8959.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT — 380 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — INTENTIONAL DISOBEDIENCE.

Where a young man of 18 operating a drill with an upright shaft, which machine carried the warning sign, "Stop before repairing, oiling," etc., on seeing a stream of grease running down the framework made a dive with a cloth at it, so that his hand was drawn into the machine, it was not as a matter of law intentional and willful disobedience to exclude him from recovering compensation under the compensation act, but the commission could find he was not so disobedient.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT — 385(11) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — MINOR EMPLOYE — AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION.

The Workmen's Compensation Act in case of injury to a minor employe justifies a finding of compensation based on the probable wage of the employe when he shall reach 21, not on that which he would be likely to earn within a reasonable time after attaining such age.

In Bank.

Certiorari by the Western Pacific Railroad Company to review the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in awarding compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1915, p. 1079) to Earle Dean, a minor, represented by J. L. Dean, his guardian ad litem, and trustee. Award annulled, and matter remanded to the commission.

Henley C. Booth, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. A writ of certiorari was issued for the purpose of reviewing the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in awarding compensation to Earle Dean. The questions involved are very similar to those discussed and decided in Hyman Bros. Box & Label Co. and Aetna Life Insurance Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, S. F. No. 8890, 181 Pac. 784, this day decided. In this proceeding, as in that one, the two contentions made by the petitioner were: (1) That the injury suffered was caused by the young man's serious and willful misconduct; and (2) that the commission exceeded its jurisdiction in fixing the basis for computing the average annual earnings of the injured minor.

The facts as disclosed by the testimony, which supports the findings, are in brief as follows:

Earle Dean was an intelligent young fellow, nearly 18 years of age. He had been set to operating a drill press, to which was affixed a metallic sign bearing words of warning.

The machine consisted of a drill with an upright shaft meshed into gearings upon a horizontal shaft. In an opinion filed by two of the members of the Industrial Accident Commission the injury and its cause are discussed as follows:

"The vertical shaft at the time of the injury was revolving slowly, and it was easier to wipe it while in motion than when still. While applicant was wiping it he saw a stream of grease running down the framework of the machine from the upper shaft, and, without thinking about the consequences likely to flow from his act, made a dive with his cloth at this stream of grease. The gearing caught the cloth and drew his hand into it, resulting in the loss of two fingers.

"It is clear that the sign warning against wiping the machine while in motion was intended to cover just such unforeseen and unlikely injuries as this.

"It follows, therefore, that if the warning sign, 'Stop this Machine before Repairing, Oiling, Adjusting or Wiping' constituted a safety order and regulation prescribed by the employer, the wiping of the machine by the employé, with full knowledge of the existence of the order, and of the consequences likely to result from its violation, constituted willful misconduct.

"There is no question that applicant knew of the existence of this warning sign, but it is in evidence that he did not know of the consequences likely to result from disobeying it. The reaching for the stream of oil going down the frame of the machine was in obedience to an impulse, thoughtless of danger. He knew better than to try to wipe the gearings while the machine was in motion, and had never done so. Neither the employer's superintendent nor the young man in whose custody applicant was placed had explained to him the risk attendant upon such wiping. Therefore one of the factors of willfulness as laid down by our Supreme Court in the Mayfield Case (Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35, 1 I. A. C. 669), to wit, 'Knowledge of the consequences likely to result from disobedience,' was wanting."

[1] It was held accordingly that—

"Neither of the acts of cleaning said drill nor wiping said shaft was intentionally and deliberately disobedient; that neither of said acts was an act of serious and willful misconduct, and the said injury was not caused by the serious and willful misconduct of the employé."

We cannot say that this finding was not justified by the evidence. It is true that wiping the drill while it was slowly revolving was in violation of the printed warning, but that act did not cause the injury. If the applicant had been holding a cloth in his hand for any purpose and had done the same impulsive act, he would have been entitled to compensation under the authority of the Hyman Case and the cases cited in the opinion therein. The real cause of the injury was the unpremeditated effort to arrest the sudden stream of grease.

[2] The finding with reference to the amount of compensation was based not upon the probable wage of the applicant at the time he should reach the age of 21 years, but upon that which he would be likely to earn "within a reasonable time after attaining the age of 21 years." This was a computation not justified by the statute. Upon the authority of Hyman Bros. Box & Label Co. and Aetna Life Insurance Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, it necessitates the granting of petitioner's prayer.

The award is annulled and the matter is remanded to the Industrial Accident Commission, to the end that such proceedings may be taken as are not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

PERRY v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.

PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. v. SAME.
(S. F. 8918, 8910.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 5, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(7) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION — PROCEEDINGS — WEIGHT OF HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

In workmen's compensation case the weight to be given hearsay evidence made admissible by St. 1917, p. 871, § 60a, is for the Industrial Accident Commission.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §404—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION — EVIDENCE—TRANSACTION WITH DECEASED.

In workmen's compensation case, testimony by employer and his wife as to statements by deceased employé is admissible under the statute, though inadmissible at common law, because of their interest in the controversy.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(7) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION — REVIEW — CONCLUSIVENESS OF FINDING.

Industrial Accident Commission's finding that the relation of employer and employé existed is conclusive upon Supreme Court upon petition to review the commission's order.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT §347—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION — CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE.

Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917, § 25, relating to liability of "principal employers and contracting employers, general or intermediate, for compensation under this act when other than the immediate employer of injured employé," is unconstitutional in so far as it attempts to authorize awarding of compensation against a third person not an employer, notwithstanding Const. art. 20, § 21, as amended October, 1911, and November, 1918, and article 20, § 17½, as amended November, 1914.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §20 — CONSTRUCTION—LEGISLATIVE DEFINITION.

Meaning of terms of constitutional amendment must be construed in the light of their meaning at the time of the adoption of the amendment, and cannot be extended by legislative definition; for such extension would, in effect, be an amendment of the Constitution if accepted as authoritative.

Proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act by Louise Kendall for compensation for death of Robert E. Kendall, opposed by C. E. Perry, immediate employer, and the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, as principal employer. Award made by Industrial Accident Commission, and the employers file petitions for writ of review. Order awarding compensation against C. E. Perry affirmed, and that portion of order awarding compensation against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company reversed.

William B. Bosley, of San Francisco, and John Coghlan, of Madera, for petitioner Pacific Gas & Electric Co.

Gilbert D. Ferrell, of San Francisco, for petitioner Perry.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. Two petitions are filed to review the same order of the Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation for the death of Robert E. Kendall. The award was made under the provisions of section 25 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 831), against C. E. Perry as the immediate employer, and against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company as the principal employer.

Both petitioners claim that the evidence is insufficient to show that the relation of employer and employé existed between Perry and the deceased. The only question of fact in the case is whether the relation between Perry and the deceased was that of employer and employé, or that of a copartnership. It appears from the evidence that Perry, as an independent contractor, entered into a contract with the petitioner Pacific Gas & Electric Company to furnish for $20 a day, a five-ton road roller, with a man and necessary gasoline and supplies, for the purpose of rolling the earth that had been filled into a trench in which the gas mains of the petitioning company had been laid. After the making of this contract Perry entered into an arrangement with the deceased by which the deceased operated the roller in question. The deceased was crushed between a heavy automobile truck and the road roller while so engaged, and so injured that he died. In the absence of other evidence the law would imply a contract of employment. That a proposition was made by Perry to the deceased by which the latter was to operate the road roller upon a "fifty-fifty basis" is established by the testimony of Perry and others, and is found by the commission to be a fact. The commission also found that the proposition was never accepted, but was still under consideration at the time of the fatal accident. Perry and his wife testified to conversations with the deceased tending to show an acceptance of Perry's proposition. To rebut this evidence the testimony of decedent's wife, his sister, and other witnesses was received to prove declarations of the deceased made from time to time and up to the day before the accident, to the effect that the deal between Perry and himself had not been consummated. This was hearsay, and petitioner Perry, conceding its admissibility under the express provisions of the statute (Stats. 1917, § 60a), states:

"It may be said that it is for the commission alone to say as to the weight or credibility to be given to this evidence. If so, then the commission may, arbitrarily or otherwise, as in the present case, disregard in toto all evidence heretofore considered by the law and the courts as admissible and entitled to any consideration at all, and base its findings on the sandy foundations of some hearsay evidence, giving to such hearsay as great or greater weight than it would be entitled if it were concededly of the most competent character, without limitation on the commission of any sort, or redress on the part of one aggrieved thereby."

[1] It being granted that the testimony was admissible, it follows, of course, that the weight of the evidence is to be determined by the commission. It is true that, when we depart from well-recognized principles of law concerning the admissibility of evidence, we embark upon a sea of difficulty. This was pointed out in August, 1915, in Englebreton v. Industrial Accident Commission, 170 Cal. 793, 151 Pac. 421, concerning hearsay evidence. The Legislature, however, has since expressly provided that neither the commission nor its referees—

"shall be bound by the common law or statutory rules of evidence or procedure, * * * nor shall any order, award, rule or regulation be invalidated because of the admission into the record, and use as proof of any fact in dispute, of any evidence not admissible under the said common law or statutory rules of evidence and procedure." Stats. 1917, p. 871, § 60a.

Similar provisions of the law of 1915 have been considered by this court and upheld. Stats. 1915, p. 1102, § 77a; Western Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Com'n, 174 Cal. 315, 163 Pac. 60; Employers' Liability Ass'n Co. v. Industrial Accident Com'n, 177 Pac. 273.

[2, 3] It may be remarked, however, in this connection that the testimony of both Perry and his wife upon which he relies to establish the fact of acceptance by deceased, although permitted by our statute, was inadmissible under the common law, on the ground of their interest in the controversy. 1 Greenleaf on Ev., §§ 326, 328c, 333b, 334, 335, 341; Dawley v. Ayers, 23 Cal. 108. The finding of the commission that the relationship between Perry and the deceased was that of employer and employé is binding upon this court.

[4, 5] The Pacific Gas & Electric Company asks for a review on the additional ground that section 25 of the act of 1917 is unconstitutional, and that therefore the commission had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding or to make the award against it. It has been held that the state Constitution did not contemplate a law authorizing an award of compensation by the Industrial Accident Commission against some person other than the employer. Carstens v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 572, 158 Pac. 218; Sturdivant v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 581, 158 Pac. 222; Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 407, 156 Pac. 491, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 390. It was therefore held that section 30 of the Workmen's Compensation, etc., Act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, c. 176, p. 294) was violative of article 20, § 21, of the Constitution. The Workmen's Compensation, etc., Act of 1917 changes the language of the corresponding section (25), so that instead of using the word "principals" the words "principal employers" are used, and instead of the word "contractors" the words "contracting employers, general or intermediate," are used (section 30, Stats. 1917, p. 853); but the change does not meet the constitutional difficulty, for the reason that the terms "employers," "employés" and "employment," as used in section 21, art. 20, of the Constitution, as amended in October, 1911, must be construed in the light of their meaning at the time of the adoption of the amendment, and cannot be extended by legislative definition, for such extension would, in effect, be an amendment of the Constitution, if accepted as authoritative. See Employers' Liability Assurance Co. v. Industrial Accident Com'n, 177 Pac. 273, and cases there cited. It would follow, therefore, that the reasons for holding section 30 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913 unconstitutional would apply with equal force to section 25 of the act of 1917. Carstens v. Pillsbury and other cases supra. Respondent, however, contends that the legislative power was enlarged by the addition of section 17½, art. 20, to the Constitution by an amendment adopted November 3, 1914, and that such amendment authorizes the legislation in question. This amendment was in force at the time of the decision in Carstens v. Pillsbury, supra, decided in 1916, and no contention was then made by respondents that it authorized the legislation in question. It provides that:

"The Legislature may, by appropriate legislation, provide for the establishment of a minimum wage for women and minors and may provide for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of any and all employés. No provision of this Constitution shall be construed as a limitation upon the authority of the Legislature to confer upon any commission now or hereafter created, such power and authority as the Legislature may deem requisite to carry out the provisions of this section."

It is contended that the language "and may provide for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of any and all employés" and the last sentence of the amendment "gives unlimited scope to the Legislature in conferring jurisdiction upon respondent commission." The Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917 provides in section 1:

"This act and each and every part thereof is an expression of the police power and is also intended to make effective and apply to a complete system of workmen's compensation the provisions of section seventeen and one-half of article twenty and section twenty-one of article twenty of the Constitution of the state of California. A complete system of workmen's compensation includes adequate provision for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of any and all employés and those dependent upon them for support to the extent of relieving from the consequences of any injury incurred by employés in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party," etc.

These recitals in the legislative act by which it is sought to designate the source of constitutional power to enact the statute have no weight other than as an expression of the legislative opinion that the law is constitutional—an inference which arises with equal force from the fact of its enactment. It is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that section 17½ only purports, so far as here involved, to authorize legislation with reference to "employés," and its application, therefore, must be based upon the existence of an employment. The same considerations that led this court to hold unconstitutional the effort of the Legislature to extend the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act to relations other than those of employer and employé would apply with equal force to legislation under this section. It is not, therefore, necessary for us, in this action, to further construe section 17½. It is not improper to observe, however, that the printed arguments for and against that amendment, submitted with the proposed amendment, to the people at the election in 1914, are wholly confined to a consideration of the law as affecting the establishment of a minimum wage for women and minors. It is true, of course, that this fact would not limit the plain language of the constitutional provision in question. But, in view of its broad general terms, that fact is worthy of consideration in ascertaining the intent of the people in adopting the amendment. From these considerations it is manifest that no authority is thereby given to impose liability upon third persons for injuries to employés.

Respondent calls our attention to an amendment of section 21, art. 20, adopted at the general election in November, 1918. This amendment completely revises that section. As it was adopted long after the accident in question, it is conceded that it has no application, save, as is contended, that the last paragraph of the amendment has—

"swept away any technical defect which might have existed to hamper the full exercise of jurisdiction by the Industrial Accident Commission under the statute which was in force when the amendment was adopted. The portion of the amendment thus relied upon is as follows: 'Nothing contained herein shall be taken or construed to hamper or render ineffectual in any measure the creation and existence of the Industrial Accident Commission of this state, or the state compensation insurance fund, the creation and existence of which, with all the functions vested in them are hereby ratified and confirmed.' " (Italics ours.)

For the purposes of this case it is sufficient to notice that, so far as the amendment in effect ratifies and confirms existing legislation purporting to vest power in the commission to award compensation against persons other than the employer, such power never was vested in the commission, for the reason that the legislative attempt to vest such power was unconstitutional and void. Carstens v. Pillsbury, supra. The amendment does not attempt to ratify this futile legislation, but only to ratify in the commission "functions vested in them." This amendment did not, therefore, purport to extend the power of the commission beyond that which had theretofore been lawfully vested in them. The fact, if it be a fact, that the commission was exercising the functions provided by the law of 1917 (section 25), that is, that they were in fact awarding compensation to employes against others than their employers, does not "vest" such functions within the meaning of the amendment, which must obviously refer to legal authority. It should be observed that the amendment did not attempt to ratify the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917, but merely to confirm powers already lawfully vested in the commission. This distinction can be best emphasized, perhaps, by calling attention to the difference between the language under consideration and that of the constitutional amendment of October 10, 1911, with relation to the Railroad Commission and the Railroad Commission Act (Const. art. 12, § 22), wherein it was provided as follows:

"The provisions of this section shall not be construed to repeal in whole or in part any existing law not inconsistent herewith, and the 'Railroad Commission Act' of this state approved February 10, 1911, shall be construed with reference to this constitutional provision and any other constitutional provision becoming operative concurrently herewith. And the said act shall have the same force and effect as if the same had been passed after the adoption of this provision. * * *

In the latter case the legislation was expressly ratified and the method of its interpretation pointed out in the constitutional amendment, while the amendment under consideration merely purports to ratify powers and functions already vested in the commission. If it was proposed to ratify and confirm legislation otherwise unconstitutional, that purpose should have been clearly expressed.

It follows, then, that section 25 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 853) is unconstitutional in so far as it attempts to authorize the awarding of compensation against a third person not an employer, for the same reason that the previous statute was unconstitutional, and that the amendment to section 21 of article 20 of the Constitution does not ratify the legislation condemned as unconstitutional in Carstens v. Pillsbury, supra.

Petitioner Perry also complains that the award was excessive, but, upon the basis of his own testimony that one could work at the business 260 days in a year at $6 to $7 a day, the award was not excessive.

The order awarding compensation against petitioner C. E. Perry is affirmed, and that portion of the order seeking to award compensation against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company is annulled.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; LENNON, J.; MELVIN, J.; OLNEY, J.

LAWLOR, J. (concurring). I concur specially in the judgment and in what is said on the question whether the relationship of employer and employé existed between C. E. Perry and the deceased. I also concur in the judgment on the constitutional question. This I would not be prepared to do, however, if the questions decided in Carstens v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 572, 158 Pac. 218, and Sturdivant v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 581, 158 Pac. 222, were now presented for the first time. I dissented in those cases principally for the reason that, in my opinion, the grant of power to the Legislature (section 21, art. 20, Const.) authorized that body, in order to more fully realize the fundamental objects of the new order of rights and liabilities, to create and enforce a liability against the owner, the general contractor, and the subcontractor as well as the immediate employer of the injured workman. To this view I still adhere, but, the contrary opinion having become the settled law of the state, I think the decision reached herein must be accepted.

In re WALKER'S ESTATE.

WALKER et al. v. NASON.

(L. A. No. 5854.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 5, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚬1067—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTION—HARMLESS ERROR.

Though appellant was entitled to a specific instruction on an issue, yet where issue was easily comprehended, and jury could not have failed to understand from given instruction that verdict would go for appellant if they found issue in his favor, refusal of specific instruction was not prejudicial.

2. BASTARDS ⚬5—LEGITIMACY—EVIDENCE OF PRIOR ACTS OF INFIDELITY.

That wife had given birth to an illegitimate child was inadmissible to show that later children were illegitimate, under Civ. Code, § 194, as to children born within 10 months after dissolution of marriage being presumed legitimate.

3. BASTARDS ⚬3—LEGITIMACY—PRESUMPTION.

The presumption of legitimacy goes at least to the extent that, if by the laws of nature it is possible that the husband is the father, legitimacy is conclusively presumed, except where husband and wife are white and the child a mulatto.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚬1097(1)—LAW OF CASE—CONFLICT.

Where two views adopted on former appeal are in direct conflict, neither is the law of the case, and it is necessary to examine the question de novo.

5. BASTARDS ⚬5—EVIDENCE OF NONINTERCOURSE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The English rule permitting evidence of nonintercourse, even where the parties are cohabiting, is not the rule in California, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 5.

6. BASTARDS ⚬5—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

It is always permissible to show that it was not possible by the laws of nature for the husband to be the father, as by showing impotency on his part, want of intercourse during the possible period of conception, or that the child is of a race and color such that it could not have been conceived by the husband.

7. BASTARDS ⚬5—WITNESSES ⚬57—EVIDENCE OF NONINTERCOURSE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The fact that it was not possible by the laws of nature for the husband to be the father, where that fact is in issue, is to be inquired into in the same manner as any other fact which is the subject of judicial inquiry, and any competent evidence relevant to the question is admissible as in other cases, but it is the rule in California, as in many jurisdictions, that neither the husband nor the wife is competent to testify to lack of intercourse.

8. BASTARDS ⚬6—ILLEGITIMACY—PROOF—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence that the husband could not by the laws of nature be the father, as, for example, because of lack of intercourse with the mother, is not required to be such as to prove it beyond any reasonable doubt; it being essential only that proof be clear and satisfactory.

9. BASTARDS ⚬6—LEGITIMACY—PRESUMPTION—GENERAL RULE.

The rule that presumption of legitimacy is conclusive, if it were possible by the laws of nature for the husband to be the father, does not operate to change the general rule that in civil cases the issue is to be determined upon the preponderance of the evidence.

10. BASTARDS ⚬5—ILLEGITIMACY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

On issue of illegitimacy, court did not err in not confining the evidence to a showing of want of opportunity for intercourse between deceased and his wife.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚬1214—DECISION IN ACCORDANCE WITH MANDATE OF COURT ON APPEAL—REVIEW.

Where one of the grounds upon which a second trial was directed was the admission of evidence in question, error cannot be predicated upon its rejection by the trial court, regardless of whether ruling is not, in the present judgment of the court on appeal, reconcilable with the principle underlying other rulings in the same decision; the ruling being specific and constituting a mandate to the lower court.

12. BASTARDS ⚬3, 5—LEGITIMACY—PRESUMPTION.

On issue of nonintercourse by husband, evidence of wife's relation with other men is wholly immaterial, since such relation may have existed, and yet, if intercourse were had with husband during period of possible conception, the presumption is conclusive that the children are his.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚬1064(2)—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION—HARMLESS ERROR.

In controversy involving question whether two children were the children of deceased and entitled to share in his estate, instruction that interlocutory decree for deceased husband in divorce suit, standing alone, was entitled to little weight, while clearly an instruction on the weight of evidence, held not prejudicial.

14. BASTARDS ⚬6—ILLEGITIMACY—PROOF.

Before the jury can find that the children in question are illegitimate, they must find on clear and satisfactory proof that decedent, alleged husband, "could not be their father."

15. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⚬33—DISCHARGE OF ADMINISTRATRIX AS AFFECTING JURISDICTION.

The court did not lose jurisdiction of estate by order discharging administratrix, since order was founded and conditioned on decree of distribution, which, when vacated on appeal, left the matter as if no decree had been made.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Cornelius Walker, deceased. Mabel A. Nason, as administratrix, filed her final account and petition for distribution to her as the only heir, whereupon Mrs. Mabel E. Walker, as guardian of her two sons, filed a counterpetition for distribution. From a decree of distribution rendered, Nason appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, Nason v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 179 P. 454.

Geo. M. Harker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Schmidt & Riggins, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. The decedent, Cornelius Walker, died intestate November 20, 1913. He left surviving him as his only heirs, then in being, his wife, Mabel E. Walker, and a daughter by a previous marriage, Mabel A. Nason. A few months before his death—that is, on July 3, 1913—he had secured an interlocutory decree of divorce from his wife on the ground of desertion. He had also made a property settlement with her, whereby she released any interest in his estate, with the result that on his death his daughter was the only heir then in being who was interested in the estate.

On April 11, 1914, something under five months after the decedent's death and nine months and eight days after the interlocutory decree of divorce, his widow gave birth to twin sons, who were named Edwin N. Walker and E. Earl Walker.

On the death of Walker, his daughter was appointed administratrix of his estate, and something more than a year later filed her final account as such, and petitioned that the estate be distributed to her as the only heir. Thereupon Mrs. Walker, as the guardian of her twin sons mentioned, filed a counter petition for distribution of the estate equally to them with the daughter, as being children of Walker. To this petition the daughter filed an answer, denying that the twins were the children of Walker, and alleging that they were illegitimate.

The issue of legitimacy so presented has been tried twice, each time before a jury. On the first trial the jury found the children illegitimate; an appeal was taken on their behalf, and a new trial ordered by this court for errors in the admission of evidence and the giving of instructions. Estate of Walker, 176 Cal. 402, 168 Pac. 689. On the second trial the jury found the children legitimate, and a decree of distribution was made, based upon this verdict. From this decree the present appeal is prosecuted by the daughter, Mrs. Nason.

On the first appeal it was held, in effect, that under section 194 of the Civil Code, providing that a child born within 10 months after the dissolution of the marriage of the mother is presumed legitimate, the children here involved must be presumed legitimate, and that this presumption could be overcome only by proper and sufficient evidence showing one or more of three alternatives, namely: Either (1) that the husband was impotent; or (2) that he was entirely absent from his wife during the period when the children must have been begotten; or (3) that he was present with his wife only "under such circumstances as afford clear and satisfactory proof that there was no sexual intercourse."

It appeared at the second trial, as at the first, that Walker was not entirely absent from his wife during the period of possible conception. It should, in fact, be noted that his wife testified to acts of intercourse during this period. The second of the alternatives mentioned was therefore not present in the case, and the trial revolved around the other two—the questions as to the impotency of the decedent, and as to his having been present with his wife only "under such circumstances as afford clear and satisfactory proof that there was no sexual intercourse."

[1] The serious questions on this appeal arise in connection with the second of these two last-mentioned alternatives. Before discussing them, it may be well to dispose of the single question in connection with the first—the alleged impotency of the decedent. The appellant requested, and was refused, a concise and specific instruction that if the jury found the decedent impotent their verdict should be for the appellant. There was evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in so finding, and the appellant was entitled to have the issue so presented submitted to the jury by a direct and specific instruction. It was covered in the instructions given, but not so clearly and definitely as in the one requested. The question involved, however, is one so easily and completely appreciable by a jury as well nigh to preclude the possibility of confusion or misunderstanding. The jury could not have failed to understand from the instructions given, taken in connection with the whole course of the trial, both that they were to pass on the alleged impotency of the decedent, and also that, if they found him impotent, their verdict should be for appellant. This, after all, was the only purpose of the particular instruction requested, and, that purpose being accomplished, it cannot be said that the refusal to give the particular instruction requested was prejudicial.

Passing now to the questions arising in connection with the second alternative involved here, namely, that Walker was present with his wife during the time of possible conception only under circumstances "such as afford clear and satisfactory proof that there was no sexual intercourse," it is not clear just what meaning should be given to the decision on the first appeal. There are two possible views, each in accordance with a rule found in other jurisdictions.

The first of these is that, where it appears that the husband and wife have met during the time when the child must have been begotten, the presumption of legitimacy can be overcome only by it being made to appear that the circumstances under which the husband and wife met were such as to afford no opportunity for sexual intercourse, even if they had been so minded, or, putting it conversely, that, if they met under circumstances which did afford such opportunity, it is conclusively presumed that intercourse did take place, and the child legitimate, and evidence that intercourse did not in fact take place is not admissible. The second possible view is that, even though the parties met under circumstances which afforded an opportunity for intercourse, yet the presumption of legitimacy can be overcome by showing that it was not in fact indulged in, and evidence showing, or tending to show, this is admissible.

The necessity for a determination as between these two possible constructions arises from the fact that if the first construction is the true one, and therefore the law of the case, it is practically an end of this appeal, since every error contended for by the appellant becomes immaterial, if the evidence should have been confined to a showing that the parties met only under circumstances which did not afford an opportunity for intercourse. There was practically no such evidence, although it did appear that the parties had met. The cause was not tried by the lower court on that theory, and was submitted to the jury on a hypothesis much more favorable to the appellant than that to which she was entitled, if the issue and the evidence should have been so confined.

In support of the view that the evidence should not be so confined is the ruling on the first appeal that evidence of the relations between the parties, and of their hostile feelings towards each other, was admissible "as tending to establish a relationship from which, depending upon other circumstances established and evidence of the disposition and character of the parties, the jury might fairly draw the inference that, notwithstanding opportunity therefor, intercourse was not had on the occasion when the husband visited his wife." For the purpose of showing such relationship, the introduction in evidence of the interlocutory decree of divorce was approved, as was also evidence of quarrels between the parties, of the exchange of abusive epithets between them, and of statements on the part of the husband indicating feeling against his wife. The admission of such evidence, and the ground upon which its admission is expressly put, cannot be reconciled with the view that, when once it appears that the parties have met under circumstances which permitted intercourse if they were so inclined, it is conclusively presumed that it took place, and that the evidence must be confined to showing that the parties did not meet under such circumstances.

[2] On the other hand, in support of the view that the issue and the evidence should be so confined, is the ruling on the former appeal that evidence was not admissible that the wife had given birth to an illegitimate child on February 1, 1913, about a month prior to the husband commencing his suit for divorce, and about five months prior to the interlocutory decree and the period of possible conception of the children here involved, and that this fact was known to the husband. Evidence merely that the wife had given birth to an illegitimate child was clearly inadmissible under either rule, or, in fact, under any rule. Standing alone, it would not tend to show that the husband did not have intercourse with the mother five months later, and if such intercourse was had the presumption that the children here are the fruit of it is conclusive.

[3] There is no doubt but that the presumption of legitimacy goes at least to this extent: That if it appear that by the laws of nature it is possible that the husband is the father (that is, if it appears that the husband had intercourse with the mother during the period of possible conception), legitimacy is conclusively presumed, and no guessing or weighing of probabilities as to paternity because of relations between the mother and other men will be permitted. The only exception to this, if it really be an exception, is where it is clear that, although the husband had intercourse with the wife, yet by the laws of nature it is impossible for him to have been the father, as, for instance, where husband and wife are white and the child a mulatto. But when the evidence goes further than merely showing a previous illegitimate birth from the mother, and shows that the husband knew of this fact, it is not possible to reconcile its exclusion with a rule admitting evidence of the relationship and feeling between the parties to rebut any inference that intercourse took place between them on the occasions when they met. It is difficult to conceive of anything which would more profoundly affect their relations than the knowledge or belief on the husband's part that his wife had a few months before given birth to a child conceived in adultery.

[4] These two views are both adopted on the former appeal. They are in direct conflict, with the result that neither is the law of the case (Gage v. Downey, 94 Cal. 241, 29 Pac. 635), and it is necessary to examine the question de novo. The old English rule, at least as generally stated, was that if the husband were within the king's dominion and were not incapable of procreation, the child was presumed legitimate regardless of all other facts. It was carried to ridiculous extremes:

"Although a woman has issue in adultery, nevertheless, by the common law, if her husband is able to beget children and is within the four seas, the issue is not regarded as bastard. And this presumption is so strong that if a feme covert goes into another country and there takes a husband and has issue by him, the first husband being within the four seas, the issue is a mulier; but it is otherwise if the baron be over the seas." (4 Viner, Abr. Bastard, A, 2, p. 216.)

In modern times this harsh rule, like other similar rules of the common law, has been much modified, so that in general the actual fact may be examined into and the question not determined by formal rules.

Much the same change is apparently found in the Roman law. In the very interesting preface by Denis Le Marchant to his report published in 1828 of the Gardner Peerage Case, p. xiii, it is said:

"The earliest authority on this subject to which we can safely refer is contained in the Digest, from whence it has descended into most of the Codes of modern Europe. The same definition of legitimacy, though expressed in different terms, is given by two of the great Roman jurists. Paulus declares 'marriage to be proof of paternity,' whilst according to Ulpian 'the issue of a man and his wife are legitimate.' This definition did not originate with either of the writers by whom it is recorded. It probably was of great antiquity; for Julianus, who preceded them by more than a century, tacitly admits it, by determining it to be inapplicable to cases of nonaccess between a husband and wife; 'so that, although a husband who lived constantly with his wife should not be allowed to withhold his recognition of her child, yet where he had been very long absent from her, and she had borne a child during such absence, the law pronounced the child not to be his.' Scaevola and Ulpian admitted this doctrine, but considering the presumption in favor of legitimacy to be still too strong, they allowed not only the fact of access, but of sexual intercourse, to be disputed; and 'if it could be satisfactorily established that either from intervening infirmity, or from any other cause, no sexual intercourse between husband and wife had taken place, or if the husband had been in such a state of health as disqualified him from generating, the child who might have been born under these circumstances in the house of the husband, notwithstanding the publicity of its birth, was not the child of the husband.' The causes of adulterine bastardy were thus reduced to two, the impotence of the husband and the absence of sexual intercourse between the husband and wife when the period of the wife's gestation commenced."

The matter of the presumptions in cases of alleged adulterine bastardy came up in England in 1811 for elaborate discussion in the Banbury Peerage Case, reported in the appendix (page 389) to Le Marchant's report of the Gardner Case just mentioned. William, Earl of Banbury, had died in 1632, supposedly childless, but in 1661 one Nicholas laid claim to the dignity of the earldom, as the earl's son. From that time on the matter had been one of frequently recurring dispute. The evidence showed clearly that Nicholas was the son of the earl's wife. He was born about a year before the earl's death. The earl at the time was 80 years of age, while his wife was much younger. They had been married for some 21 years without fruition of the marriage. The birth of Nicholas—or at least the fact that Lady Banbury was his mother—was apparently unknown to the earl. There was much evidence which made it fairly certain that Nicholas was, in fact, not the son of the earl, but of one Lord Vaux. Under these circumstances the committee of the House of Lords proposed several questions to the judges, and, among others, the question (page 430) whether the presumption of legitimacy could "be lawfully rebutted by evidence that such access did not take place between the husband and wife as by the law of nature is necessary to admit the husband to be the father of the child." The answer to this question and further questions to the judges which followed, together with their answers, are thus reported (pages 433-436):

"The Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas (Sir James Mansfield), having conferred with his brethren, informed the committee that they were unanimously of opinion: 'That the presumption of legitimacy arising from the birth of a child during wedlock, the husband and wife not being proved to be impotent, and having opportunities of access to each other, during the period in which a child could be begotten and born in the course of nature, may be rebutted by circumstances inducing a contrary presumption.'

"The following question was then put to the judges: 'Whether the fact of the birth of a child from a woman united to a man by lawful wedlock, be always, or be not always by the law of England prima facie evidence that such child is legitimate; and whether, in every case in which there is prima facie evidence of any right existing in any person, the onus probandi be always, or be not always, upon the person or party calling such right in question; whether such prima facie evidence of legitimacy may always, or may not always, be lawfully rebutted by satisfactory evidence that such access did not take place between the husband and wife as by the laws of nature is necessary in order for the man to be in fact the father of the child; whether the physical fact of impotency, or of nonaccess, or of nongenerating access (as the case may be) may always be lawfully proved, and can only be lawfully proved by means of such legal evidence as is strictly admissible in every other case, in which it is necessary by the laws of England that a physical fact be proved.'

"The following question was also proposed to the judges: 'Whether evidence may be received and acted upon to bastardize a child born in wedlock, after proof given of such access of the husband and wife, by which, according to the laws of nature, he might be the father of such child; the husband not being impotent, except such proof as goes to negative the fact of generating access?' 'Whether such proof must not be regulated by the same principles as are applicable to the legal establishment of any other fact?' To which the judges answered: 'That after proof given of such access of the husband and wife, by which, according to the laws of nature, he might be the father of the child (by which they understood proof of sexual intercourse between them), no evidence could be received, except it tended to falsify the proof that such intercourse had taken place, such proof must be regulated by the same principles as were applicable to the establishment of any other fact.'

"Afterwards, the following questions were put to the judges: '(1) Whether, in every case where a child is born in lawful wedlock, sexual intercourse is not by law presumed to have taken place after the marriage, between the husband and wife (the husband not being proved to be separated from her by sentence of divorce), until the contrary is proved by evidence sufficient to establish the fact of such nonaccess, as negatives such presumption of sexual intercourse, within the period when, according to the laws of nature, he might be the father of such child? (2) Whether the legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock (the husband not being proved to be separated from his wife by sentence of divorce) can be legally resisted, by the proof of any other facts or circumstances than such as are sufficient to establish the fact of nonaccess during the period within which the husband, by the laws of nature, might be the father of such child; and whether any other question but such nonaccess can be legally left to a jury, upon a trial, in the courts of law, to repel the presumption of the legitimacy of a child so circumstanced?'

"The Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas delivered the unanimous opinion of the judges as follows: '(1) That in every case where a child is born in lawful wedlock, the husband not being separated from his wife by a sentence of divorce, sexual intercourse is presumed to have taken place between the husband and wife, until that presumption is encountered by such evidence as proves, to the satisfaction of those who are to decide the question, that such sexual intercourse did not take place at any time, when by such intercourse the husband could, according to the laws of nature, be the father of such child. (2) That the presumption of the legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock, the husband not being separated from his wife by a sentence of divorce, can only be legally resisted by evidence of such facts or circumstances as are sufficient to prove, to the satisfaction of those who are to decide the question, that such sexual intercourse did not take place between the husband and the wife at any time when, by such intercourse, the husband could, by the laws of nature, be the father of such child. Where the legitimacy of a child in such a case is disputed, on the ground that the husband was not the father of such child, the question to be left to the jury is whether the husband was the father of such child; and the evidence to prove that he was not the father must be of such facts and circumstances as are sufficient to prove, to the satisfaction of a jury, that no sexual intercourse took place between the husband and wife at any time, when, by such intercourse, the husband, by the laws of nature, could be the father of such child. The non-existence of sexual intercourse is generally expressed by the words "nonaccess of the husband to the wife"; and we understand those expressions, as applied to the present question, as meaning the same thing, because, in one sense of the word "access," the husband may be said to have access to his wife, as being in the same place, or the same house, and yet, under such circumstances as, instead of proving, tend to disprove that any sexual intercourse took place between them.'"

For the purposes of the present discussion two points in connection with these questions and answers are to be particularly noted: First, it was declared specifically that, although the husband and wife might have had opportunities for access to each other, yet evidence was admissible to rebut any inference from this that they did in fact have it; second, that the word "access" is used in the sense of sexual intercourse. The importance of this second point lies in the fact that there has been confusion as to the meaning of the word in this connection. It has been assumed that it meant only "access" in the sense that the husband saw or visited his wife—had "access" to her presence. It is largely from this misunderstanding of the sense in which this particular word was used that the impression has arisen that when "access" by the husband to the wife, in the sense of their meeting so as to afford an opportunity for sexual intercourse, is shown, the matter is concluded, and proof that intercourse did not take place is not admissible. An instance of this confusion is Bury v. Philpot, 2 My. & K. 349, 39 Eng. Rep. Full Reprint, 977, decided in 1834 and frequently cited, wherein the Master of the Rolls, Sir John Leach, declared:

"Access is such access as affords opportunity of sexual intercourse; and where the fact of such access between husband and wife within a period capable of raising the legal inference as to the legitimacy of an after-born child is not disputed, probabilities can have no weight; and a case ought never to be sent to a jury."

Upon the delivery in the Banbury Case of the answers quoted, Lord Redesdale (page 436), Lord Ellenborough (page 455) and Lord Eldon (page 484) delivered opinions following the rules contained in the answers and holding that Nicholas was illegitimate. Lord Erskine (page 464) delivered an opinion to the contrary, maintaining that the presumption of legitimacy could be overcome only by proof of nonaccess in the sense of a lack of opportunity for sexual intercourse. The committee then divided; the majority presenting a report against the claimant, a descendant of Nicholas, which was adopted by the House.

The answers to the questions so propounded have ever since been followed as the law of England, notwithstanding Bury v. Philpot, supra. Thus in the leading case of Hargrave v. Hargrave, 9 Beav. 552, 50 Eng. Rep. Full Reprint, 457, from which the language quoted on the first appeal in this case as stating the general principles applicable is taken, Lord Langdale said:

"In the course of the investigation I apprehend that evidence of every kind, direct or presumptive, may be adduced, for the purpose of showing the absence of sexual intercourse, which, in cases where there has been some society, intercourse, or access, has been called nongenerating access. We have therefore to attend to the conduct and the feelings, as evidenced by the conduct of the parties towards each other and the offspring, and even to the declarations accompanying acts, which are properly evidence. Such circumstances are of no avail against proper evidence of generating access; but they may have weight, when the effect of that evidence is doubtful."

See, also, Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. & Fin. 163; Cope v. Cope, 5 Car. & P. 604, 24 Eng. C. L. 730; Reg. v. Mansfield, 1 G. & D. 7, 1 Q. B. 444; Gordon v. Gordon, [1903] Pr. Div. 141.

Any detailed consideration of the American cases is unnecessary, for they, like the subsequent English cases, in the main look back to the Banbury Peerage Case and Hargrave v. Hargrave, supra, in order to determine the rule of the common law, and the differences between the American cases are largely due to a misinterpretation of one or the other of these two leading English cases. See, for an instance, Scanlon v. Walshe, 81 Md. 118, 130, 131, 31 Atl. 498, 48 Am. St. Rep. 488. The result of the American decisions is thus stated and correctly, in 3 Rul. C. L. 728:

"But there is considerable conflict of authority on the question whether opportunity of sexual intercourse between them (husband and wife) must be shown to have been impossible to rebut the presumption (of legitimacy). There are authorities which take the position that the question to be presented to the jury in a case of this character is not whether the mother of the child and her husband did or did not have sexual intercourse at or about the time the wife became pregnant, but whether the opportunity for sexual intercourse by any possibility presented itself to them. If it did, then, unless impotency can be shown, the presumption of legitimacy is conclusive. On the other hand, according to this view, if the opportunity could not by any possibility have presented itself to them then the presumption is rebutted. The authorities which take these views are in the minority; the great weight of authority being to the effect that access—that is, an opportunity for sexual intercourse—need not be shown to have been impossible, and that, where an opportunity for sexual intercourse is shown, the presumption favoring legitimacy, while very strong, is not conclusive, and may be rebutted by showing that intercourse did not in fact take place."

[5, 6] The English rule would seem to go so far as to permit evidence of nonintercourse even where the parties are cohabiting; i. e., living together in the same house or apartments. Such is not the rule in this state. Section 1962, subd. 5, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Mills, 137 Cal. 298, 70 Pac. 91, 92 Am. St. Rep. 175. But with this statutory exception the true rule in America, as well as England, is, we believe, that if it is possible by the laws of nature for the husband to be the father (that is, if there was coition and no impotency), no inquiry will be permitted into the probabilities of the case one way or the other, but the presumption of legitimacy is conclusive; and, on the other hand, it is always permitted to show that it was not possible by the laws of nature for the husband to be the father, as by showing impotency on his part, want of intercourse during the possible period of conception, or that the child is of a race or color such that it could not have been conceived by the husband.

[7] The fact that it was not possible by the laws of nature for the husband to be the father, where that fact is in issue, is to be inquired into in the same manner as any other fact which is the subject of judicial inquiry, and any competent evidence relevant to the question is admissible as in other cases; it being the rule, however, in California, as in many jurisdictions, that neither the husband nor the wife is competent to testify to lack of intercourse. Estate of Mills, supra.

[8, 9] It should perhaps be noted that, when it is said that the presumption of legitimacy is conclusive if it were possible by the laws of nature for the husband to be the father, it is not meant that the proof of the fact of such impossibility must itself be beyond possibility of doubt. The two things are very different. The fact to be proven is that the husband could not by the laws of nature be the father, as, for example, because of lack of intercourse with the mother. The evidence of that fact is not required to be such as to prove it beyond any possibility of doubt. A jury would be justified in finding a lack of intercourse, with the consequence that it was impossible that the husband be the father upon evidence which did not show such lack beyond possibility of question. The presumption of legitimacy is strong, and the proof of impotency or nonintercourse must be clear and satisfactory, but this is all. The presumption does not operate to change the general rule that in civil cases the issue is to be determined upon the preponderance of evidence, but, like other presumptions, operates under and beneath that rule.

[10] It remains to apply the foregoing views to the particular case. It is apparent at once that the action of the lower court in not confining the evidence to a showing of want of opportunity for intercourse between Walker and his wife was correct, and that errors complained of by appellant must be judged on the basis that although such opportunity did appear, yet evidence to the point that intercourse during the critical period did not take place was admissible, and the question of whether it did or did not was the real question to be submitted to and decided by the jury.

[11] Of the rulings of the lower court complained of, the most prejudicial to the appellant was the rejection of evidence, both direct and on cross-examination, that Mrs. Walker had given birth to an illegitimate child some five months before Walker must have had intercourse with her, if the children here involved are really his, and that Walker knew of this fact. Such evidence, if admitted, might well have resulted in a different verdict. The matter, however, is concluded by the decision of this court on the former appeal. One of the grounds, if not the principal ground, upon which a second trial was directed, was the admission of this very evidence at the first trial. It is true, as we have said, that such ruling was not, in our present judgment, reconcilable with the principle underlying other rulings in the same decision, nor with the true rule applicable in such cases. But, whatever may be said as to the reasons for it, the ruling itself is specific, and constituted a mandate to the lower court which it was bound to follow. Error cannot be predicated upon the action of the lower court in so doing. The ruling is the law of the case, and does not come within the principle of Gage v. Downey, supra.

[12] Complaint is made that the trial court refused to permit evidence as to who was the father of the twins other than Walker, and at the same time refused to instruct the jury that it was not necessary for them to find who the father was, if Walker was not. But it is clear from what has been said that the evidence was properly confined to proving nonintercourse by the husband. On that issue evidence of relations by the wife with another man or other men is wholly immaterial. Such relations may have existed, and yet, if intercourse were had with the husband during the period of possible conception, the presumption is conclusive that the children are his. As to the refusal to charge the jury that they need not find who the father was, if Walker was not, the jury were explicitly instructed that the only question for them to determine was whether the children were the children of Walker. The instructions given and the whole course of the trial make it plain that the jury could not have been misled on this point, or have conceived it their duty to find Walker to be the father unless they could determine the identity of the man who was.

The lower court several times charged the jury that the presumption of legitimacy could be overcome only by "clear and satisfactory" evidence, to which was added on one occasion the adjective "convincing" and on another the adjective "certain," and the giving of such instructions is assigned as error; that the presumption of legitimacy can be overcome only by clear and satisfactory proof is the law. If it were intended by the adjectives "certain" and "convincing" to instruct the jury that the proof must go beyond a reasonable doubt, and change the rule that civil cases are to be determined upon the preponderance of evidence the instruction was incorrect. It does not, however, admit of this interpretation. The jury was expressly instructed that they were to determine the issue by a preponderance of evidence and the context of the instructions containing the adjectives in question makes it plain that they were used in the same sense as "clear and satisfactory," and must have been so understood.

The trial court charged the jury with relation to the decree of interlocutory divorce as follows:

"The interlocutory decree was admissible, among other things, as tending to establish a relationship from which, depending upon other circumstances proved and evidence of the disposition and character of the parties, from which (sic) you might fairly draw the inference that, notwithstanding opportunity therefor, sexual intercourse was not had on the occasions when the husband visited the wife. Nevertheless, standing alone, such decree is entitled to little weight. It did not dissolve nor affect the relationship of husband and wife. It was merely a judicial determination that at the time the children were begotten the wife was not living with her husband; that is, dwelling in the same house with him as his wife."

[13] The portion of this instruction as to the little weight to be given to the fact of an interlocutory decree between the parties is clearly an instruction as to the weight of evidence, and under our constitutional prohibition of such instructions its giving was error. It is true that the instruction is in almost the exact language used by this court on the former appeal in commenting on the interlocutory decree. But the views of an appellate court on the weight of evidence are no more the proper subject of a charge to the jury than similar views of the trial court. If we could bring ourselves to believe that possibly this instruction had had any effect on the jury we would send the cause back for a new trial without hesitation. But we cannot bring ourselves so to believe.

The material point of the interlocutory decree was that it suspended marital rights and obligations and the usual incidents of the marital relation, and destroyed any inference or presumption from the fact of marriage that the parties were living together or having intercourse. But there could have been no mistake in the minds of the jury upon this point. They were charged, probably more favorably to the appellant than the strict rule would warrant, that there was an actual presumption of law arising from the interlocutory decree that the parties did not cohabit, which presumption had to be overcome by evidence, and that in the absence of a reconciliation between them cohabitation would be an act essentially immoral, and there was a presumption of law that an immoral act is not indulged in. Such instructions must have made it clear to the jury just what the effect of the interlocutory decree was, and just what part it could properly play in enabling them to determine the final question of fact submitted to them: Did or did not Walker have intercourse with his wife during the period of possible conception of the children here involved? In view of this, it is not possible to say that the single sentence with regard to the weight to be given the interlocutory decree, standing alone, was prejudicial.

[14] The appellant also complains that the jury were instructed that, before they could find the children illegitimate, they must find on clear and satisfactory proof that "Walker could not be their father." But such instruction, as we have seen, is a correct statement of the law. Counsel has confused the proving by a preponderance of evidence that the husband could not possibly be the father (as to which the jury was accurately charged) with proving beyond a doubt that he could not be. This matter we have already discussed.

The foregoing are the more serious contentions of appellant with respect to the evidence and the instructions. There are quite a number of others, but their discussion would not be helpful, and would still further lengthen this already long opinion. Suffice it to say that the facts of this case are such that we have examined the record carefully, with a view to ascertaining if there were any respect in which it could be fairly said that the jury might have been misled or confused, and that we have found none. Much might be said in regard to the weight of evidence, but that was a matter solely for the trial court, on a motion for a new trial.

The appellant also complains of alleged misconduct at the trial by opposing counsel.

We find no basis for such complaint. The particular conduct most relied on is certain remarks to the jury in the course of argument. But the making of such remarks is denied by opposing counsel, they were not assigned as misconduct at the time, and they were urged before the lower court on a motion for a new trial, and a new trial denied. The trial court was in a better position to pass on the merits of such a complaint, and was also much freer to act, than an appellate court, if the trial seemed to it in any respect unfair.

The last point made by appellant is that the court did not have jurisdiction to make the decree of distribution appealed from; that it had jurisdiction only to preside at the trial "and issue judgment on the verdict," whatever may be meant by that. Now the issue tried was an issue made by the petitions for distribution and the answers thereto. The trial having determined the issue, the decree followed as of course. The point apparently relied on to sustain the appellant's position is that pending the first appeal, and while the first decree of distribution was in effect, the appellant, being the administratrix of the estate, as such administratrix delivered to herself as the only distributee under the decree all the property of the estate, and then had herself discharged as administratrix. All that this really means is that, the first decree of distribution, under which the appellant received the property, having been vacated, the appellant now has property to which she is not entitled and for which she must account. Heydenfeldt v. Superior Court, 117 Cal. 348, 49 Pac. 210; Ashton v. Heydenfeldt, 124 Cal. 14, 56 Pac. 624; Ashton v. Heydenfeldt, 127 Cal. 442, 59 Pac. 759; Ashton v. Heggerty, 130 Cal. 516, 62 Pac. 934; Ashton v. Zeila, etc., Co., 134 Cal. 408, 66 Pac. 494.

It cannot affect the right of the minor children to have a decree distributing to them their part of the estate upon the issue as to their heirship being determined in their favor.

[15] The court did not lose jurisdiction of the estate by the order discharging the administratrix. That order was founded and conditioned on the first decree of distribution, and, this decree having been vacated on appeal, the matter stood as though no decree had ever been made. Ashton v. Heydenfeldt, 124 Cal. 14, 56 Pac. 624.

Decree of distribution affirmed.

TREMBLE v. TUMAN et al. (Civ. 2639.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 29, 1919. Rehearing Denied May 29, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court June 26, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1099(11)—JUDGMENT—LAW OF CASE.

Where on appeal by an owner who sued a contractor and surety judgment for the surety, which was based on special verdicts notwithstanding a general verdict for the owner, it was reversed by the Supreme Court on the ground that under the pleadings the general verdict and special verdicts were not inconsistent, such ruling is the law of the case, and will govern on appeal by the surety from a second judgment in favor of the owner if there is any evidence to sustain the general verdict.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1002—REVIEW—VERDICT.

A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. CONTRACTS ⚡322(4) — BUILDING CONTRACTS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action by the owner against a contractor on building contract and surety, evidence held to warrant the finding that the contractor had abandoned his work so that the owner was warranted in completing the same, and holding the contractor and surety liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Action by C. E. Tremble against G. E. Tuman and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, the last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John W. Stetson, of Oakland, for plaintiff and respondent.

Gavin McNab, of San Francisco, and Clarence Coonan, of Eureka, for defendant and respondent.

BRITTAİN, J. In a suit by the owner against the contractor and his surety for damages for breach of a building contract, judgment was entered in favor of the owner and against the contractor, and in favor of the surety against the owner. The plaintiff appealed on the judgment roll from that part of the judgment in favor of the surety. Prior to the establishment of two divisions thereof, the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District affirmed the judgment. On rehearing the Supreme Court reversed both the decision of the District Court of Appeal and the judgment, directing the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the owner and against the surety. Tremble v. Tuman, 175 Cal. 696, 167 Pac. 142. From the judgment so entered the surety appeals, bringing up a bill of exceptions. The principal contention is that the evidence does not support the judgment.

The building contract was made in May, 1911, for the erection of a building to cost $30,000. Coincident with its execution, the appellant surety company executed its bond in the sum of $7,500 to the owner for the faithful performance of the contract. The plaintiff alleged abandonment of the work by the contractor on October 24, 1911, and damages amounting to $7,894.10. She prayed for judgment of $7,500 against the contractor and the surety. The suit was commenced in June, 1913. The issues of fact were submitted to a jury, which returned a general verdict against the defendants jointly for $5,000 and against the contractor alone for $850. To four questions submitted to the jury it answered: (1) The owner's architect did not delay the contractor's work by failure to furnish plans, specifications, or working detail drawings; (2) either the owner or her architect ordered the contractor to do extra work, but no delay was caused thereby; (3) the contractor did not have men working on the building every working day between October 24, 1911, and November 14, 1911; and (4) to the question, "Did Mrs. Tremble or Mr. Reed [her architect] take the job away from the defendant contractor and finish the building herself; if so, when did she take over the job?" the answer was, "Yes; November 14, 1911."

[1] The surety moved for a judgment according to the special verdicts and not in accordance with the general verdict, on the ground that the two verdicts were inconsistent. The motion was granted, and the first judgment entered in favor of the surety. That judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court. The only matter necessarily decided on the first appeal was that under the pleadings the general verdict and the special verdicts were not inconsistent, because the issue of abandonment was presented to the jury and determined by it in the general verdict. This is the law of the case. The determination is conclusive if there was any evidence to sustain the general verdict.

[2, 3] On behalf of the appellant it is contended there was no abandonment merely by reason of the failure of the contractor to act under a notice referring to section 14 of the contract, and further that, apart from abandonment based upon the construction of that section of the contract, there was no evidence of abandonment to support the general verdict. Section 14 provided that, should the contractor fail or refuse "to supply a sufficiency of materials or workmen to complete the contract within the time limited herein * * * for a period of more than three days after having been notified by the owner

In writing to furnish the same, the owner shall have power to furnish and provide said materials or workmen to finish the said work; and the reasonable expenses thereof shall be deducted from the amount of the contract price." The appellant presents a lengthy argument upon the interpretation to be given to this clause and relies on a case where a similar provision was construed. American-Hawaiian Engineering & Construction Company v. Butler, 165 Cal. 497-510, 133 Pac. 280, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 44. On behalf of the respondent it is contended the two cases may be distinguished. It is not necessary to determine the question thus presented. The determination of the jury upon the issue of abandonment is supported by ample evidence irrespective of the provisions of section 14 of the contract.

Various witnesses, some testifying for the plaintiff and some for the defendants, made statements of facts which are summarized below. The contractor was sick. He visited the work only two or three times. One Graves assumed charge of the work for the contractor. The work was delayed. Some of the materialmen were unpaid and refused to furnish further material. Notice was given to supply men and material on October 24, 1911, after which the contractor had no further consultations about the building or the further progress in connection with it, and gave no directions or orders. The average number of men employed on the work for a month was about three—at times as low as two. The work being done was practically nothing, and the job was at a standstill. The subcontractors were not being paid, they were in charge of Cook, the foreman. He was not half working; he was getting no money and was sore. He was not there all the time. On the Monday following the giving of the notice to supply men and material, and on the succeeding Saturday, and the Monday following that, there was no one on the job, nor was there any one working on November 14, 1911, when the owner took charge of the working hours. The architect testified that Graves and he arrived at the conclusion that Tuman could not make any further progress. Tuman had contracted to finance the work in a particular way. He failed to finance the work in that way, and was unable to finance it in any other way.

As against the evidence summarized above, counsel for the appellant admit Mr. Tuman's financial difficulties, but argue there is no evidence that because of such fact Mr. Tuman ever decided to abandon the work, and that the evidence of his financial condition did not show it was impossible for Tuman to complete the work. On the contrary, it is argued that, while Graves, as Tuman's agent, had difficulty in securing funds, and one or two of his attempts to secure them failed before the plaintiff finally took the work out of the hands of Tuman, Graves was successful in making financial arrangements which would insure the completion of the work, though possibly not pay all laborers or materialmen or subcontractors.

This arrangement was one made by Graves with three others, by which on November 6, 1911, 13 days after the notice was given, $10,000 was deposited in the Crocker Bank in the name of G. E. Tuman Company, a corporation. The building contract was with Tuman individually. He did not participate in the formation of the corporation, and was not a director until after his recovery in the following January. The corporation was formed primarily for the purpose of assisting Mr. Tuman in financing his matters while he was financially unable to attend to them himself. His financial difficulties related somewhat to the whole volume of the work that he was doing. The corporation was not to take over the work, and the directors of the corporation were to pass on any of Mr. Tuman's bills that were presented for payment. Between the date of the notice and that when the owner took over the work Reed and Graves had consultations in which Graves assured Reed he hoped to be able to finance the work, but finally, according to the evidence of Mr. Reed, when the latter told him the owner was going to take over the work, Graves said that was the only thing which could be done, that he could not get any money for anything, and that he could not get any money to complete the tile contract, that he could not get any money to pay labor, and that his hands were practically tied. He did not tell Reed he had made arrangements for money for the tile contractor. He never consented in so many words that Mrs. Tremble should take the job out of his or Tuman's hands, nor did he ever object to her doing so.

Counsel for the appellant admit it would be impossible for a contractor to avoid liability for having abandoned the work by merely keeping sufficient workmen on the job to sustain the appearance of continuance of the work, but they argue that abandonment is a question of intention. It may be shown by conduct. In law, the word "abandonment" does not necessarily imply a willful or culpable disregard of the contractor's obligations. It may, as in this case, be applied to a condition of affairs where, through misfortune the contractor is unable to finance his contract, or by reason of his mental or physical incapacity be precluded from carrying on his work or attending to the business incident to it. The cases cited by the appellant upon this subject lay down no other rule. Apart from any question of the interpretation of section 14 of the contract, the most that could be said upon the subject of abandonment is that the jury determined the fact upon conflicting evidence. On appeal this court is bound by such a determination.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that abandonment cannot take place unless the contractor intends to abandon; in other words, unless he expressly or impliedly agrees to quit. It is further argued that the contractor did agree to quit, and therefore the contract was abrogated so that the surety was released; further, that if the contractor did not agree to quit or intend to abandon the work, the owner's interposition amounted to a prevention of performance on the part of the contractor, by which the surety was released. From this it would appear the position of the appellant on the question of abandonment is that the contractor did not agree to quit, and on the question of the surety's liability that he did agree to quit; further, that upon whichever of these two positions the court may stand, the result will be the release of the surety. No true dilemma is presented. The fallacy is in the shifting positions. Either the contractor abandoned the work or he did not. The jury determined that he did. The surety is bound by that determination.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

GOOD v. BROWN et ux. (Civ. 1685.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 22, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 19, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §1010(1)—EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN FINDING.

On appeal in suit to foreclose mortgage on community real estate, finding that there was no agreement as contended by mortgagors that the mortgagee should resort first to personal property of the husband upon which he had a prior mortgage will be sustained, where the mortgagee testified positively that there was no such agreement.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE §267(6)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—MORTGAGE BY HUSBAND AND WIFE—WIFE AS SURETY.

Where the mortgagee promised to furnish groceries, to perform other acts, and bring no action until after harvest, there was sufficient consideration for a mortgage of the wife's interest in community real estate, and she was a principal to the mortgage executed by both her and her husband, and not a surety, so as to be entitled to demand property of the principal to be first applied within Civ. Code, § 2850.

3. MORTGAGES §411 — FORECLOSURE — COMPELLING FORECLOSURE OF PRIOR MORTGAGE.

Generally, the foreclosure of a mortgage will not be barred by the existence of another prior mortgage real or chattel which is security for the same debt.

4. HOMESTEAD §108 — MORTGAGE — FORECLOSURE—EXHAUSTION OF OTHER PROPERTY.

Where husband and wife executed a mortgage upon community real estate, their homestead, as security for the husband's debt, the mortgagee upon suit to foreclose can be compelled to first exhaust a chattel mortgage upon personal property which was also community property before demanding a sale of the homestead.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Foreclosure action by R. E. L. Good against George S. Brown and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Ernest Klette, of Fresno, for appellants.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, and Kitt Gould, of Clovis, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from a judgment of foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate. On the 12th day of June, 1912, the defendant George E. Brown delivered his promissory note in the sum of $1,000, payable 90 days after date, to the plaintiff, and to secure its payment executed a chattel mortgage upon certain personal property. Defendant Cynthia Brown was not a party to this note or mortgage, and when this suit was brought no action had been taken towards enforcing said chattel mortgage, and it existed as a valid lien on said personal property. Thereafter, on February 27, 1914, both of said defendants executed the real estate mortgage to secure the payment of this note. The land is community property, and prior to the execution of said mortgage the said defendant Cynthia Brown had executed and recorded, in due form, a declaration of homestead on said property.

The foregoing facts are undisputed, and in addition it is claimed by appellants that, when the real estate mortgage was signed by Cynthia Brown, it was agreed that the mortgagee would first exhaust the security on the personal property before resorting to the real estate mortgage.

The contentions of appellants are these: First, respondent was required to exhaust the personal property security before resorting to the foreclosure of the real estate mortgage; second, Cynthia J. Brown was a surety on the second obligation, and by virtue of section 2850 of the Civil Code she had a right to demand that the property of the principal, that is, the personal property, be first applied to the discharge of the obligation, or, at least, by reason of the homestead, such was in effect the situation; and, third, by virtue of said agreement, plaintiff was obligated to resort first to the personal security.

[1] As to the last of these, it may be dismissed with the statement that plaintiff testified positively that there was no such agreement, and we are bound by the finding to that effect.

The other contentions may be considered together, and to understand them fully some additional facts should be stated. Before the real estate mortgage was executed, Good became dissatisfied with the chattel mortgage security, and notified Brown that, unless further security should be forthcoming, he would be compelled to take possession of said personal property and dispose of it. Good testified as to this:

"Well, I got Mr. Brown into the store and told him that it was absolutely necessary that I foreclose this chattel mortgage unless I was given additional security, because the stock was getting older every day and being much abused by the work given them, and my security was not sufficient. He at that time made a promise to me that he would give me a mortgage on a piece of property with his wife's signature to it. Later he brought the mortgage in and delivered it to me in my office at Clovis and I recorded it."

The following questions and answers indicate the nature of Mrs. Brown's connection with the transaction:

"Q. (by the Court). Mrs. Brown, why did you sign the mortgage? A. Simply because I wanted to get this money to go on with the grain and harvest and to do summer fallowing. Mr. Brown gave us to understand that there was only between six or seven hundred on the thousand. If I signed it, Mr. Good was to put up barley and groceries and summer-fallow the land. My husband told me this. Q. You signed it upon your husband's statement to you that Mr. Good would furnish $300 more over the amount that was for the purpose of buying provisions? A. Yes."

[2] It may be further stated that the plaintiff testified that he agreed not to bring an action to foreclose until after harvest. It thus appears that Mrs. Brown was not a surety, but one of the principal obligors, to the mortgage, which was executed to secure the payment of a community debt, and the promise "to put up barley and groceries and summer-fallow the land" and to bring no action until after harvest afforded sufficient consideration to support the hypothecation of her interest in the community real estate. As to this position we deem the citation of authorities unnecessary.

[3] As to the claim that the personal security should have been exhausted first, the general rule seems to be that the foreclosure of a mortgage will not be barred by the existence of another prior mortgage which is security for the same debt. 1 Wiltsee on Mortgage Foreclosure, § 308.

Under the general weight of authority, the rule is the same where the prior one is a chattel mortgage (Id. § 309), although it has been held otherwise in Alabama (Koger v. Weakly, 2 Port. [Ala.] 516).

[4] But the situation is changed by the fact that a homestead had attached to the real property, and it is the humane policy of the law to preserve, if possible, the homestead for the use and home of the family.

The principle is developed and well expressed in Blood v. Munn, 155 Cal. 228, 100 Pac. 694. Therein the mortgagee held a lien on two parcels of land, one being the homestead of the mortgagor, and the other a tract not having that character. Discussing the relation of the parties to the enforcement of the lien, the Supreme Court said that the homestead claimants "stand in the same situation as a surety for the payment of a debt, or the situation of a third person who had a lien upon or interest in only one of two mortgaged parcels, with respect to a prior mortgage upon both." After declaring the equitable right of such surety or third person, and that the right of a homestead claimant is as sacred as that of a surety, the court proceeds:

"For these reasons it has been decided that the homestead claimant may have his homestead protected and preserved as far as possible, when it is covered by a mortgage which also includes other property, by requiring the other property to be sold and applied upon the debt before the sale of the homestead."

In support of this doctrine a large number of authorities is cited. We shall go no further in that direction than to quote the following from 2 Freeman on Executions, § 440:

"Perhaps a more difficult question is: May one who has a lien on homestead and other property be compelled by the homestead claimants to first resort to the latter? On the other side, it is insisted that the right to compel a marshalling of assets never existed in favor of judgment debtors, but only on behalf of persons claiming under them, and that the creation of the lien by the homestead claimants was, in effect, an agreement on their part that the lienholder might, at his discretion, sell any of the property which was subject to such lien, and that such agreement precludes such claimants from exercising any control over such discretion. But homestead laws should be liberally construed, and no intention should be presumed; nor should any interpretation be indulged which is at variance with the natural and obvious purpose of the parties. * * * Hence a mortgage on a homestead and other property may fairly be interpreted as a waiver of the homestead right only as far as may be necessary to secure the debt; in other words, as a stipulation that the homestead may be sold, if the other property proves inadequate to satisfy the mortgagee's demand. Under this interpretation, the homestead claimants are entitled to compel the sale of the other property in preference to the homestead, and need not submit to the sale of the homestead until the other securities have been exhausted, without fully discharging the debt."

Of course, it can make no difference in the application of the principle that the security is included in two mortgages instead of one, or that one covers personal property instead of real estate. In fact, there would seem to be greater reason in case of a chattel mortgage to compel the mortgagee to resort to that before demanding a sale of the homestead.

Nor do we think that the question is affected in the least by the fact that the chattel mortgage covered community property, as did the homestead. If the personal property had been the separate estate of the husband, the wife, regardless of the consideration of the homestead, could, probably, compel a resort to said personal property before a foreclosure of the mortgage on the community property.

The ruling principle here is, though, as we understand it, the superior solicitude of a court of equity for the preservation of a homestead over other property not charged with that character.

We think, therefore, that the court should have suspended judgment in the suit until such time as plaintiff had exhausted the security under said chattel mortgage.

The judgment is reversed.

LISENBBE v. LISENBBE et al. (Civ. 1996.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 24, 1919.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE $\Leftrightarrow$ 262(1)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—EVIDENCE.

In suit to quiet title, defendants relying on presumption that property acquired during coverture is community in character, held, that presumption was overcome by positive testimony of witness.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Action by J. N. Lisenbee against Maud Irene Lisenbee and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. F. Ramage, of Stockton, for appellants.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to quiet title to 43 acres of land in San Joaquin county. Defendant Maud Lisenbee, who was married to Charles S. Lisenbee in 1912 and was his second wife, was the only serious contestant of plaintiff's claim. Her opposition is based primarily upon the contention that the land was community property, and that the conveyance to plaintiff was made to defraud her of her community rights. Twenty acres of the land in controversy were conveyed to Charles Rothwell Lisenbee, a son of Charles S. Lisenbee by a former wife, by a deed from A. S. Gunn and wife, on August 23, 1913. The remaining 23 acres were conveyed by the said Charles S. Lisenbee and Maud Irene Lisenbee to said son on April 17, 1915, and he conveyed both parcels to plaintiff for a valuable consideration on the 30th day of January, 1917. On May 22, 1915, the said Maud Lisenbee brought an action against her husband for divorce on the ground of cruelty. She was denied a decree for the reason that her testimony was not sufficiently corroborated, but on May 19, 1916, she was awarded a certain amount for maintenance, and on November 12, 1917, an execution was issued thereon. This was levied upon the property, and by virtue thereof it was sold to one Floyd Klinger to satisfy said judgment.

Among the court's findings were the following:

"That the title of the 20-acre tract described in the complaint herein never at any time vested in Charles Samuel Lisenbee or Maud I. Lisenbee, his wife, and that the purchase price therefor was paid by Rothwell Lisenbee, and the conveyance of said realty was made to him for that reason. * * * That the 23-acre tract described in the complaint herein was purchased by Charles Samuel Lisenbee with the proceeds derived from the sale of 320 acres of land in Calaveras county that had been his separate and individual property that he owned for more than 20 years prior to his marriage with the defendant Maud Irene Lisenbee, and that for that reason he could convey the title thereto without his said wife, Maud, joining in the conveyance thereof, and that if any fraud or threats were made or practiced, as alleged in the defendant Maud I. Lisenbee's cross-complaint, the evidence thereof was wholly immaterial and such allegations require no findings thereon, as they could not affect the plaintiff's title to the realty in controversy."

There is the additional finding:

"That the deed from Charles and Maud Irene Lisenbee to Rothwell Lisenbee, dated April 17, 1915, was not without consideration, and all the allegations of fraud in the defendant Maud Irene Lisenbee's cross-complaint herein are untrue."

These conveyances to the son were prior to the beginning of said action for divorce, which culminated in the judgment for maintenance, and it is apparent that, if said conveyances were and are valid, appellants are in no position to question the sufficiency of the conveyance to plaintiff.

As to the conveyance of the 20-acre tract to the son, Charles S. Lisenbee testified:

"I went there one Sunday. There was a gentleman told me, Mr. Robert's neighbor, said Mr. Roberts wanted to sell the place. He says, 'You can't see him unless you come here Sunday,' and I came Sunday to see him and brung Rothwell, my son, Charles Rothwell, with me, and Mr. Klinger went with me and went there and looked at the place. Rothwell said he wanted the place, for me to buy it for him, he would pay me for the place. He had a check book of $3,000 of his own and several hundred dollars besides, that he says I could use in buying it. 'Well,' I says, 'son, no use of that, your money is on interest; and I used my money I had off my place up yonder to buy it with, gave Mr. Roberts a check first.'

He testified further that he was repaid a portion of it by his son. However, it is unimportant whether he was repaid the purchase price or not. He testified positively that he paid for the land out of money he received for the sale of other land which he owned prior to his marriage with appellant Maud. He therefore had the legal right to make a gift of it to his son or to convey it to him upon his promise to repay the purchase price. As to this transaction it may be stated there is no evidence whatever of fraud, nor does it appear that the conveyance to the son was in trust for any purpose. It may be added that appellants made no attempt to show that any of the money with which the land was purchased was community property.

Indeed, appellants rely as to that upon the presumption that property acquired during coverture is community in character. This presumption, however, was overcome in the opinion of the trial judge, by the positive testimony of the witness, and we must follow his finding.

The character of the other tract must be likewise considered. The said Charles S. Lisenbee testified positively that it was purchased with money obtained from the sale of land belonging to him before his second marriage. No attempt was made to disprove this. While he seems to have quibbled to a certain extent, was, apparently, an ignorant and somewhat stupid witness, yet his testimony, if believed, is amply sufficient to support the finding of the lower court. It was undoubtedly believed and acted upon, and it is idle to ask an appellate court to set the finding aside because the circumstances may be somewhat suspicious and there may be some reason for believing that he was trying to defraud his wife.

If we concede that the deed of April 17, 1915, executed after his wife had left him, was the result of an intention to place his property beyond her reach, and that it might have been set aside on the ground of fraud, it can be of no avail to appellants, since the deed was not attacked on any such ground, but solely for the reason that the signature of Maud I. Lisenbee was obtained by duress. But, as already shown, this circumstance was immaterial in view of the fact that, upon sufficient evidence, the court found that the land was separate property of the husband.

It follows from the foregoing that appellants' claim of the insufficiency of the evidence to show the delivery of the deed from Rothwell Lisenbee to plaintiff is of no decisive moment. They were not creditors of the plaintiff, and it is really of no legal concern to them whether or not the title became vested in respondent. But, it may be said, the deed to plaintiff was read in evidence without objection, and it carried with it the presumption of delivery at its date, irrespective of any testimony in regard thereto. McGarry v. Robinson, 135 Cal. 314, 67 Pac. 279.

Moreover, there was positive evidence that it was delivered to the attorney for plaintiff at the latter's request and by the former filed for record in the recorder's office.

As to the consideration for the deed, if any be sought, the testimony is contradicted that plaintiff gave his promissory note for $7,000 for the land and thereafter leased it to said Rothwell Lisenbee.

Counsel for appellant Maud I. Lisenbee complains bitterly of the treatment accorded her by her husband; but whatever justification there may be, on moral grounds, for condemnation of his conduct, there seems to be no doubt, from the record before us, upon well-established principles, that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

1. LARCENY $\S$ 61—FROM THE PERSON—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a prosecution for grand larceny by stealing a purse from the pocket of the complaining witness, evidence held to justify a conviction.

2. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 938(1) — NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

In a prosecution for grand larceny, it was not error to overrule a motion for new trial based on newly discovered evidence, where no showing of diligence was made, and it was not probable that the evidence if introduced would have changed the result.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Josephine Goodrich, alias Mrs. Phillips, and another, were convicted of grand larceny, and, from an order denying a motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

Frank E. Murphy, Wm. P. Toscano, of San Francisco, D. P. Eicke, of Stockton, and Francis L. Borden, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendants were convicted of the crime of grand larceny, and they appeal from the order denying their motion for a new trial. The principal contention of appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. We are satisfied, however, that the claim is without substantial merit. After reading the record, we are convinced that, not only does the evidence support the finding of the jury, but there is no reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendants.

It appears without conflict that on September 28, 1918, about 4 p. m., one Song Won Sook, a Korean, was in the act of boarding a railroad train at Stockton, and while getting on the train a purse containing the sum of $61.50 was abstracted and stolen from his pocket. It is a reasonable inference that the theft was committed by the defendants and one Ervine Williams acting in concert and collusion. As to which one actually picked the Korean's pocket there is some uncertainty, but that the three were participants in the crime stands out clear enough. The prosecuting witness understood English quite imperfectly, and, testifying without an interpreter, his statements are not altogether consistent, some of them being even unintelligible, but, regarding and giving full credit to his testimony as a whole, the jury could scarcely doubt the guilt of the defendants. The following from the transcript will indicate the difficulty with which he expressed himself, and it also shows the actual participation in the crime of the three said parties:

"Mr. Rendon: Q. These two take money out of your pocket? A. Yes, two, one more, three. Q. Who take him money out of your pocket, him, two or the other man or three or more or two, how many? A. That time my money. Q. Which one? A. Three. Q. Which one take him out of your pocket? A. That lady. Q. The lady? A. Yes, this lady and give him to him. Q. How know he take him out of your pocket, what for you know? A. (Witness shows) Overcoat here, one man here, lady here, and one man here, take him this way, see. Q. How know he take him, you see him take him? A. No, I no see, I hear, no eye. Q. How you save (know)? A. I no see. One man here that side, nobody see him and she take him this way (shows). Q. How know she take him, how you save? A. Oh, overcoat here hanging down, nobody see that side. Q. How you know him take him money too? A. I know him take him money. I look to see. Q. I see; you feel him right there? A. Yes, sure."

He also testified that there was no one except these three near him at the time of the theft and he details other circumstances that we need not repeat.

Mrs. Winnie Honnold testified:

That she was in the car which the Korean was entering. That she "was sitting there looking out the window, and I turned around, and I saw like a crowd gathered there, and I went to look and see what was going on, and the next thing I saw was a purse looked like it was dropping, and then the man put his hand under it and grabbed it and stuck it in his right-hand pocket, trouser pocket, and walked on out of the car. That man was Mr. Phillips, the defendant."

In describing the position of the parties when the purse was taken, she said:

"The Korean was standing in the middle, and one man in front of him, and the lady (Mrs. Phillips) on the left-hand side and one man in the back," and that they were all right close to the Korean, and that she first saw the purse on the side where the lady stood, and that she saw Phillips catch it with his hand above the floor about the distance of the Korean's knees.

Many circumstances are related by various witnesses that tend to confirm the conclusion of the jury, but we shall do no more than to refer to them in a somewhat general way.

These defendants and said Williams were stopping for a time at the same place in Sacramento without visible means of support. It is true that Mrs. Phillips testified that they were canvassing for an atlas and that they were engaged in that business, but the record discloses certain facts that throw discredit upon her story. They went to Stockton together and put up at the same hotel, and here again the jury had a right to conclude that their visit was for no lawful purpose. They went to the depot together without any apparent reason. There is some pretense that their purpose was to inquire in reference to certain baggage belonging to them, but their subsequent conduct stamps that story as a mere subterfuge. While at the depot they saw the Korean purchase a ticket and replace his purse in his pocket. Defendant Phillips was seen talking suspiciously to his wife. The three arranged themselves in such position as to be able to accomplish the theft with the least difficulty and danger of detection. It is a fair inference that the three in entering the car had no other intention than to perpetrate the larceny. There is no evidence, indeed, that these defendants expected to become passengers, and the explanation of Mrs. Phillips as to why she entered the car is altogether too unreasonable for belief, and the jury undoubtedly rejected it as simulated. Williams testified that he intended to travel on the train, but it appears that he did not purchase a ticket, and there are other circumstances tending to discredit his statement. After the larceny was committed,

Mrs. Phillips and Williams took a seat together, while Phillips hurriedly left the car and made his escape, although some time thereafter he was arrested. When the Korean charged Williams with the theft of his money, the latter and Mrs. Phillips in a fine frenzy of assumed innocence denied the accusation, but significantly suggested that he had lost it and volunteered to assist him in the search for it. As evidence of a guilty conscience, it may be added that Mrs. Phillips denied that she had ever met Williams before, and she made other statements that she afterwards contradicted.

[1] Without further disquisition, we think it may be said that the record is surcharged with indubitable proof that these defendants were justly convicted, and one can hardly resist the conclusion that they are "professional crooks."

[2] The only other point made by appellants is that the court should have granted their motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. All that is said by appellants in their briefs as to this is as follows:

"The defendants' and appellants' motion for a new trial was based upon the fact that new evidence material to the defendants which could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered and produced at the trial, and affidavits (Clerk's Trans. pp. 29 and 30) were presented in support thereof. The affidavits, and motion for new trial are a part of the record and we believe any argument thereon is unnecessary. The facts as presented by the record, speak for themselves."

In view of such a general reference to the affidavits, we would be justified in passing the matter by without investigation. However, we have read the two affidavits, which were offered, and it is quite apparent that they are of slight, if any, importance, and it is not at all probable that if affiants had so testified at the trial the result would have been different. Besides, it may be added that no showing of diligence whatever was made by appellants, and the court was therefore justified in disregarding said affidavits.

The order is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. April 29, 1919.)

TRIAL 404(2) — FINDINGS — ULTIMATE FACT—CONCLUSION OF LAW.

A finding that "the aforesaid agreement and its modifications was fully canceled and terminated in the month of July, 1916, by mutual consent of all the parties thereto," was a finding of an ultimate fact, and is not subject to the objection that it was a conclusion of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Gust Head and another against C. Solomon, Jr. Judgment for defendant upon the complaint and for plaintiff upon the cross-complaint, and plaintiffs appeal on the judgment roll alone. Judgment affirmed.

Rufus Thayer and C. F. Nichols, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Robert S. Norman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRITAIN, J. The appeal is on the judgment roll alone. The suit was for damages for breach of contract to buy and to pay for certain antimony ore. Plaintiffs alleged damages in the sum of $2,697.50. Under the terms of the contract as amended by a subsequent written instruction, the defendant in part payment was to deposit for the account of the plaintiffs the sum of $1,000 cash in a bank in San Francisco. The defendant by cross-complaint alleged a breach of the contract on the part of the plaintiffs to the defendant's damage of $1,000. The court found probative facts in regard to the tender of the deposit and in the same finding the ultimate fact that the defendant had fully complied with all the conditions to be performed under the said agreement as far as the plaintiffs permitted and allowed him to do so. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the probative facts found are at variance with the ultimate fact of tender. It is also contended that a finding reading, "The aforesaid agreement and its modifications was fully canceled and terminated in the month of July, 1916, by mutual consent of all the parties thereto," was a conclusion of law, and that no finding of fact was made upon the essential issue of cancellation of the contract.

The suit was commenced in March, 1917. If by mutual consent the parties to the contract canceled the same before that time, the suit for its breach could not be maintained. The determination of the issue of cancellation adversely to the plaintiffs disposes of the appellants' contention in regard to the matter of tender. A finding "that plaintiff did not rescind said sales" has been held to be a finding of fact. Hollenbach v. Schnabel, 101 Cal. 317, 35 Pac. 872, 40 Am. St. Rep. 57. It was the ultimate fact, just as in this case the finding that the agreement was canceled and terminated by mutual consent of all the parties thereto was the ultimate fact. Weidenmueller v. Stearns, etc., Co., 128 Cal. 626, 61 Pac. 374. The court further found that the plaintiffs were not damaged, and that the defendant was not damaged.

Upon all the findings the court concluded the plaintiffs were not entitled to take anything by their action; that the defendant was not entitled to take anything by his cross-complaint, and the defendant was entitled to costs. Judgment was rendered accordingly. The judgment and conclusions of law are supported by the findings. They were sufficient and within the issues.

The judgment is affirmed.

R. B. Gaylord, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants C. G. Bell and Gertrude Bell from a decree of foreclosure and sale, made in an action by plaintiff to foreclose a chattel mortgage. The facts are briefly that the note and mortgage sued upon were executed by the appellants. The note was for the face value of $275, and bore interest at the rate of 2 per cent. a month. C. G. Bell, one of the defendants and appellants, testified that the sum of $35 was deducted from the face value of the note, and he was given only $240 for the note of $275, and no other consideration. Appellant contends that the court erred in making the decree of foreclosure because the note and mortgage sued upon were void under the provisions of the Personal Property Brokers' Act (Act 2637, General Laws of California), which statute provides that a personal property broker shall not charge or receive interest in excess of the rate of 2 per cent. per month, upon any loan; appellants' contention being that the retention of the bonus of $35 in addition to the 2 per cent. interest was a violation of the statute.

A personal property broker within the meaning of the statute is defined to be:

"* * * Every person or corporation engaged in the business of loaning or advancing money or other thing and taking in whole or in part as security for such loan or advance any chattel mortgage. * * *" Section 1.

There is no evidence in the record that plaintiff was a personal property broker, and the court therefore properly found that plaintiff was not, at the time of the execution and delivery of the note and mortgage, a personal property broker. This finding is in accordance with the rule that, where no evidence upon a question is offered, the court must find the fact to be against the person having the burden of proof. Levison v. Ryan, 75 Cal. 293, 17 Pac. 239. In the present case, as the appellants were relying upon usury as a defense, they had the burden of establishing the necessary elements contemplated by the statute.

The judgment is affirmed.

WARNER et al. v. BERTHOLF. (Civ. 2817.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 24, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1011(1) — FINDING BASED ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE — REVIEW.

Court on appeal cannot disturb finding on conflicting evidence.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 705(10) — LOOKOUT FOR AUTOMOBILE—DUTY OF PEDESTRIAN.

Plaintiff had the right to use the street in the pursuit of her lawful intention to board street car, and contention that although she had once assured herself that no automobile was approaching, it was her duty not to walk along and with the street car without at all times looking behind her, cannot be sustained.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 705(1)—USE OF STREET — DUTY OF DRIVER OF AUTOMOBILE.

It was the duty of defendant in driving her automobile to see persons upon the street in front of her, where, as in this case, her view was unobstructed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Helen H. Warner and others against Ina Bertholf. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Albert H. Elliot, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Albert E. Carter and John D. Murphy, both of Oakland, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment had by plaintiff for damages for personal injuries suffered when the plaintiff was struck by the automobile of the defendant.

As we read the record, it was stipulated by the attorney for the defendant that if any judgment at all should be rendered or entered against the defendant, the judgment of $600, awarded plaintiff in this case, is not excessive, and is proper so far as the amount of the damage is concerned.

Plaintiff was standing on the easterly side of College avenue, in the city of Berkely, intending to board a south-bound car, which she saw approaching on the westerly, or south-bound track. She crossed the street in front of the approaching car, signaled the motorman to stop, and stood waiting for the car to pass. As she so stood, she looked northerly on College avenue, and saw no automobile or vehicle approaching. As the street car passed her, it slowed down, then being some distance north of the customary stop sign. It passed plaintiff, who turned and walked southerly along with the car. At this time she was midway between the side of the car and the westerly curb line of the street. She was facing and walking south, and her back was to the north. While walking in this direction, she was suddenly struck in the back by the automobile of the defendant, and suffered the injuries complained of, and which resulted in the judgment which is brought here for review on this appeal.

The testimony of the plaintiff, as to her position in the street at the time of the accident, and her movements just prior thereto, is corroborated in detail by the testimony of the motorman of the car, and by the conductor, as to the point in the street where she was struck.

[1-3] According to the testimony of defendant and one of her witnesses, plaintiff stepped from the westerly curb of the street, directly in front of the approaching automobile. This conflict in the evidence was reconciled by the trial court, as it was its duty to do, and we cannot disturb its finding on that point. In view of the evidence, which the trial court found to be true, we see no merit in this appeal. The plaintiff had a right to the use of the street in the pursuit of her lawful intention to board the street car. We find no support in appellant's authorities under the facts of this case of the contention made here that it was the duty of the plaintiff, after she had once assured herself that no automobile or other vehicle was approaching, not to walk along and with the street car without at all times looking behind her. Raymond v. Hill, 168 Cal. 473, 143 Pac. 743. It was the duty of the defendant, in driving her automobile, to see persons on the road in front of her, where, as in this case, her view was unobstructed. Barker v. Savas (Utah) 172 Pac. 672.

The judgment is affirmed.

GUIGNI et al. v. RATTO et al. (Civ. 2941.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 2, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 801(5)—MOTION TO DISMISS—DETERMINATION.

On motion to dismiss an appeal from a judgment entered on stipulation, the court will examine the certified copy of the judgment roll solely to determine whether the appeal is within either of the two exceptions to the rule that an appeal does not lie from a consent judgment, namely, cases where there was no jurisdiction, and where the complaint did not state a cause of action.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT $\S$ 291(8)—FORCIBLE DETAINER—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

Complaint alleging that plaintiff leased for a term of years certain premises of which defendant was in possession as a tenant by the month, and that they served written notice on defendant to vacate within three days and he refused to do so, sufficiently states a cause of action for forcible detainer.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by C. Guigni and others against Louis Ratto and others. Judgment was entered for the plaintiffs on stipulation, and defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed.

W. P. Caubu, John T. Williams, and Leo R. Friedman, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Harry I. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The respondents move to dismiss the appeal from a judgment entered upon stipulation.

The respondents sued the appellant and fictitious defendants for unlawful detainer. After demurrer, the defendant answered on January 13, 1919. Under date of January 16, 1919, a stipulation, filed February 8, 1919, was made providing that judgment might be entered for the plaintiffs and against the defendants for restitution of the premises, cancellation of lease, and $250 damages. The stipulation further provided execution should be stayed until March 1, 1919. On February 8, 1919, judgment was signed in accordance with the terms of the stipulation, including provision for the stay of execution until March 1, 1919. By successive orders the stay was continued in force until March 20, 1919, when notice of appeal was given, and a further order was made staying all proceedings on the judgment until the "appeal shall have been dismissed or determined," upon the said defendant filing a stay bond with two sureties in the sum of $3,000. A transcript on appeal has not been filed. The notice of motion for dismissal was accompanied by a certified copy of the judgment roll, orders staying execution, and notice of appeal. No counter showing was presented on behalf of the appellant.

[1] The respondents rely on the rule that an appeal will be dismissed where the judgment from which the appeal was taken was entered upon a stipulation. Hibernia S. & L. S. v. Waymire, 152 Cal. 286, 92 Pac. 645. On behalf of the appellant it is contended there are two exceptions to this rule; the first being in cases where the lower court did not have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, and the second in cases where the complaint is fatally defective. In each of these cases it is contended on behalf of the appellant that no valid judgment could be entered, even by consent, because jurisdiction cannot be conferred by agreement.

It is further contended by the appellant that, under the rule that an appellate court will not look into the record to determine upon the merit of a motion to dismiss the appeal, a complete answer to the motion has been made in this case by the suggestion that there was no jurisdiction in the court below to enter the judgment. To uphold this contention would necessitate the announcement of a rule which would enable parties to litigation entirely to disregard and needlessly delay the execution of judgments entered by consent. Without going into a consideration of matters which might be presented upon the appeal, if the appeal could be sustained in the face of the stipulation, since the appellant, in opposition to the motion to dismiss, relies upon an exception to the admitted rule covering such cases, the court is constrained to examine the certified copy of the judgment roll solely for the purpose of determining whether or not the appeal is within either of the exceptions claimed by counsel for the appellant to exist.

[2] The substantial averments of the complaint are that on and prior to October 15, 1917, Paul Arata and Irene Arata were the owners in fee of the premises in San Francisco, described in the complaint; that on the last-mentioned date the owners leased the premises for a term of five years, commencing on that date; that the plaintiffs entered into possession under the terms of the lease and since have been the lessees; that prior and up to that date, the defendant Ratto was a tenant of the premises from month to month; that on that day the plaintiffs served notice in writing upon Ratto to deliver up possession and vacate the premises, and Ratto had refused, failed, and neglected so to do; that on December 17, 1918, the plaintiffs served Ratto with a written notice within three days to vacate the premises, and he had failed, neglected, and refused so to do; and that plaintiffs had been damaged by Ratto's default in the sum of $5,000.

As to the second claimed exception, it cannot be said that the complaint was fatally defective. Neither can it be said as to the first exception that the court was without jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action, and on the ground that it was uncertain, in that it could not be ascertained from the complaint what notice in writing was given to the defendant to deliver up possession of the premises. The demurrer was overruled, whereupon the defendant answered, denying on information and belief the lease to the plaintiffs and their entry under the lease, and averring a lease of the premises from the owners to himself from December 15, 1917, to December 15, 1918. He also denied the plaintiffs were damaged. The answer was verified on January 13, 1919. If the parties had gone to trial upon the issues thus presented, a valid judgment might have been entered. The judgment entered upon the stipulation is equally binding. Even though the rule requiring dismissal of appeal in such cases may be subject to the exceptions claimed by counsel for the appellant, they have failed to bring the case within either exception.

The appeal is dismissed.

All concur.

HENDERSON v. E. LAUER & SONS.
(Civ. 1924.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 17, 1919.)

1. SALES —197—TITLE—RISK.

The common-law rule which is the rule in California is that the risk as to goods sold rests where the title resides.

2. SALES —202(6)—SHIPMENT C. O. D.

The seller's shipment of goods C. O. D. as ordered with bill of lading attached and sent to a bank to be taken up by seller before delivery of goods showed seller's intention that ownership and right to possession of goods should not pass to buyer until the draft was paid.

3. SALES —202(6) — SHIPMENTS C. O. D. — RESERVATION OF TITLE—EVIDENCE.

The effect of a sale C. O. D. and shipment with bill of lading and draft attached to reserve title in the seller until payment may be rebutted by evidence as to seller's contrary intention.

4. SALES —202(6) — LOSS WHILE IN RAILROAD WAREHOUSE—RISK—TITLE.

Where goods ordered were shipped C. O. D. with bill of lading and draft attached and sent to a bank with notice to buyer that on payment of draft the bank would turn over the original invoice, the shipment showed seller's reservation of title until payment, so that loss of goods by fire while in railroad's warehouse would fall upon seller.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence N. Raker, Judge.

Action by J. S. Henderson against E. Lauer & Sons. From a judgment for plaintiff for part of his demand, and from an order denying motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

J. T. Sharp, of Alturas, for appellant.
Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. It is alleged in the complaint that defendant "became indebted to R. F. Smith & Sons Company, Chicago, Ill., in the sum of $471.31, lawful money of the United States, upon an express contract, for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered to said defendant" at its special instance and request, that before filing the complaint Smith & Sons Company assigned the said claim to plaintiff, and that no part thereof has been paid.

The answer denies the averments of the complaint except that defendant herein admits that it is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $31.91. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiff had judgment for the sum of $31.91 and interest, amounting in all to the sum of $34. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The controversy arises out of a shipment of goods by plaintiff's assignor to defendant of the value of $440.40, which before delivery were destroyed by fire in the warehouse of the railroad company at Alturas.

Witness Ryerson, bookkeeper and credit manager of Smith & Sons Company, testified that the shipment was "C. O. D. draft with bill of lading attached, the original bill of lading and draft sent to the First National Bank of Alturas." On November 13, 1914, Smith & Sons Company wrote defendant as follows:

"We are to-day shipping your C. O. D. order given to our Mr. Laney sending draft for $440.40 together with original invoice to the First National Bank at Alturas. When this draft is paid the bank will turn over the original invoice to you."

It was admitted that the goods remained in the warehouse of the railroad company for seven months, and until destroyed, June 28, 1915. It appeared also that the bank at Alturas notified defendant that the draft and bill of lading were in its possession, soon after being received by it. In answer to a letter written by Smith & Sons Company, defendant, of date July 22, 1915, wrote not to "be worried or alarmed over the claim of $440.40," and requesting that company to present the claim to the railroad company, which it did, and which was refused payment on the ground as testified to by the railroad company's general manager, that the company was acting only in the capacity of a warehouseman.

In its letter the Smith & Sons Company also said that, if the railroad company would not pay the claim, the E. Lauer & Sons Company would pay it. It is not contended that this promise was supported by any consideration or was otherwise than a voluntary offer. The letter went in as bearing upon the question as to the ownership of the goods while in storage. When on the witness stand, Mr. Lauer, president of Lauer & Sons Company was asked the question:

"You understood all the time that these goods were being held for you and all you had to do was to go to the First National Bank and give your check and take the goods; isn't that the fact? A. Sure. Q. That was the way these goods were ordered C. O. D., were they not? A. Yes, sir."

We find in the record no explanation of defendant's failure to take up the draft and call for the goods. Witness Lauer testified:

"Q. Did you tell them [Smith & Sons Company] that you would not receive the goods for any cause from the time they were shipped to you, and ordered here in Alturas, until after the fire? A. I do not think we had any correspondence over them at all."

He testified that his company ordered the goods shipped through Mr. Laney, salesman of Smith & Sons Company, that they came C. O. D. as ordered, and that his company had never repudiated the contract.

We find no evidence in the record from which the intention of the parties can be safely determined other than is to be found in the simple fact that the goods were ordered by defendant, and that they were shipped to Alturas C. O. D., as ordered, bill of lading with draft attached, sent to First National Bank, Alturas.

[1] We understand that the rule at common law is the rule in this state, viz. that the risk is placed where the title resides. Jue Yee v. Ch. Tetzen & Co., 12 Cal. App. 55, 106 Pac. 594; Hilmer v. Hills, 138 Cal. 134, 70 Pac. 1080; Seeligson v. Philbrick (C. C.) 30 Fed. 600.

[2-4] It was said in Seeligson v. Philbrick, supra:

"Where a bill of exchange for the price of the goods is inclosed to the buyer for acceptance, together with a bill of lading, if he refuse acceptance, he acquires no right to the bill of lading, or the goods of which it is the symbol. Where a vendor deals with the bill of lading only to secure the contract price, the property rests in the buyer on payment thereof. See Benjamin on Sales (4th Ed.) § 339, and numerous cases cited."

In Dows v. National Exchange Bank, 91 U. S. 618, 23 L. Ed. 214, it was said that the transmission of the invoice of goods does not pass the property in the goods without an acceptance and payment of the draft drawn against them. An invoice is not a bill of sale, nor is it evidence of a sale. A bill of lading taken deliverable to the shipper's own order is inconsistent with an intention to pass the ownership of the cargo to the person on whose account it may have been purchased.

It was held in Greenwood Grocery Co. v. Canadian County Mill & Elevator Co., 72 S. C. 450, 52 S. E. 191, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79, 110 Am. St. Rep. 627, 5 Ann. Cas. 261, that even if the bill of lading provides for the delivery to the consignee, "yet, if the consignor draws for the price attaching the bill of lading to the draft, this is sufficient evidence of his intention to reserve title and right of possession until the draft is paid, and the consignee is not entitled to the goods until payment." Unless rebutted by evidence to the contrary, Mr. Benjamin says the fact of making the bill of lading deliverable to the order of the vendor is almost decisive to show his intention to reserve the ius disponendi and prevent the property from passing to the vendee. Benjamin on Sales (7th Ed.) § 379.

In Hilmer v. Hills, supra, the court quoted with approval from Sanborn v. Shepherd, 59 Minn. 144, 60 N. W. 1089, as follows:

"There being no agreement of the parties to the contrary, the law presumes the sale to have been made for cash; and, upon a sale for cash, payment of the purchase money and the delivery of the property are concurrent and mutually dependent acts. Neither party is bound to perform without contemporaneous performance by the other. The payment of the purchase money was a condition precedent to plaintiff's right of possession."

We find nothing in Ramish v. Kirschbraun & Sons, 107 Cal. 659, 40 Pac. 1045, cited by appellant, controverting the rule above stated. Doubtless the parties may agree that title shall pass to the consignee or the purchaser of the goods upon delivery to the purchaser of the bill of lading with draft attached. The effect of a sale C. O. D. and shipment with bill of lading and draft attached, as shown, may, as Benjamin says, be rebutted by evidence to the contrary intention, as appeared in the cases cited by appellant, but we find no evidence in the record which warrants our holding that Smith & Sons Company intended that title should pass to defendant without first paying for the goods by taking up the draft.

The goods for which judgment was confessed were delivered to defendant and constituted a credit sale and the bill of lading stated "payable 30 days," whereas the bill of lading in question stated, "payable C. O. D. draft with B/L First National Bank," and in no sense constituted a credit sale. We think it quite clear that the vendor did not intend that the ownership and right to the possession of the goods should pass to defendant until its draft was paid. We think that the loss of the goods should fall upon plaintiff.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SCHIAFFINO et al. (Cr. 465.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 16, 1919.)

CRIMINAL LAW — 1182 — AFFIRMANCE —
POINTS AND AUTHORITIES—EVIDENCE.

Appellants having failed to file points and authorities, with proof of service upon Attorney General, within 15 days after filing of transcript, as required by rule 2, or to apply for further time, and the case having been submitted upon the record on motion of Attorney General, there being no appearance at call of calendar of defendants, who were given notice that cause was placed upon calendar, judgment will be affirmed, where the evidence, though largely circumstantial, cannot be said to be insufficient to support verdict of guilty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County;
M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Charles Schiaffino and Tony Frankino were convicted of having feloniously and burglariously broken into and entered a store, and they appeal. Affirmed.

C. H. Brennan and T. M. O'Connor, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendants were tried jointly for the crime of having feloniously and burglariously broken into and entered the store of Herrick & Brooks, in the town of Middleton, county of Lake, on the 18th day of September, 1918, "with intent then and there to commit a crime," and "then and there opened a safe by use of nitroglycerin, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute," etc. The jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged, and the court sentenced defendants to the state prison at San Quentin. Defendants appealed.

The clerk's transcript was filed January 25, 1919, and the reporter's transcript was filed February 6, 1919. Under rule 2 (176 Pac. viii), the appellant in a criminal case is required to "file his points and authorities, with proof of service on the Attorney General, within 15 days after the filing of the transcript." The cause was placed upon the April calendar and due notice thereof sent to defendants' attorneys. They have filed no points and authorities, and have not applied for further time in which to file points and authorities. At the call of the calendar there was no appearance for defendants, and on motion of the Attorney General the cause was submitted on the record.

We have read the evidence in the case, and while it is largely circumstantial, we cannot say it is insufficient to support the verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

MOSHER v. LACK. (Civ. 1897.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 30, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 26, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 44—RESCISION OF SALE—MATERIAL MISTAKE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to rescind a contract to purchase lands on the ground of fraudulent representations and mistake as to the amount of land conveyed, evidence as to the difference in value between the acreage received and the acreage intended to be sold held sufficient to justify a finding that the mistake was a material one.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 44—SUITS TO SET ASIDE PURCHASE—PRESUMPTIONS.

In suits to set aside purchases of land on the ground of mistake as to quantity, there is always a presumption that where the price per acre is considered the quantity influences the buyer as an inducement to pay the gross amount agreed upon.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 113—SUITS TO SET ASIDE—DISCREPANCY IN QUANTITY.

A purchaser of land may have his purchase set aside, where it appears that owing to a mutual mistake a materially less acreage was conveyed than was intended.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 127—SUIT TO SET ASIDE PURCHASE—RECOVERY FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

In suit to set aside the purchase of a half interest in land on the ground of a material mistake as to the quantity conveyed, it was not error to allow plaintiff to recover one-half the value of the improvements placed thereon.

5. EVIDENCE — 474(18)—OPINION—SPECIAL KNOWLEDGE—VALUE.

In a suit to set aside a purchase of land on the ground of material mistake as to quantity, it was not error to admit evidence by a civil engineer acquainted with the property as to the cost and value of improvements thereon.

6. EVIDENCE — 474(18)—OPINION OF OWNER—VALUE.

In a suit to set aside a purchase of land on the ground of material mistake as to quantity, it was not error to allow plaintiff to testify as to the cost of the items entering into the value of the improvements placed by him thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County;
Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by J. W. Mosher against M. D. Lack. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for appellant.
George R. Freeman, of Willows, for respondent.

BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an action to rescind a contract to purchase lands on the ground that the contract was entered into as a result of false and fraudulent representations and mistake in regard to the amount of land conveyed. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and findings were made establishing the mistake but negating the fraudulent representations; a judgment was given for plaintiff, from which this appeal is taken by the defendant under the alternative method.

By the terms of the contract in question, which was made on November 2, 1914, the appellant agreed to sell, and the respondent agreed to buy, for the sum of $6,300, an undivided one-half of a piece of land described by metes and bounds and "containing 80 acres more or less." The purchase price was to be paid as follows: $1,500 at the time of the making of the agreement, $650 twelve months thereafter, $2,000 two years thereafter; and, as a credit upon the purchase price to the extent of $900, the respondent agreed to execute and deliver to the appellant a deed to certain real property in Shasta county known as the "old Graham place"; also, the respondent agreed to assume one-half of a mortgage on the property in the sum of $2,500.

On the issue of mistake, plaintiff, in his complaint, alleges as follows:

"That in order to induce plaintiff to purchase a half interest in and to said land and to enter into said contract, defendant informed plaintiff that the land described in said contract contained 80 acres of land and the purchase price of a half interest therein was based on the belief that said land did contain 80 acres; that plaintiff at the time of entering into said contract and at the time he paid defendant the sum of $1,500 and at the time he executed the deed described in paragraph III hereof to defendant believed that said Glenn county land did so contain 80 acres and had no knowledge to the contrary until the month of May, 1915, when he caused a survey to be made and then discovered for the first time that said land did not contain 80 acres, but contained less than 40 acres; that said land does not contain 80 acres, and plaintiff would not have entered into said contract of November 2, 1914, had he not relied upon and acted upon the representation that said land did contain 80 acres; that plaintiff and defendant at the time of entering into said contract both believed that said land contained 80 acres and the purchase price of one-half interest therein was based upon the assumption by both parties that said land did contain 80 acres of land."

Upon conflicting evidence, the court made a finding substantially in accordance with this allegation, except that the court found that the land contained only 55.64 acres, instead of only 40 acres.

Counsel for appellant has filed able and instructive briefs. But his argument is based upon his contention that the foregoing basic finding "is not supported by the evidence, but in certain respects is in conflict with other findings of the court and contrary to all the evidence."

It is true that the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses is contradicted by witnesses for the defendant. But if the trial court believed the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses the evidence in the record is sufficient to sustain the above finding. From the evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiffs it sufficiently appears that the contract upon which the minds of the parties met was a contract pertaining to a half interest in a piece of land which each of the parties at the time of the contract believed contained 80 acres of land, when, as a matter of fact, it contained only 55.64 acres, and that this mutual mistake was a material mistake and induced the plaintiff to enter into the contract.

Also, from the testimony on behalf of the plaintiff, it appears that the price per acre was considered by the parties at the time of the trade. So it was not simply a sale in gross. The plaintiff's testimony is as follows:

"Q. How was this figure (the price of the land) arrived at? A. I asked Mr. Lack what the value of this land was per acre, and he said that river bottom land, such as that was, was worth from $175 to $200 an acre, but that the bank had appraised it at a little less than that, and he was willing to exchange on that appraisement that the bank had put on it, but he said 'we value the cleared land at $175 an acre.' So that was the basis on which we made the exchange. Q. At the time of your negotiation and fixing of this price between yourself and Mr. Lack, how many acres were figured as cleared land? A. Sixty-three acres. Q. Was there any other land besides that 63 acres cleared land figured? A. No cleared land. Q. Any other land? A. Yes, supposed to be a little less than 20 acres covered with timber. Q. What did Mr. Lack say about that portion of the land, if anything? A. That portion of the land was supposed to be put in at about $100 per acre. Q. If you did not believe at that time, Mr. Mosher, that there were 80 acres in that land, would you have entered into this contract? A. No."

[1, 2] The difference in value between the acreage received and the acreage intended to be sold was sufficient to justify the court in finding that the mistake was a material one when taken in connection with the plaintiff's testimony that he would not have entered into the contract had he not believed that the land contained 80 acres. And there is always a presumption that, where the price per acre is considered, the quantity influences the buyer as an inducement to pay the gross amount agreed upon. McComb v. Gilkeson, 110 Va. 406, 66 S. E. 77, 135 Am. St. Rep. 944, and cases cited in note; McCombs v. Church, 180 Pac. 535.

The court evidently believed that the plaintiff was told by the defendant that the land contained 80 acres; also, probably believed that the knowledge and standing of the defendant was such that plaintiff would be justified in believing anything that the defendant might tell plaintiff about the land. From the testimony of defendant it appears that for ten years he had occupied the responsible position of county assessor in the county of Shasta, and he further testified that—

"Mr. Mosher did not really say anything. He apparently didn't know anything about the land business. Really all the information he got I volunteered. Q. You volunteered you would take $12,600? A. I did not. Q. You did volunteer that the bank had appraised the land at $12,600? A. He asked me what I considered the property worth. Q. And you told him the bank had appraised it? A. Yes, I told him the only knowledge I had was that they appraised it at $12,600. Q. Did you tell him why the bank appraisal was made? A. I don't know whether I did or not. Q. What did you know about the bank appraisal? A. I knew all about it. It was made at my request."

The bank appraisal referred to was offered in evidence, and the first words it contains relative to the appraisal are, "The place contains about 80 acres," and the appraisal which follows is based upon this acreage.

[3] This evidence may have had some weight with the court in reaching the conclusion that the defendant at whose request this appraisal was made had an honest, though mistaken, belief that the land did contain 80 acres, and that the same information was given to the plaintiff in regard to the acreage of the land as was given to the appraiser of the bank when the appraisal was made by the bank at the request of the defendant.

So far as mistake and rescission are concerned, this case comes within the principles enunciated by our Supreme Court in the case of Hannah v. Steinman, 159 Cal. 142, 112 Pac. 1094. See, also, Johnson v. Withers, 9 Cal. App. 52, 98 Pac. 42; Quarg v. Scher, 136 Cal. 406, 69 Pac. 96; Eichelberger v. Mills Land & Water Co., 9 Cal. App. 628, 100 Pac. 117.

[4] The court did not err in allowing the plaintiff to recover one-half of the value of the improvements placed upon the property. Fountain v. Semi-Tropic L. Co., 99 Cal. 677, 34 Pac. 497.

[5, 6] The court did not err in permitting the plaintiff and the witness Stiles to testify in regard to the cost and value of the improvements placed upon the land. The witness Stiles was a civil engineer, and acquainted with the property, and the plaintiff testified fully in regard to the cost of the items which entered into the value of the improvements.

Judgment is affirmed.

MORSE et al. v. IMPERIAL GRAIN & WAREHOUSE CO. (Civ. 2400.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 4, 1919.)

1. WAREHOUSEMEN ⇐24(7) — LIABILITY — PROVISIONS OF RECEIPT.

In view of Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, Act 4320, a warehouseman cannot relieve itself from liability for loss of goods resulting from want of ordinary care and diligence by inserting in a receipt that the goods were deposited at the risk of the depositor.

2. WAREHOUSEMEN ⇐24(1) — LIABILITY — CONTRACT.

A warehouseman may by special contract assume liability for loss of goods due to any cause and make himself an insurer thereof.

3. WAREHOUSEMEN ⇐24(7) — LIABILITY — CONTRACT—LIMITATION.

Under a warehouse receipt reciting that the property deposited was received "for account and at the risk of" the depositor, and that the warehouseman "is not responsible for loss occasioned to the merchandise stored with them by fire or elements," the warehouseman was not liable where, through no lack of ordinary care or diligence on its part or its servants, the merchandise was stolen from the warehouse, in view of Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, Act 4320.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by C. F. Morse and Lionel Brackenberry, partners, doing business under the firm name and style of Morse & Brackenberry, against the Imperial Grain & Warehouse Company. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying their motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

F. R. McNamee, of Los Angeles, Leo A. McNamee, of Las Vegas, Nev., and Luke J. McNamee and Parke Godwin, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Albert M. Norton and Emery & Rehart, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover for 12 sacks of wool deposited with defendant as a warehouseman, and which defendant failed to redeliver on demand therefor.

Judgment went for defendant, from which and an order denying a motion for a new trial made by plaintiffs, they appeal.

The case was submitted for decision upon an agreed statement of facts, the material parts of which are as follows:

"The respective parties hereto * * * agree upon the following statement of facts, and submit the same to the court for the determination of the points in controversy hereinafter specified. The facts agreed upon are as follows: (1) The defendant is * * * a public warehouseman; (2) The plaintiffs * * * did, on April 15, 1916, duly deliver to defendant, as such warehouseman, 69 sacks of wool for storage, which defendant agreed to receive, keep, and store in its warehouse in the city of El Centro * * * in accordance with the following warehouse receipt," which receipt, in addition to the matters required to be specified therein by section 2 of "An act to make uniform the law of warehouse receipts," stated the wool was received "for account and at the risk of Morse & Brackenberry," and also contained a provision that, "The Imperial Grain & Warehouse Company is not responsible for loss occasioned to the merchandise stored with them, by fire or elements"; "(4) on July 5, 1916, plaintiffs duly demanded a redelivery of said 69 sacks of wool, and then and there offered to pay defendant the full amount of its storage charges thereon; (5) upon such demand defendant redelivered 57 sacks thereof, but failed and refused to redeliver the remaining 12 sacks thereof, giving as a reason therefor that the 12 sacks, on some date unknown, had disappeared, or were stolen from its said warehouse, without any fault or carelessness, misconduct, or negligence of defendant, or its servants or either of them, and through no lack of ordinary care or diligence on the part of the defendant or its servants and while defendant was using ordinary care and diligence, which plaintiffs contend is no defense to this action, even if true."

By the stipulation "the points in controversy" as specified for submission to the court for its determination were:

"(1) Is not the liability of the defendant absolutely fixed by the provisions of its warehouse receipt above set out?" (2) Under the rule of "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius," does not the provision exempting defendant from loss due to fire or the elements estop it from making any defense other than that the goods were so lost? (3) Is defendant's liability restricted to such loss only as resulted from the want of ordinary care and diligence?

It was further provided that if the court upon the "above statement" should find for plaintiffs, judgment should follow in their favor; otherwise it should be for defendant.

An act of March 19, 1909, entitled "An act to make uniform the law of warehouse receipts" (Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, p. 2022), requires all receipts to embody certain provisions, and section 3 of said act provides that a warehouseman may insert in a receipt any other terms and conditions, provided that such terms and conditions shall not "in any wise impair his obligation to exercise that degree of care in the safekeeping of the goods entrusted to him which a reasonably careful man would exercise in regard to similar goods of his own." And section 21 of said act provides that a warehouseman shall be liable for any loss or injury to goods caused by his failure to exercise such care in regard to them as a reasonably careful owner of similar goods would exercise, but he shall not be liable, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, for any loss or injury to goods which could not have been avoided by the exercise of such care.

[1, 2] Counsel for both parties, as they must, concede the receipt should be interpreted in the light of the provisions of the act from which we have quoted. This being true, provisions having for their purpose the exemption of a warehouseman from liability which the law in express terms imposes upon him cannot be deemed effectual for any purpose. Hence it follows that defendant could not by the provision, "For account and at the risk of Morse & Brackenberry," so inserted in the receipt, relieve itself from liability for loss of the goods if such loss resulted from a want of ordinary care and diligence exercised by it. To this extent the law protects one who for hire deposits his goods for storage with a warehouseman who, while he cannot in any case exempt himself from the liability imposed by law, may by special contract assume liability for loss of goods due to any cause, thus making him an insurer thereof. However, there is nothing whatever in the receipt before us upon which such additional liability can be predicated.

[3] In support of their argument for reversal, appellants cite a number of cases to the effect that, since the provision, "For account and at the risk of Morse & Brackenberry," is to be disregarded, and since the loss of the goods was not due to fire or the elements, the contract should be construed as an absolute promise on the part of defendant to redeliver the goods, as was held in the case of Pope v. Farmers' Union Milling Co., 130 Cal. 139, 62 Pac. 384, 53 L. R. A. 673, 80 Am. St. Rep. 87. In that case a number of sacks of wheat were received by a warehouseman upon an agreement to redeliver the same, subject alone to loss due to the elements. It was held that a failure to deliver the goods for any cause other than that they were destroyed by the elements constituted no defense. That case and others to like effect were decided prior to the adoption of the act of 1909 and at a time when the extent of a warehouseman's liability was the unrestricted subject of special contract.

The question as to whether defendant was guilty of negligence in the care of the wool must be determined from the facts agreed upon, which the trial court construed as a stipulation that the theft or loss of the goods was not due to negligence or want of ordinary care on the part of defendant. Appellants insisted that such interpretation was wholly unwarranted. We cannot assent to this contention. Construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, and having in view the purpose which prompted it and the points submitted for determination, there can be no doubt that it was intended as an admission by plaintiffs that the loss of the goods, as alleged in the answer, was not due to carelessness or negligence of defendant, and that, as custodian thereof, it had exercised ordinary care. Otherwise construed, there could be no purpose in inserting defendant's reasons for failure to redeliver the 12 sacks of wool, which, as stated, "plaintiffs contend is no defense to this action, if true." That such was the intent appears from appellants' brief, wherein counsel, in referring to the language quoted, says:

"In framing such clause plaintiffs had in view the decision of this court in Pope v. Farmers' Union Milling Co., 130 Cal. 139, 62 Pac. 384, 53 L. R. A. 673, 80 Am. St. Rep. 87, supra."

Clearly the case was submitted to and decided by the trial court upon the theory that the fact as to whether defendant was negligent in the care of the wool was immaterial; that, conceding it had exercised ordinary care, nevertheless, since the goods were not destroyed by fire or the elements, it was, as decided in Pope v. Farmers' Union Milling Co., supra, bound upon demand therefore to make delivery thereof. The effect of the stipulation, taken in connection with plaintiffs' action thereunder, was to concede that defendant was not chargeable with negligence or want of ordinary care, which, upon their theory, constituted no defense to the action.

Since no appeal lies from the order denying the motion for a new trial, it is dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

ADLER v. SAWYER. (Civ. 2767.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 25, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 23, 1919.)

1. GUARANTY $\S$ 4—DISTINGUISHED FROM INDEMNITY CONTRACT.

A contract by which defendant agreed to protect plaintiff against loss arising from the sale by defendant himself of a note and its security is not a contract of guaranty, within Civ. Code, $\S$ 2787, defining a guaranty as a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Guaranty.]

2. GUARANTY $\S$ 16(3)—SUFFICIENCY OF CONSIDERATION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—APPLICABILITY TO OTHER CONTRACTS.

Civ. Code, $\S$ 2792, requiring a distinct consideration for contracts of guaranty not entered into at the same time as the original obligation, and not forming a part thereof, is applicable to contracts of guaranty only.

3. TRIAL $\S$ 404(1) — FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—CONSTRUCTION—LIBERAL CONSTRUCTION—RECONCILING CONFLICT.

The findings of a trial court are to be liberally construed in support of the judgment, all findings to be read together, and, if possible, to be reconciled, so as to prevent any conflict on material points.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 907(2)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTION—CONTRACTS—CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE SUPPORTING.

On appeal on the judgment roll alone in an action on a contract, in which the allegations of the complaint and answer failed to raise the issue of consideration, it will be presumed in support of the judgment that the evidence by which good consideration for the contract sued upon was shown was received without objection, and that the case was tried by consent of the parties, as if such issue had been properly raised.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS $\S$ 56(2)—ACCRUAL OF RIGHT OF ACTION—CONTRACTS—INDEMNITY.

The statute of limitations as to an action upon a contract of indemnity against loss does not commence running until the person indemnified suffers the loss against which the contract protects him.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 907(2)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTION—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—EVIDENCE CONSIDERED.

Where, on appeal, there is no evidence before the court sufficient to determine when plaintiff suffered loss on a contract of indemnity and his right of action accrued, it will be presumed that the finding of the trial court that plaintiff's cause of action was not barred by the statute of limitation was sustained by sufficient evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Charles Adler against F. W. Sawyer. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gerald C. Halsey, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. Defendant appeals, upon the judgment roll alone, from a judgment rendered against him in an action upon a written contract of indemnity. On August 18, 1911, in consideration of the payment of $3,000, the defendant sold and transferred to plaintiff a certain promissory note in that amount, dated July 17, 1909, the payment of which was secured by a deed of trust. On September 22, 1911, defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff the contract sued upon. That document recites the prior sale of the note to the plaintiff, the receipt of the consideration by the defendant, the fact that statements had been made as to the possible invalidity of the note, and concludes as follows:

"Said F. W. Sawyer hereby agrees to protect said Charles Adler against any and all possible loss or damages that he may sustain by not being able to in any manner realize the full benefits of note and trust deed or to recover the full amount of said note and trust deed from any reason whatever arising out of the transaction."

Appellant contends that this contract is one of guaranty, and, as such, it is unsupported by a sufficient consideration, for the reason that it was not entered into at the same time as the original obligation, and did not form a part thereof, and that the record shows there was no distinct consideration therefor, as required by section 2792 of the Civil Code. The argument is based upon the allegations of the complaint and the findings, a portion of which are set forth in appellant's brief. The full record on this matter is as follows:

In the complaint it is alleged:

"That subsequent to the transfer of the said note and of the said deed of trust by the said defendant, F. W. Sawyer, to the said plaintiff, Charles Adler, above mentioned and alleged, said defendant, F. W. Sawyer, and the said plaintiff, Charles Adler, entered into a certain agreement in writing, wherein and whereby, for the original consideration paid by the said Charles Adler to the said defendant, F. W. Sawyer, for the transfer of the said note and of the said deed of trust, and for other reasons expressed therein, the said defendant, F. W. Sawyer, agreed to protect the said Charles Adler against any and all possible loss for damage that he might sustain," etc.

In his answer the defendant denies:

"That the alleged agreement in said complaint alleged to have been entered into between Charles Adler and defendant, F. W. Sawyer, was entered into for any other consideration than is expressed in said agreement."

Upon this issue the court found:

"That all of the allegations of plaintiff's complaint on file herein are, and each of them is, true and correct, and fully sustained by the evidence, and the court further finds that there was a good and sufficient and valuable consideration for the making and execution and delivery of all of the written instruments particularly described in plaintiff's complaint. [The contract sued upon was one of the instruments thus referred to.] And the court further finds that the defendant, Sawyer, for a good and sufficient and valuable consideration, on the 22d day of September, 1911, agreed to protect plaintiff against any and all possible loss or damages that plaintiff might sustain by not being able to in any manner realize the full benefits of the note and trust deed described in plaintiff's complaint, or to recover the full amount of said note and trust deed from any reason whatever."

[1, 2] A guaranty is defined as "a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person." Civ. Code, § 2787. In the contract here involved defendant agreed to protect plaintiff against loss or damage arising from the sale by defendant himself of the promissory note and its security. Section 2792 of the Civil Code is applicable to contracts of guaranty only. Upon the question of consideration, it is not necessary to decide whether the contract sued upon comes within that category. Even if it be assumed that the section relied upon applies to this particular contract, the contention of appellant is without merit.

[3, 4] The findings of the trial court are to be liberally construed in support of the judgment, and all the findings are to be read together. If possible, they are to be reconciled so as to prevent any conflict on material points. A judgment will not be reversed on the ground of a conflict in the findings, unless the findings are incapable of being harmoniously construed. Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 390, 395, 35 Pac. 1005; Haight v. Haight, 151 Cal. 90, 92, 90 Pac. 197. So reading and construing the findings before us, it is clear that the court found that the contract sued upon was supported by a good and sufficient and valuable consideration, and that there is no such conflict in the findings as to lead to a reversal of the judgment. The allegations of the complaint and answer raised the issue of the consideration for the execution of the contract. But, even if they did not, upon this appeal on the judgment roll alone, it must be presumed in support of the judgment that the evidence by which the existence of a sufficient consideration was established was received without objection, and that the case was tried by consent of the parties as it such issue had been properly raised. Churchill v. Baumann, 95 Cal. 541, 547, 30 Pac. 770.

[5, 6] It is further contended by the appellant that the action is barred for the reason that the contract was dated September 22, 1911, and this action was not commenced until July 6, 1917. The contract sued upon is not a guaranty of payment of the promissory note transferred by defendant to plaintiff, but is rather a contract of indemnity against loss by reason of the inability of the plaintiff to realize upon the note and the security therefor. There is a marked difference between these two classes of contracts. Under a guaranty of payment, the liability of the guarantor becomes fixed by the failure of the principal debtor to pay at maturity; but under a contract of indemnity against loss no right of action accrues against the indemnitor until the person indemnified suffers the loss against which the contract protects him. In this case the plaintiff's cause of action against the defendant upon the contract arose when it was determined that plaintiff would not recover the full amount of the transferred note. In the absence of any evidence, we are unable to determine when this loss occurred and plaintiff's right of action accrued. The trial court found, however, that plaintiff's cause of action was not barred by any of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relied upon. It must be presumed that this finding was sustained by sufficient evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

FERGODO et al. v. DONOHUE et al.
(Civ. 2645.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 16, 1919.)

JUDGMENT  505—SETTING APART HOMESTEAD—COLLATERAL ATTACK—ERROR.

Error of a probate court in setting aside as a homestead absolutely for decedent's minor children land formerly community property, which upon the death of decedent's wife became his separate property within Code Civ. Proc. § 1468, was an error, committed in the exercise of its jurisdiction, which cannot be indirectly attacked in a later proceeding to quiet title to the land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action to quiet title by George J. Fergodo and others against W. H. Donohue and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Cedric W. Peterson, of Pleasanton, and Neal Power, of San Francisco, for appellants.

W. S. Tinning, of Martinez, C. A. Gale, of Pleasanton, and W. H. L. Hynes, of Oakland, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to quiet title. The complaint was in two counts. The cause was tried on the first count, and judgment went for the defendants. As to the second count a demurrer thereto was sustained, and, plaintiffs having refused to amend, judgment by default upon that count was also entered against them. The plaintiffs appealed from both judgments. That relating to the default judgment not being seasonably taken, it was heretofore, upon motion made in this court, dismissed.

The question involved in the remaining appeal concerns the construction of an order setting apart a homestead to minor children. The facts are undisputed and simply told. The property set apart was community in character, and had belonged to E. S. Fergodo and his wife. Mrs. Fergodo predeceased her husband, and the latter died in the year 1904, leaving him surviving as the result of this union 11 children, 6 of whom were minors. No homestead had ever been selected by either spouse in lifetime, but in the course of probate proceedings upon the estate of E. S. Fergodo, deceased, the court, upon petition of the guardian of the minor children, and after due notice and hearing, set apart absolutely in fee as a homestead to the minor children the property here involved. Subsequently the estate was closed, and the remaining property distributed to all the children, both adults and minors. After the latter reached majority they conveyed the homestead property to the defendants. No objection was made, at the time of the making thereof, either to the decree setting apart the homestead, or to the final decree of distribution, and no appeal was ever taken from either of them.

It is conceded that the property had been the community property of E. S. Fergodo and his wife; and assuming for the purposes of this case that upon the death of Mrs. Fergodo the property became the separate property of the surviving husband within the meaning of section 1468 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that therefore the court committed error in setting it aside as a homestead absolutely instead of for a limited time, still we think it was but an error committed in the exercise of its jurisdiction, which cannot be indirectly attacked. It has been so decided. In the Matter of Moore, 96 Cal. 530, 31 Pac. 584, the probate court had set aside to the widow of the deceased absolutely a homestead from the separate property of the deceased; and in a proceeding similar to the present the same question came before the Supreme Court which, in passing thereon, said:

"If it should be conceded that the court erred in setting apart any portion of it absolutely to the widow, still it was only an error committed in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and the order was not void. No appeal was ever taken from this order, and it is now in full force. This being so, the court erred in distributing, as part of the estate, the land so set apart as a homestead. By force of the decree setting it aside, the title to the homestead is, as against the heirs of the deceased, in the parties named in that decree."

See, also, Estate of Bette, 171 Cal. 584, 153 Pac. 949; Rountree v. Montague, 30 Cal. App. 170, 157 Pac. 623; McGavin v. S. F. Protestant Orphan Asylum Society, 34 Cal. App. 168, 167 Pac. 182.

Upon the authority of those cases the judgment is affirmed.

PACIFIC MFG. CO. et al. v. PERRY et al.
(Civ. 2750.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 18, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 16, 1919.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — 290(2) — FORECLOSURE — FINDING — AMOUNT OF WORK DONE PRIOR TO ABANDONMENT.

In an action to foreclose contractor's and materialmen's liens, a finding as to the value of the work and materials already done and furnished at the time of contractor's abandonment of the work in contract couched in the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, as it stood prior to its repeal in 1911, held to find the ultimate facts required by such section.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS — 164(1) — FORECLOSURE AFTER ABANDONMENT BY CONTRACTOR — LIABILITY — CONTRACT PRICE.

The rights of mechanic's lien claimants on abandonment of performance of the contract by the contractor must be adjudged as of that date, and though a contract legally made limits the liability of the owner to lien claimants to the contract price, it is not error to fail to consider the cost to the owner of completion of the contract, since Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, as it stood prior to its repeal in 1911, recognized that the contract might be abandoned, and provided for an equitable determination of the amount of contract completed and portion of contract price applicable to liens.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS — 281(4) — FORECLOSURE — AMOUNT OF CONTRACT PRICE APPLICABLE — EVIDENCE.

In an action for foreclosure of mechanics' liens after contractor's abandonment, where the testimony was conflicting, but testimony of experts showed the per cent. of the contract completed at the time of abandonment, evidence held sufficient to support findings.

4. MECHANICS' LIENS — 161(2) — ABANDONMENT OF CONTRACT — COMPUTATION OF AMOUNT OF CONTRACT PRICE APPLICABLE TO LIEN PAYMENT.

In an action to foreclose mechanics' liens after abandonment by contractor, the actual cost of completion to the owners, which was increased by the abandonment, was properly not taken into consideration in determining the percentage of the contract completed, and percentage of the contract price applicable to payment of liens.

5. EVIDENCE — 117 — JUDGMENT ROLL — NECESSITY OF OTHER EVIDENCE.

In an action to foreclose mechanics' liens after abandonment by contractor, where there was an entire absence of evidence connecting a payment referred to in a receipt with the claim sued upon, the trial court did not err in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the offer of the judgment roll containing the receipt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Consolidated action by the Pacific Manufacturing Company and others against R. A.

Perry and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. Irvine Wright, F. E. Boland, and John Douglas Short, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

W. B. Rinehart and Ezra Decoto, both of Oakland, and Robert B. Gaylord, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HAVEN, J. This is the second appeal in consolidated actions to foreclose contractors' and materialmen's liens, the opinion on the first appeal being reported in 31 Cal. App. 274, 160 Pac. 246. On June 10, 1910, the defendant R. A. Perry, acting on behalf of the defendant Winifred A. Perry, his wife, entered into a valid contract with defendant Magneson for the construction of a residence and garage for the total contract price of $23,567, which contract was recorded on June 13, 1910. The contractor commenced construction of the building thereunder, and continued until February 11, 1911, at which latter date he abandoned work under the contract. On March 22, 1911, the defendants R. A. and Winifred A. Perry filed for record a notice of abandonment by the contractor of said contract. The details of the contract, so far as they may be material, are set forth in the opinion on the former appeal, and need not here be repeated. The present appeal is by the defendants from a decree adjudging plaintiffs entitled to liens as set forth in their several complaints, and decreeing the foreclosure thereof. All the claims of lien here involved are based upon work performed or materials furnished prior to the abandonment of the contract. The controversy is concerned mainly with the proper portion of the contract price applicable to the payment of such liens under section 1200 of the Code of Civil Procedure, prior to its repeal in 1911, and particularly as to the correct method of computation to be adopted in arriving at that amount. The court found:

"That the value of the work and materials already done and furnished at the time of the abandonment of said work and contract by the said defendant Magneson, as aforesaid, to wit, on the 11th day of February, 1911, including materials then actually delivered and on the ground, estimated as near as may be by the standard of the whole contract price, exclusive of the extra work hereinafter mentioned and referred to, was and is the aggregate sum of $17,468.71, being 74.2 per cent. of the amount of the contract price, to wit, $23,567, on account of which there had been paid the contractor, the defendant Magneson, at the time of abandonment, the sum of $10,000."

The court also found that during the course of construction of the buildings, and prior to the abandonment of the contract, certain extra work was performed by the contractor, subcontractors, and materialmen, under authorization in writing from the defendants Perry and in conformance with the provisions of the contract, the reasonable value of which aggregated $4,016.36, on account of which there had been paid to the contractor the sum of $1,300, leaving a balance unpaid for said extras in the sum of $2,716.36.

[1, 2] Appellants attack the finding above quoted as not being a sufficient finding of fact under the terms of section 1200, Code of Civil Procedure. It is couched, however, in the language of that section, and is sufficient under the authority of Marshall v. Vallejo Commercial Bank, 163 Cal. 469, 474, 126 Pac. 146. The ultimate fact is found as required by the section referred to. The real contention of appellants is that this finding is not supported by the evidence, for the reason that it does not appear that the cost of completion of the building was an element taken into consideration in arriving at the amount found to be applicable to the payment of liens at the time of abandonment. Appellants argue that the cost of completion after abandonment was much greater than it would have been if there had been no abandonment, and as the owners were obliged to pay this extra cost through no fault on their part, it should have been taken into consideration in arriving at the amount applicable to claims of lien which accrued prior to abandonment.

It is admitted by appellants that this contention is contrary to the rule laid down in Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Weinsveig, 168 Cal. 664, 669, 143 Pac. 1025. But it is claimed that the rule announced in the case last referred to is contrary to all the previous decisions of the Supreme Court, and to the law of these cases as announced upon the former appeal. Particular reliance is placed by appellants upon the cases of Roystone Co. v. Darling, 171 Cal. 526, 533, 154 Pac. 15, McDonald v. Hayes, 132 Cal. 490, 64 Pac. 850, Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, 154 Cal. 111, 116, 97 Pac. 152, and Marshall v. Vallejo Commercial Bank, 163 Cal. 469, 126 Pac. 146, as announcing a rule which is inconsistent with that declared in the Ganahl Case, as construed and applied on the former appeal, and by the trial court in the instant cases. Upon a careful reading of the decisions referred to, we do not find the inconsistency claimed by appellants. In our opinion, the confusion of appellants arises from a failure fully to appreciate the fact, so clearly pointed out in the Ganahl Case, that upon abandonment the performance of the contract has come to an end, and the rights of all parties thereunder must be adjusted as of that date. It is true that a contract legally made limits the liability of the owner to lien claimants to the amount of the contract price; but the liability thus referred to is to lien claimants whose claims have arisen under the contract. Section 1200, Code of Civil Procedure, as it existed prior to its repeal, recognized that a building contract might be terminated by abandonment, and provided a method of arriving at the proportion of the contract price applicable to liens in that event. As stated in the Ganahl Case, if the contract is half performed, it is equitable, and a protection of the constitutional rights of all parties, to decree that one-half of the price agreed to be paid for the performance of the entire contract, less payments made, should be applied to the discharge of liens which had accrued prior to the abandonment. This is undoubtedly the rule established by the decision last above referred to; and, even if it could be construed as inconsistent with former decisions as claimed by appellants, we should consider ourselves bound thereby. We are of the opinion, however, that all the cases referred to are entirely harmonious.

[3, 4] The testimony was conflicting as to the value of the work done and materials furnished at the time of abandonment, and as to the reasonable value of all the labor and materials necessary to construct and complete the buildings according to the contract, plans, and specifications. The findings of the court are sufficiently supported, however, by the evidence of experts offered on behalf of the plaintiffs. These witnesses testified that the reasonable value, at the time the buildings were constructed, of all the labor and materials necessary and required to construct and complete the buildings according to the contract, plans, and specifications was the aggregate sum of $26,255.08; and that the aggregate value of the labor and materials actually used in the construction of the buildings and upon the ground at the time of the abandonment was $19,454.34. They then computed that the latter sum was 74.2 per cent. of the former, and therefore testified that the contract had been 74.2 per cent. completed at the time of the abandonment. Upon this testimony the court held that 74.2 per cent. of the contract price, less payments made, was applicable to the discharge of liens which had accrued prior to the abandonment. In our opinion, this method of computation follows the rule announced in the Ganahl Case and is justified thereby.

It is further claimed by appellants that a different rule is announced in the opinion rendered upon the former appeal in these cases, and that that opinion has become the law of these cases, even if it should be found to be inconsistent with the decisions of the Supreme Court. The court there held that it was "unable to formulate any equation under the rule of section 1200 as approved by the Supreme and appellate courts which would support the findings of the court for the full amount found subject to the liens, on the theory of a valid contract abandoned by the contractor." It is pointed out by the writer of that opinion that the amount for which the court gave judgment on the first trial exceeded the amount of the fund available for the discharge of liens, computed upon respondents' own theory, by $674.59. It was doubtless this discrepancy which made it impossible for the appellate court to formulate an equation which would support the findings of the court for the full amount found subject to liens, and led to a reversal of the first judgment. A careful reading of the entire opinion does not disclose any conflict with the rule above referred to. Special reference is made therein to the decision in the Ganahl Case, and it is stated that the meaning of section 1200, Code of Civil Procedure, as affecting the liability of the owner in the case of an abandonment of a valid contract, is very clearly pointed out in the case referred to. Appellants rely upon the following language in the former opinion:

"But respondent makes no allowance for the cost of completing the buildings which, through no fault of appellants, were left in an unfinished condition. What the actual cost of completion was to appellants may be immaterial (Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Weinsveig, supra), but as was said in Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, 154 Cal. 111, 116, 97 Pac. 152: 'When he (owner) is, without any default on his part, burdened with the cost of completing the building, it is but fair and just that he should be relieved of the obligation of paying to the original contractor, or those claiming under him, so much of the contract price as corresponds to the portion of the work left undone. In no other way can he be protected in his constitutional right to have his liability limited to the amount which, by a valid contract, he has agreed to pay.'"

There can be no claim in the instant cases that the owner has not been relieved of the obligation of paying to the original contractor, or those claiming under him, so much of the contract price as corresponds to the portion of the work left undone. As we understand the portion of the opinion above quoted, it means merely that, while the actual cost of such completion to appellants may be immaterial, the reasonable cost thereof, according to the plans and specifications, must be taken into consideration in arriving at the proper proportion of the contract which had been completed at the time of abandonment, and the proportion of the contract price applicable to liens at that time. Appellants' contention is that the actual cost of completion to the defendants should have been taken into consideration in arriving at the figures above referred to. This is contrary to the rule laid down in the Ganahl Case, and it is so stated in the portion of the opinion on the former appeal above quoted. We think, therefore, that the trial court was correct in construing the opinion on the former appeal in these cases as not being inconsistent with the rule laid down in the Ganahl Case.

[5] Objection is made by appellants to the allowance of the lien of the Pacific Manufacturing Company on account of a claimed error of the trial court in sustaining an objection to the offer in evidence by defendants of the judgment roll in another action by the same plaintiff against O. M. Magneson, the contractor herein, in which a judgment was recovered for $2,567.59 and execution issued thereon. Attached to the sheriff's return on such execution was a receipt signed by plaintiff's attorney in the sum of $2,611.45. Defendants sought to prove by this record that the claim here sued upon had been paid, but the record offered did not show that the indebtedness there sued upon is the same indebtedness as is involved in the present suit. Defendants offered no evidence to that effect. They now rely upon the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice McKee in Goss v. Strelitz, 54 Cal. 640, 644, as establishing the rule that any payment from the contractor to the Pacific Manufacturing Company should be applied in payment of the lien involved in this action, in the absence of any showing of other existing indebtedness. In the case referred to the payment which was applied was received from the contractor on account of bricks furnished for the particular contract. If there had been evidence here that the payment collected through the action referred to was so received on account of this particular contract, the authority would be applicable. Inasmuch, however, as there is an entire absence of any evidence connecting the payment referred to in the receipt mentioned with the claim sued upon in this action, the trial court did not err in sustaining plaintiffs' objection to the offer of the judgment roll.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

STRADLEY v. UNION TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO (DELANO-ROCHDALE CO., Intervener). (Civ. 2836.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 29, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 26, 1919.)

ATTACHMENT 175—BANKS AND BANKING
129—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY—DEPOSIT OF MONEY FOR ANOTHER — DELIVERY OF PASSBOOK.

Where one deposited money with a trust company in the name of his brother and delivered the passbook to the brother and received from the brother his own canceled note, as between the brothers the money was paid for the note, and the payor could not set up any claim to it after delivery of the passbook and receipt of the note, and an attaching creditor of the payor is in no better position than the payor.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by L. J. Stradley against the Union Trust Company of San Francisco, in which the Delano-Rochdale Company intervened. Judgment for plaintiff, and the intervener appeals. Judgment affirmed.

W. W. Kaye, of Bakersfield, for appellant. Herbert Choyuski and James Raleigh Kelly, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff, L. J. Stradley, brought an action against the Union Trust Company of San Francisco to recover a deposit of $3,600 held by said defendant. The Delano-Rochdale Company, having previously attached the account in an action instituted by it against B. F. Stradley, a brother of plaintiff, intervened in this action, claiming that the money deposited with the defendant bank was in fact the property of B. F. Stradley. The money in dispute having been paid into court, the action was dismissed as to the defendant bank, and, judgment going for plaintiff, the intervener brings this appeal.

The facts are that B. F. Stradley, being indebted to his brother for something like $3,997, evidenced by his promissory note, deposited $4,000 in the savings department of the defendant bank in the name of his brother, L. J. Stradley. When making the deposit he signed the name of L. J. Stradley, and did not at any time disclose to the bank that he was not the party in whose name the deposit was made. He then sent the passbook to his brother, accompanied by a letter notifying him that the deposit was made to repay his indebtedness. Upon the receipt of the passbook and letter L. J. Stradley returned to B. F. the promissory note of the latter. Some time thereafter B. F. Stradley wrote to his brother for money, and the brother mailed to him the passbook covering the $4,000 so deposited. With this passbook B. F. Stradley withdrew from the account $400, signing his brother's name for that purpose.

Thereafter the intervener commenced an action against B. F. Stradley and attached the account.

The whole question involved is whether at the time of this levy the money belonged to L. J. Stradley, in whose name it was deposited, or to B. F. Stradley, who actually made the deposit in his brother's name.

Whatever title B. F. Stradley had he parted with when he delivered his passbook to his brother and received his canceled note paid through the medium of this transaction. As between the two brothers there can be no doubt that the money belonged to L. J. Stradley, and that B. F. could not set up any claim to it, especially after he had delivered the passbook and received the note in exchange. As far as L. J. Stradley is concerned, the attaching creditor is in no better position.

The trial court had ample evidence to sustain the finding that the money was not the property of B. F. Stradley, but that the deposit was made in the name of and for the use and benefit of the plaintiff. Judgment properly went for plaintiff, and it is accordingly affirmed.

WONG FOO v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(Civ. 2672.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 2, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 30, 1919.)

1. SALES 197 — TITLE — EXECUTORY CONTRACT—DELIVERY—QUALITY OF GOODS.

Agreement for sale of potatoes in ground, of certain quality and weight, to be shipped to certain place where sale was to be consummated, which permitted buyer to reject potatoes if they failed to measure up to required standards, was merely an executory contract of sale, the title remaining in seller.

2. SALES 202(4)—TITLE—CONDITION PRECEDENT—PAYMENT.

Where contract provided for payment of balance of purchase price after receipt of goods in good merchantable condition, such payment was a precedent condition of sale, without which title did not pass, though buyer did not reject goods.

3. SALES 202(1) — TERMINATION OF CONTRACT—RIGHT TO POSSESSION OF GOODS.

Where goods were shipped by seller under contract making payment of balance of price a precedent condition to sale, seller was entitled to the property upon buyer's refusal to make payment, upon arrival of goods; such refusal terminating the agreement.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Wong Foo against the Southern Pacific Company. From judgment for plaintiff, and from order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. A. Cutler, of San Francisco, and John A. Wilson, of Stockton, for appellant.

Pringle & Robbins, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to recover damages for the alleged conversion of 810 sacks of potatoes by defendant company in its capacity as warehouseman.

Plaintiff claimed to be the owner and entitled to the possession of the property, which had been deposited for storage in the warehouse of the defendant company at Stockton. It is alleged in the complaint that while the potatoes were in the possession of defendant, plaintiff demanded the same, and offered to pay the charges thereon, but that defendant not only failed to deliver them, but converted and disposed of the same to its own use.

The answer of the defendant specifically denied the allegations of the complaint, and for a separate answer alleged that on the 24th day of November, 1915, one James Donlon entered into an agreement with a produce firm called the Rourke Company, whereby said Donlon agreed to sell said company 810 sacks of potatoes at $1.30 a sack, and that under the terms of said agreement said potatoes were to be delivered f. o. b. at the river bank and shipped to Stockton, their arrival in good condition at said place to be considered as the time and place of the consummation of said sale. The answer further alleged that on December 2, 1915, Donlon shipped the potatoes to Rourke Company, and that defendant received them and stored the same in its warehouse, but that Rourke Company had not, prior to January 12, 1916, or at any time thereafter, paid Donlon any part of the purchase price thereof, but that on said last-named date Rourke Company had declared its inability to pay its debts, whereupon said Donlon gave notice to defendant company not to deliver the potatoes to said company, and demanded possession of them, in pursuance to which demand defendant delivered the potatoes to Donlon.

From the evidence it appears that the sale of the potatoes was negotiated by an agent of Rourke Company with one Hop Sing, who had charge of Donlon's land, and who was farming the same under an agreement with Donlon. It also appears that Hop Sing had no title to the potatoes, but that he was vested with authority to make a sale thereof. The material part of the agreement entered into by these parties on behalf of their principals is as follows:

"Hop Sing hereby sells to Rourke Company * * * 810 fancy spuds at $1.30 per sack * * * being that certain lot in ground at Donlon Island * * * to be delivered f. o. b. bank and shipped to Stockton on or before Monday, next week, 1915, unless otherwise directed by Rourke Co. Must be new sacks, full, open-mouthed, contents properly graded and sorted and * * * to average 116 lbs. to sack.

"In consideration I hereby acknowledge receipt of * * * one dollar in part payment of above sale; balance to be paid after receipt of goods in good merchantable condition as above mentioned. It is understood that arrival of goods at Stockton in good condition, as provided above, shall be considered as the time and place for the consummation of this sale. * * *

"Rourke Co., Buyer,
"By Kei Woo.

"Dated Nov. 24, 1915."

On November 29, 1915, five days after the execution of this agreement, Rourke Company sold the potatoes to plaintiff, Wong Foo, for the sum of $1,053.

To support his claim of title to the property plaintiff introduced in evidence the agreement of sale above recited, and also evidence of his purchase from Rourke Company. In defense of the action defendant claimed that under the agreement the Rourke Company never acquired title to the property, and therefore it could convey none.

Judgment went for plaintiff; a new trial was denied, and this is an appeal from such judgment and order.

[1] We are of the opinion that appellant is correct in its contention that Rourke Company never acquired title to the property in question. At the time of the execution of the contract the potatoes were in the ground, and it was provided by the terms of the agreement that they be of a certain quality and weight, and further that they be shipped to Stockton, where the sale was to be consummated. These provisions of the agreement were for the purpose of permitting the Rourke Company either to elect to purchase the potatoes if they came up to the required standards, or to reject the same if they failed to measure up thereto. The agreement, therefore, amounted to no more than an executory contract of sale, the title to the property remaining in the vendor. Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 Pac. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199.

[2, 3] In addition thereto the contract further provided that the balance of the purchase price was to be paid after receipt of the potatoes in good merchantable condition. The payment was therefore a precedent condition of sale, which suspended the completion of the contract until this condition was performed, and prevented the right of property passing to the vendee. Hilmer v. Hills,

138 Cal. 134, 70 Pac. 1080. There was no compliance with this part of the agreement, Rourke Company being insolvent, and Donlon was entitled to his property as the refusal to pay terminated the agreement. Liver v. Mills, 155 Cal. 459, 463, 101 Pac. 299.

Here no question of estoppel is involved, and Rourke Company, never having acquired title to the property, could convey none to plaintiff.

The contention of respondent that the contract of sale was fully executed upon the arrival of the goods at Stockton, for the reason that Rourke Company elected not to exercise its right of rejection, is without merit. Payment was the principal condition upon which the title depended; and no attempt was made by Rourke Company or its vendee to comply with this provision. As owner of the property Donlon was therefore entitled to its possession.

For the reasons given the judgment and order are reversed.

PEOPLE, on complaint of CITY OF PASADENA et al., v. CITY OF MONTEREY PARK et al. (Civ. 2800.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 18, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 12(1) — ORGANIZATION — JURISDICTION — PENDENCY OF ANNEXATION PROCEEDING.

While valid annexation proceedings were pending, the county supervisors would not have jurisdiction to entertain and act upon a petition calling for proceedings to organize a city, including a part of the territory sought to be annexed, in view of St. 1913, p. 593, § 7, as amended by St. 1915, p. 309, § 4, dealing with exclusiveness of annexation proceedings.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 29(4) — ANNEXATION OF UNINHABITED TERRITORY.

Annexation proceedings, under St. 1913, p. 587, held invalid in that they were upon their face an attempt to treat as inhabited various uninhabited tracts of land and to annex them to the city under the form of proceedings prescribed by said statute, which applies solely to the annexation of inhabited territory.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 33(10) — ANNEXATION PROCEEDINGS — COLLATERAL ATTACK.

In quo warranto proceedings challenging defendants' right to exercise the franchise of a city and its respective offices, on the ground that part of the territory included was annexed to complainant city, defense based upon invalidity of annexation proceedings was available; the petition in the annexation proceedings being insufficient on its face.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 12(1) — ORGANIZATION — JURISDICTION — PENDENCY OF ANNEXATION PROCEEDING.

There being no valid pending annexation proceeding affecting any of the territory included in the proceeding for the incorporation of a city, the board of supervisors was authorized to receive and act upon petition for incorporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action in the nature of quo warranto by the People, upon the complaint of the Cities of Pasadena, South Pasadena, and Alhambra, against the City of Monterey Park, claiming and pretending to be a city of the sixth class, John M. Dutcher, and others. From the judgment rendered, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John Munger, City Atty., of Pasadena, William Hazlett, City Atty., of South Pasadena, Alfred Barstow, City Atty., of Alhambra, and Barstow, Rohe & Jeffers, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Thomas A. Berkebile, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action in the nature of quo warranto in which the plaintiffs challenge the right of the defendants to exercise the franchise of a city and its respective offices. The plaintiffs claim that by virtue of certain proceedings begun on the 17th day of April, 1916, and completed on the 14th day of August, 1916, certain territory was annexed to and became a part of the city of Alhambra. Defendants claim that by proceedings begun on the 8th day of May, 1916, and completed on the 29th day of May, 1916, the city of Monterey Park became a municipal corporation of the sixth class. The alleged city includes territory which was a part of the territory included in the annexation proceedings. The annexation proceedings were conducted under the annexation act of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 587), and the incorporation proceedings were conducted under the municipal corporations act of 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93). Both of the proceedings in question were conducted according to the regular forms of procedure provided by the respective statutes.

[1] The first proposition urged by appellants is that, since the petition for annexation was received and acted upon by the commission of the city of Alhambra and an annexation election had been called prior to the commencement of the proceedings for the organization of the city of Monterey Park, the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county did not have jurisdiction to entertain and act upon a petition calling for proceedings to organize a city including a part of the same territory while the annexation proceedings were pending. In considering this contention let it be assumed that valid annexation proceedings were pending at the time when the incorporation proceedings of defendant city were commenced. The question involved does not appear to have been passed upon by the courts of this state. The only decisions referred to in the briefs are those cited by appellants, and they all sustain the proposition stated. Especially in point are People v. Morrow, 181 Ill. 315, 54 N. E. 839; Taylor v. City of Ft. Wayne, 47 Ind. 274; Independent District of Shelton v. Board of Supervisors, 51 Iowa, 658, 2 N. W. 590. The Illinois decision contains a statement of the other two cases, and the court said:

"As between courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction, the tribunal first acquiring jurisdiction retains it, and is not to be interfered with by another co-ordinate court. The reason of the rule is that otherwise confusion and conflict would arise. Here power is given over the same territory to two parties authorized to act—one a city council or board of trustees, who may attach it to a municipality to which it is adjacent; the other a majority of the legal voters within its boundary, who may organize it into a village."

Further along it is said:

"It cannot, we think, be presumed that the Legislature intended to give citizens and legal voters of certain territory the power to organize a village, and at the same time authorize other parties, by a subsequent proceeding, to defeat that right; and it is clear that to hold otherwise would be to bring into conflict, resulting in confusion, the two opposing powers, or, speaking in a general sense, jurisdictions. Had the petition for annexation been first presented to the city council and its action postponed from time to time, until, by a subsequent proceeding, the organization of the territory into a village had been perfected, the same question would be presented, and we do not think in that case it could reasonably be held that the power of the city council to carry out the annexation proceeding would be defeated. The question as it arises under our statute and decisions is a new one, and not wholly free from difficulty, but we think the foregoing views are sustained by both reason and authority."

Respondents endeavor to break the force of these decisions in two ways: First, they say that the rule to the effect that, when courts have concurrent jurisdiction of the same subject-matter, the first that assumes jurisdiction excludes the other, does not apply unless the parties are the same or stand in privity to each other and the points in litigation or the redress sought in both courts are identical. They insist that in each of the three cases above mentioned the territory over which the two municipalities sought to acquire jurisdiction was identical, whereas in the case at bar it is not identical, and that this fact creates an exception which takes the case out of the general rule. Reference to the decisions above cited, however, shows that the territory involved in the respective opposing proceedings was not identical, except in the Illinois case. Nor do we think that the fact that one proceeding includes some territory not included in the other is alone sufficient to take the case out of the rule.

The other contention urged by respondents in opposition of the proposition stated is based upon the provisions of section 7 of the annexation act of 1913, as amended in 1915. Stats. 1915, p. 309, § 4. That section deals with the exclusiveness of annexation proceedings first instituted by one city as against annexation proceedings affecting the same territory and instituted by another city while the first proceedings remain pending. As to a controversy arising out of such conflicting annexation proceedings, the statute speaks unnecessarily, if the unwritten law relied upon by appellants, and to which we have already referred, would be applicable to such a case. We are satisfied that it would so apply, and that section 7 is merely declaratory of existing law. Respondents argue, however, that by reason of the enactment of section 7 the Legislature sought to fix and limit the jurisdiction of a municipality attempting to annex under that act, and that it should be presumed that the Legislature expressed all it intended to express and granted all jurisdiction that it intended to grant to municipalities annexing thereunder. They say that the legal maxim applies, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius." We think, however, that section 7 was intended to declare and place beyond doubt the disability of one city to annex territory during the pendency of proceedings by another city to annex the same territory, and was not enacted as a limitation of the jurisdiction of the municipality first acting in the matter. The creation of a new and separate municipal corporation through the action of the county authorities and including the territory proposed to be annexed is not a part of the subject-matter of said section 7. That section and the entire act in which it is included dealt solely with the subject of annexations, and not with the original creation of municipal corporations.

[2] We come now to the question whether, as contended by respondents, the annexation proceedings were in fact void. The territory included in the annexation proceedings was in those proceedings treated as one tract of inhabited territory adjoining the city of Alhambra. Its real character was that of a series of parcels of land. This is made manifest by analysis of the description, and is exhibited to the eye by inspection of Defendants' Exhibit A, which is shown in the transcript. The entire territory contains 661.82 acres, far the greater part of which is, and at all times herein mentioned was, a tract of land belonging to the relators, situated nearly 2 miles south of the south boundary of the city of Alhambra, as that city was constituted on the 17th day of April, 1916. For convenience, this tract is in the record called "new sewer farm." The remainder of the annexation territory consists of: (1) Three narrow strips (nowhere more than 300 feet wide) which run around the north, the east, and the south sides of a tract of land designated in the record as "old sewer farm," which belongs to the city of Pasadena and is located immediately east of the city of Alhambra; (2) five strips of land connecting the three above-mentioned strips with the new sewer farm. These five strips consist of: (a) A parcel 30 feet wide, being the south half of that part of Hellman avenue; (b) a parcel 70 feet wide, being the entire width of Garfield avenue; (c) a parcel 60 feet wide, being the entire width of Newmark avenue; (d) a parcel 70 feet wide, being the entire width of Ramona avenue; (e) a parcel 50 feet wide and approximately one mile in length, extending southwesterly from Ramona avenue to the new sewer farm. The only inhabitants of the annexation territory were eight persons who lived in three houses, all of which were situated on one acre on the strip lying east of the old sewer farm, at a point 3.54 miles from the north limits of the new sewer farm. The highways included in the annexation territory extend through a thickly populated section of Monterey Park, and the lines of annexation were so drawn that they exclude 31 electors, 38 homes, and 93 inhabitants living along and adjacent to said highways. Also the lines were so drawn that the ranch house and inhabitants thereof on the new sewer farm were eliminated from the annexation territory, as was also a power station and cottage located on an adjacent corner to the new sewer farm. These lines of exclusion made indentations into the area which naturally was a part of the same territory with the new sewer farm. The result of these exclusions was that all of the tracts involved in the annexation territory were uninhabited, except the tract on which said eight persons lived. These eight persons were all employes working on the old sewer farm, and they were the sole signers of the petition by which the annexation proceedings were instituted.

On these facts it is too plain to admit any doubt that the annexation proceedings were on their face an attempt by the flimsiest subterfuge to treat as inhabited various uninhabited tracts of land, and to annex them to the city of Alhambra under the form of proceedings prescribed by a statute which applies solely to annexation of inhabited territory. It is likewise clear that such proceedings were a palpable fraud upon the inhabitants of the community through whose lands the cord of connection was run from the land adjoining Alhambra to the limits of the new sewer farm. The annexation petition showed on its face that several of the parcels included were public highways, and that therefore they could not be inhabited territory.

"It is not disputed that there are in force in California three separate statutes under which annexations of territory to municipalities may be made: Act of 1889 (Stats. of 1889, p. 358), of 1899 (Stats. of 1899, p. 37), and of 1913 (Stats. of 1913, p. 587). The distinctive features of these acts, as far as germane to the present consideration, and pointed out by respondents, are as follows: (1) Act of 1889 for annexation of inhabited territory upon petition of electors of existing city; (2) act of 1899 for annexation of uninhabited territory; (3) act of 1913 for annexation of inhabited territory upon petition of electors in territory proposed to be annexed, which territory may be either (a) one body (sections 2 to 4), or (b) two or more bodies, which must be submitted as separate propositions (section 6)." People v. City of Lemoore, 174 Pac. 93.

People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 Pac. 205, was an action to determine the validity of municipal annexation proceedings. The original city area was in the form of a square. The proposed annexation was of a broad band of territory completely surrounding the city. It was claimed that some of the included parcels of land were uninhabited, and therefore could not be annexed except by proceedings under the act of 1899. In response to this claim the court (148 Cal. 641, 84 Pac. 209) said:

"Upon this branch of the case a full consideration of the acts of the Legislature satisfies us that the act of 1899 was never designed to in any way affect any of the provisions of the act of 1889, so far as territory which, taken as a whole, may fairly be said to be inhabited territory is concerned, and the evidence in the case at bar was such as to sustain the conclusion of the court below to the effect that the territory here annexed was of that character, notwithstanding the presence of several uninhabited tracts or parcels, each exceeding five acres in area. If the 'territory' proposed to be annexed, regarded as a whole, may fairly be said to be inhabited, the proceedings must be had under the act of 1889, regardless of the number of parcels of land included therein that are uninhabited. Any other construction of the act of 1899 would materially affect the act of 1889, which, it is clearly indicated, was never intended. It is expressly provided in section 5 of the act of 1889 [1899] that 'nothing in this act shall be deemed to repeal the provisions of any act now providing for the annexation of inhabited territory.'"

There may be cases wherein it would be difficult to pass upon the question whether a described territory, "regarded as a whole, may fairly be said to be inhabited," and wherein, therefore, a court would not readily disregard the action of municipal authorities in such proceedings. But in the case at bar the fact that several distinct portions of the territory were uninhabited is not only admitted, but, as we have shown, necessarily appears from the description contained in the annexation petition, which description is repeated in the subsequent resolution, ordinance, notices of election, and certificate by means of which the annexation proceedings were conducted and completed.

[3] Appellants contend that the defense based upon the invalidity of the annexation proceedings cannot be maintained, because such defense comes by way of collateral attack in a quo warranto case. They say that quo warranto is not a proceeding wherein the court may inquire into the question whether the commission of the city of Alhambra did or did not wholly and fairly and completely do and determine everything necessary to be determined when they granted the petition for annexation and annexed the territory in question. They rely upon People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 Pac. 205, where it was held that in a quo warranto proceeding the determination of the city board of trustees affirming the genuineness and numerical sufficiency of the signatures to the petition would not be inquired into in such proceeding, and that the findings and determination of the board must be deemed conclusive "in a quo warranto proceeding, or in any case where the order is collaterally attacked." In further elucidation of the basis upon which its conclusions rested the court said:

"Under the decisions the order of the board calling the election must here be taken as conclusive evidence that the petition presented, sufficient on its face, was in effect sufficiently signed by electors to confer the requisite power, and that the finding of the board to that effect, be it express or implied, was sustained by satisfactory proof."

Assuming, without deciding, that the question whether or not all of the territory included was inhabited, was regularly submitted to and decided by the commission of the city of Alhambra, such decision is not final in this case. This is so because, for the reasons which we have stated, the petition was "on its face" not sufficient. And it is worthy of notice that in People v. City of Lemoore, supra, which was an action "in the nature of quo warranto," the judgment pronouncing against the validity of annexation proceedings was founded upon a complaint which charged that certain parcels of land included in the attempted annexation were in fact not inhabited. These allegations were treated as material and as tendering issues upon which evidence could have been received, and the judgment (entered on default of answer after an order overruling defendants' demurrer to the complaint) was affirmed.

[4] Since, therefore, there was in fact no valid pending annexation proceeding in existence on the 8th day of May, 1916, affecting any of the territory included in the proceedings for incorporation of the city of Monterey Park, it follows that the board of supervisors was authorized to receive and act upon the petition for such incorporation, and that the incorporation proceedings, conceded to be regular in form, are valid.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEMBROOK v. HOUSTON. (Civ. 2897.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 2, 1919.)

1. FRAUD $\Leftrightarrow$ 34 — CONDITION PRECEDENT — PAYMENT OR OFFER TO PAY BALANCE OF PURCHASE PRICE.

In action for damages for fraudulent representations, consisting in defendant's pointing out to plaintiff and representing to plaintiff as the land to be sold a different tract, plaintiff having elected to affirm the contract, complaint held not demurrable, though it appeared therefrom that plaintiff was indebted to defendant for the balance of the purchase price and had not offered to pay or paid.

2. FRAUD $\Leftrightarrow$ 43 — FACTS CONSTITUTING—PLEADING.

In action for damages for fraudulent representations, consisting in defendant's pointing out to plaintiff and representing to plaintiff as the land to be sold a different tract, plaintiff having elected to affirm the contract, complaint, while insufficiently stating facts relied on as constituting actionable fraud, held sufficient as against general demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. E. Barber, Judge.

Action by Sarah V. Pembroke against T. H. Houston. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Olin Wellborn, Jr., and Stephen Monteleone, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This is an action for damages for alleged fraudulent representations by defendant in negotiating a contract of sale of real estate. General demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, plaintiff refusing to amend, judgment was given for the defendant. Plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll.

Under the contract as pleaded the defendant agreed to sell, and the plaintiff agreed to buy, a tract of land described as the north 32 acres of lots 1 and 2 of fractional section 12, township 1 south, range 11 west, S. B. M., for $4,800. $500 was paid upon execution of the contract November 29, 1911, and $250 was to be paid on the 1st of October, 1912, and a like sum yearly thereafter until fully paid, with interest at 7 per cent., payable semiannually. The complaint for damages rests upon an allegation—if it is sufficiently pleaded—that the defendant, in negotiating the sale, pointed out and represented as the land to be sold a different tract than that covered by the description. The plaintiff had paid in all $1,051 on the contract price before discovery of the alleged fraud. She elects to affirm the contract, and sues for damages in the sums of $1,200, for improvements placed on the wrong tract of land, and $3,800, the alleged difference between the value of the land actually covered by the contract and $4,800, the value of the land she claims was represented to her.

[1] The first objection to the sufficiency of the complaint is that it appears therefrom that, although the plaintiff had elected to affirm the contract and sue for damages, and is seeking to recover $5,000, she is indebted to the defendant, under the terms of the contract, in the sum of $3,800, the unpaid balance of the contract purchase price, with accrued interest thereon, which she has not paid or offered to pay, a portion of which was due before she discovered the facts on which she bases fraud, and that a still larger sum was due before the commencement of this action. We doubt if the failure to allege payment or tender of the amount for which she was in default at the time of discovering the alleged fraud is fatal to plaintiff's right of action. If the defendant is shown to have been actually guilty of fraud, he was not in a position to declare a forfeiture; and we are of the opinion that the fraud, if it existed, justified the plaintiff in withholding the payments to recoup the damages she would be entitled to recover. We so construe the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 143 Pac. 729. That was a case closely analogous to this, excepting for the fact that the plaintiff, the vendee, was not in default at the time of commencing suit, but he only averred ability and willingness to pay amounts accrued on his contract to the time of discovery of the fraud. In that case the contract price was for $2,000, and interest on deferred payments, and only $311.25 had been paid at the time of commencing suit. No tender or declaration of willingness or ability to pay the balance of the purchase price was made, although the plaintiff had elected to affirm the contract and sue for the deceit. He recovered judgment for damages in the same of $4,000, but no offset was made to defendant for the unpaid purchase price under the contract, and a new trial was granted on that account. As the opinion of the court sets out, in the ordinary case, where the contract has been wholly executed, its affirmance would give to the defendant the benefit of his entire consideration, and require him to answer in damages only for the difference between the actual value of the land sold and the value it would have had if it had been as represented. The court there lays down the rule, as applicable to executory contracts, as follows:

"Nevertheless we think the rule not difficult of determination. Where, under an executory contract, a plaintiff seeks recoupment in damages for deceit while affirming the contract (and it must necessarily be an affirmance if the action be not after rescission), it must be conclusively taken as to such plaintiff that he stands ready and willing to pay the full consideration called for by the contract, and that the damages which he is entitled to recover are no other and no greater than those which would be awarded to a plaintiff who had fully executed his contract. Therefore, in case of an executory contract, from the award which the jury may make because of the fraud must be deducted the unpaid part of the purchase price or the value of any other consideration."

As we have already pointed out, the only difference between the case cited and the one before us is that in the case here the plaintiff was already in default in a small amount at the time of discovering the facts relied upon to establish fraud. But, if the discovery of the fraud suspends liability to make payments accruing after the discovery of the fraud and pending the action, as we believe it does, we see no reason why defendant should not be estopped by his fraud from claiming at this time a forfeiture for previous suspended payments. It is the fraud itself, and not the discovery, which imposes the disability upon the defendant.

There are facts set out in plaintiff's complaint that suggest the probability that the whole story of this affair has not been told: It appears that shortly after plaintiff gave notice to defendant of her discovery of the alleged misrepresentations of the property sold, the defendant made a demand for redelivery of possession, and that plaintiff surrendered to defendant possession of the premises. No explanation of this transaction is given. It may have been intended as a forfeiture of the contract or as a rescission; but there is nothing in the complaint to attach to it a significance that would defeat plaintiff's right of action, and we cannot assume one to exist.

[2] But another objection, or series of objections, is raised by respondent in support of his judgment and against the sufficiency of this complaint. It is claimed that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute actionable fraud. It clearly does not sufficiently state the facts relied upon, and if special demurrer had been made on that ground, it would have been properly sustained. A careful scrutiny of the complaint fails to disclose any direct allegation of facts which would constitute misrepresentation as to the land to be conveyed under the contract. It is alleged that in the course of the negotiations "defendant showed and exhibited to plaintiff certain land and real estate other and different from the real estate included within the description contained in the agreement of sale," and that "the defendant well knew that the land shown and exhibited was not the land included in the description"; but no word or act is pleaded to show that the plaintiff at any time represented that this outside parcel of land so shown, and so known to him, was to be included in the contract of sale. For all that appears, other than by inference, he may have pointed out this outside parcel as belonging to a neighbor. It is true the pleading avers that at all times the plaintiff relied upon "the representations" made by the defendant as to the land shown and exhibited to plaintiff being the land included in the description, and that at all times the defendant knew that plaintiff was relying "upon the representations" made by defendant to plaintiff to the effect that the land shown and exhibited to plaintiff was the land included within the description; but what were the representations? What was said or done in pointing out this land to justify plaintiff in the conclusion that defendant was intending to designate this outside land as the land he was selling nowhere appears by direct averment in the complaint. Moreover, although the complaint states that plaintiff wholly relied on the representations of defendant that the land pointed out was the land included in the description, it is further alleged that the plaintiff, at various times prior to the 25th day of August, 1913, stated to defendant that she had been informed by a party by the name of Blaine that he was the owner of portions of the property shown by defendant as agreed to be sold under the contract, and that the same did not belong to respondent. How long prior to the 25th day of August did this occur? Quite probably plaintiff may refer to a time subsequent to this contract of sale, but, under the rule that the averments must be construed most strongly against the pleader, this averment may include the period covering the negotiations preceding the contract.

Appellant in his brief states that these objections were not presented on the argument of the demurrer in the trial court, and it is probable that, if they had been, plaintiff would not have refused to amend, for they point out very serious defects in the pleadings; but this could not be sufficient reason for ignoring an objection to the sufficiency of a cause of action because raised for the first time in the appellate court. However, the only question of the sufficiency of this complaint was raised by general demurrer, and, as it is obvious that there has been an attempt to plead the facts relied on as establishing fraud, and that the weakness of the complaint is in the insufficiency of their statement, rather than an entire failure of statement, we are disinclined to hold the complaint insufficient, in the absence of special demurrer. Lattin v. Hazard, 85 Cal. 58, 24 Pac. 611; Grant v. Sheerin, 84 Cal. 197, 23 Pac. 1094; Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 47, 52, 50 Pac. 1066.

The judgment is reversed.

PEIXOUTO v. PEIXOUTO et al.
(Civ. 2759.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 25, 1919.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨22—ORAL CONTRACT TO CONVEY REALTY.

Where a father promised defendant son orally that if the latter would build upon, live upon, and improve certain land, the former would convey same to the latter, and, in pursuance of such agreement, the boundaries of the tract were marked off, and defendant in reliance on agreement performed his part of the agreement, but the father conveyed the tract to plaintiff, another son, who had notice of the rights of defendant, specific performance will be granted against plaintiff seeking to quiet title.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1011(1)—FINDING—REVIEW.

The evidence being conflicting, but sufficient to warrant finding the court on appeal cannot disturb finding.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇨102(3)—ACCRUAL OF RIGHT—CESTUI QUE TRUST—POSSESSION.

Where father promised defendant son, that, if the latter would improve certain land, the father would convey it to him, and defendant went upon the tract and performed his part of the agreement, but the father conveyed the tract to plaintiff, another son, who had notice of the rights of defendant, plaintiff held the bare legal title in trust for defendant, and the statute of limitations would not run against defendant while he was in possession.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇨103(3)—REPUDIATION WHICH WILL SET THE STATUTE IN OPERATION.

Where a father promised defendant son that, if the latter would improve certain land, the father would convey it to him, and defendant went upon the tract and performed his part of the agreement, but the father conveyed the tract to plaintiff, another son, who had notice of the rights of defendant, the giving of notice by plaintiff that he desired defendant to surrender possession was not such a repudiation as would start the statute running against defendant.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS $\S$ 102(3)—REPUTATION OF CONVEYANCE OF LEGAL TITLE.

The ownership of the equitable title cannot be lost by the bar of the statute while the owner is in actual possession and enjoyment of his estate.

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE $\S$ 49(2)—CONSIDERATION—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a father promised defendant son orally that if the latter would build upon, live upon, and improve certain land, the former would convey the same to the latter, and in pursuance of such agreement the boundaries of the tract were measured and marked off, and defendant in reliance upon agreement went upon the tract and performed his part of the agreement, but the father conveyed the tract to plaintiff, another son, who had notice of the rights of defendant, held, there was sufficient consideration to warrant specific performance against plaintiff seeking to quiet title.

7. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE $\S$ 114(2)—CONSIDERATION—SUFFICIENCY—PLEADING.

It is not necessary that allegation as to adequate consideration be in express terms, it being sufficient to set out the facts and value of the land from which it affirmatively appears that the consideration was adequate.

8. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF $\S$ 129(7)—ORAL CONTRACT TO CONVEY LAND—PART PERFORMANCE.

The making of improvements upon the land was sufficient to take oral contract to convey without the statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Manuel A. Peixouto against F. A. Peixouto and others. From that portion of the judgment in favor of defendants on their counterclaim, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

B. C. Mickle, of Centerville, and Dixon L. Phillips, of Oakland, for appellant.

Peter J. Crosby and Stanley R. Sterne, both of Oakland, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This action was brought to quiet title to certain land in the county of Alameda. The defendant F. A. Peixouto filed an answer and cross-complaint in which he set up an oral contract between the plaintiff's grantor and himself by which the plaintiff's grantor agreed to convey to defendant a small portion of the land to which plaintiff sought to quiet his title. The facts set up in the answer and cross-complaint are substantially as follows: That the plaintiff and defendant F. A. Peixouto are brothers; that Frank A. Peixouto, Sr., is the father of the plaintiff and said defendant; that in 1912 the said Frank A. Peixouto, Sr., was the owner and in possession of all the land described in plaintiff's complaint; that for a long time prior thereto the defendant had worked for his said father in and about said tract of land, and in April, 1912, the father promised the defendant, orally, that if the defendant would build upon, live upon, and improve a certain portion of said land, the father would give and convey to the said defendant such portion; that in pursuance of said agreement the said Frank A. Peixouto, Sr., measured and marked off the boundaries of said portion; that thereafter the defendant, in reliance upon said promise and agreement, entered into possession of the said portion of land and erected thereon a dwelling house of the value of $700 and expended the further sum of $300 in improving and fencing the land; that ever since April, 1912, the defendant has continued in open, notorious, and exclusive possession of said portion of the tract of land described in plaintiff's complaint; that the said Frank A. Peixouto, Sr., neglected and refused to grant and convey said portion of said land to defendant, and later conveyed the entire tract to the plaintiff; that the conveyance was made to the plaintiff without any valuable consideration, and while the defendant was in open and visible possession of a part of the same, and at a time when all the facts relating to the agreement between the defendant and his father were well known to the plaintiff herein. Defendant asked that the plaintiff be ordered and directed to execute and deliver to the defendant a deed and conveyance of that portion of the land described in the complaint which was included in the oral contract between the defendant and his father. The plaintiff denied substantially all the allegations of the cross-complaint. Judgment was given quieting title in the plaintiff to the land described in the complaint, excepting that portion thereof set out in the cross-complaint of defendant; and, as to that portion, judgment was given for the defendant, decreeing that the plaintiff holds the legal title thereto in trust for said defendant and cross-complainant, and that the said plaintiff execute to the defendant a good and sufficient deed therefor, and upon his failure so to do, within 30 days, a commissioner named execute and deliver such deed, which shall operate as a transfer from the plaintiff to the defendant of the property described therein; and that the plaintiff be enjoined from asserting any right in the said portion of the property held in trust for the defendant. From the latter portion of the judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Appellant first contends that the pleading and proof does not show a contract sufficiently certain and unambiguous in its terms to warrant specific performance, and particularly for the reason that, as he asserts, there is no evidence that respondent has performed, or fully performed, because the alleged oral agreement was so indefinite and uncertain as to time and terms of performance by defendant that it would be impossible to say what year, month, or day performance was to be completed. The point made by appellant is that it is impossible to determine when the defendant was to build or complete his house. This matter can be of no importance here, because the house has been built and completed, and that side of the contract has been fulfilled. In so far as the part of the contract to be performed by the defendant is concerned, he alleged and proved that he fully performed all things to be by him performed. The contract alleged and proven does not disclose that there was a time limit placed upon his building of the house, and therefore time not being made of the essence of the contract, so far as the evidence discloses, it becomes immaterial just when he did complete the work. He has completed it in accordance with the contract found to exist by the court, and the date of the completed performance can be of no moment except in regard to the point raised by the appellant that the statute of limitations is applicable to defendant's claim, which contention will be considered hereafter.

[1,2] The cross-complaint sets forth an oral gift of land, followed by possession on the part of the donee and the erection of valuable improvements. The property covered by the alleged oral contract is fully identified, and was located and staked out and agreed upon by the parties. The complaint states, the evidence clearly establishes, and the court found, that the defendant, in reliance upon such agreement, went upon the property, erected a home thereon, and improved and cultivated the land, and has been in possession of the same ever since. This is sufficient to justify a decree of specific performance on the part of the vendor or the party standing in the place of the vendor with notice of the rights of the cross-complainant. Magee v. Magee, 174 Cal. 276, 162 Pac. 1023. Contracts to convey land, under such circumstances, have always been enforced in this state. Burlingame v. Rowland, 77 Cal. 315, 19 Pac. 526, 1 L. R. A. 829; Manly v. Howlett, 55 Cal. 94; Bakersfield T. H. Ass'n v. Chester, 55 Cal. 98; Anson v. Townsend, 73 Cal. 415, 15 Pac. 49; Kinsell v. Thomas, 18 Cal. App. 683, 124 Pac. 220. The evidence as to the existence of the contract to convey is conflicting, but the finding is that such an agreement was made, and that finding cannot be disturbed by this court, as the evidence of the defendant and of his witnesses is sufficient to warrant it. We think that the contract alleged and proven is not lacking in certainty nor too indefinite for a court of equity to enforce.

[3] The main question in the case is as to the application of the statute of limitations. It is admitted that defendant completed the house and other improvements some time in 1912, and appellant contends that defendant's claim, accruing when he had performed the things to be by him performed, is now barred by the statute of limitations; the cross-complaint not having been filed until October, 1916. We think there is no merit in this contention. When there exists a contract to convey land and the vendee has fully performed and nothing remains to be done on his part, the vendor then holds the legal title in trust for the benefit of the vendee. Defendant having shown by his proof, and the court having found, that the plaintiff in this case took the land with knowledge of the defendant's rights, the plaintiff would be in the same position as his grantor and would be holding the bare legal title in trust for the defendant. Under such circumstances, while the cestui que trust was in possession, the statute of limitations would not run as against him. Gilbert v. Sleeper, 71 Cal. 290, 12 Pac. 172; Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547, 6 Am. Rep. 624; Beebe v. Dowd, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 255; Lakin v. Sierra B. G. M. Co. (C. C.) 25 Fed. 337; Fleishman v. Woods, 135 Cal. 256, 67 Pac. 276; Scadden v. Scadden, 121 Cal. 33, 53 Pac. 440; Smith v. Matthews, 81 Cal. 120, 22 Pac. 409.

[4] We are not unmindful of the argument made by appellant that the notice given by Frank A. Peixouto, Sr., to the defendant that the agreement was terminated and that he desired the defendant to surrender to him the possession of the property, served upon December 1, 1913 (which was after the defendant had fully performed, and while defendant was in the undisputed possession of the property), was such a repudiation as would set the statute in operation, even as against a cestui que trust. With this contention we cannot agree. It was said in the case of Bennett v. Morrison, 120 Pa. 390, 14 Atl. 264, 6 Am. St. Rep. 711, and the language is quoted with approval in the case of Luco v. De Toro, 91 Cal. 405, 18 Pac. 866, 27 Pac. 1082, that, if the trustee wishes to start in operation the statute of limitations, he must in some way repudiate the agreement and must take possession, either in person or by agent, in order to break the relation his vendee sustained to him under the agreement before the statute will commence to run. So in the present case, we apprehend that even though the vendor had taken possession of the property, in addition to that possession, he would have had to bring home to the vendee, as in the case of tenants in common, knowledge that he thereafter denied his right to possession in order to rely upon the bar of the statute; and, clearly, notice of the denial of the ven-dee's title, while the vendee was in undisputed possession, would have no effect whatever.

In the case of Rush v. Barr, 1 Watts (Pa.) 110, the language of which is quoted with approval in Luco v. De Toro, supra, the court said:

"Whenever the legal title is in one, and the real interest in another, these form but one title, and the statute does not run between them until the trustee disclaims and acts adversely to the cestui que trust. * * * And so in all cases where two persons have each an interest in a tract of land, of such kind that both their interests form but one title, and by their agreement one is to possess for his own use and the use of the other. In such cases the statute does not run until he in possession disclaims the right and interest of the other—denies his right and refuses possession, and such disclaimer and denial must be such that the other has notice of it."

It is true that in some portions of the opinion in the case of Love v. Watkins, supra, cited by appellant, there is language that would indicate, if taken without any connection with the facts under discussion, that notice of adverse claim is sufficient to start the statute in operation; but we believe it will be found, upon an examination of that case and of other cases cited, that, where such language is used, it is used in relation to the particular facts of the case—and that those facts were that the one giving the notice was also in possession, or, at least, that the vendee himself was not in possession when the notice was given. If the vendor has possession, then, assuredly, it is only necessary for him to give notice of holding such possession adversely. Our conclusion seems evident from the quotations from cases contained in appellant's own brief. He quotes from the case of Love v. Watkins, supra, in which the court refers to the case of Harris v. King, 16 Ark. 122, and states that in that case "it was held that a vendor who had received the purchase money became the trustee of the vendee, and although actually in possession of the land held the naked legal title in trust for him, and the statute of limitations was no bar to an action for specific performance of the contract if the vendor had done no act inconsistent with the vendee's title, other than simply holding possession."

As was said in the case of McCauley v. Harvey, 49 Cal. 497:

"A person all the while in possession according to his right, cannot, while holding the possession, be divested of that right in favor of another. If authority be needed in support of a proposition so self-evident, it may be found in Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547."

The case of Fleishman v. Woods, 135 Cal. 256, 67 Pac. 276, is to the same effect. There has been no dispute in the cases following

Love v. Watkins, as to the holding of that case. That case has been quoted as authority for the proposition that the statute will not begin to run so long as the purchaser is in possession, in the following cases: Gilbert v. Sleeper, 71 Cal. 290, 12 Pac. 172; Fleishman v. Woods, supra; Scadden, etc., Co. v. Scadden, 121 Cal. 33, 53 Pac. 440; Fogarty v. Fogarty, 129 Cal. 46, 49, 61 Pac. 570; Smith v. Matthews, 81 Cal. 120, 22 Pac. 409; Luco v. De Toro, 91 Cal. 405, 18 Pac. 866, 27 Pac. 1082; McCauley v. Harvey, 49 Cal. 497. "Possession draws to it, or rather extinguishes all adverse claims and titles." Love v. Watkins, supra.

[5] Both upon principle and the weight of authority, it is necessary for us to hold in this case that no statute of limitations is applicable to the right which defendant is asserting in his cross-complaint. So far as equity is concerned, defendant was the absolute owner of an indefeasible estate and the vendor was a naked trustee having no interest, but charged with the simple duty of conveying to the vendee upon demand. Equity regards the vendee as the owner, upon the principle that it considers that as done which ought to be done. Defendant, therefore, could not be divested of his indefeasible estate while he was in possession, by any one out of possession. The owner of the equitable title is supposed, for the purposes of a court of equity, to have acquired and to hold the title, and the court will compel the conveyance of the legal title only because the equitable title is not recognized in a court of law; but, where it is recognized, it constitutes ownership, and it cannot be lost by the bar of the statute while the owner is in actual possession and enjoyment of his estate. Love v. Watkins, supra. Since the defendant could not be divested of his title by the operation of the statute, it follows that, having the equitable title, he is entitled to enforce a conveyance of the naked legal title as an incident to such equitable ownership. As long as the equitable title exists, it must exist with all its incidents.

[6, 7] Appellant contends that there is no allegation in the cross-complaint that the plaintiff has received an adequate consideration for the contract. It is not necessary that such allegation should be in express terms. It is sufficient if the cross-complaint set out the facts and the value of the land and it affirmatively appear therefrom that the consideration was adequate. Magee v. Magee, 174 Cal. 276, 162 Pac. 1023. In the numerous cases cited herein covering contracts similar to the one found by the trial court to exist in this case, it has been held that under facts very similar there existed a sufficient consideration to warrant specific performance. The case of Burlingame v. Rowland, 77 Cal. 315, 19 Pac. 526, 1 L. R. A. 829, presents a very similar state of facts.

[8] The objection that the contract should have been in writing is without merit. The contract had been partly performed, and the making of the improvements upon the property is sufficient to take it without the statute of frauds.

The judgment is affirmed.

41 Cal. App. 1

WARDEN v. BITTLESTON LAW & COLLECTION AGENCY et al. (Civ. 2885.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 28, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 26, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡581 — SALE FOR DELINQUENT ASSESSMENTS—NOTICE TO REDEEM—SUFFICIENCY.

Where land owned in common was sold for delinquent assessment levied under Street Improvement Act 1909, notice by purchaser to one co-owner that on the 7th day of August, 1915, or thereafter, unless sooner redeemed, application would be made for a deed, and notice to the other co-owners to the same effect, but stating date as August 31st, were insufficient under section 17 of the act to cut off the right of the co-owners to redeem, and plaintiff has only "the lien of the assessment" as provided by section 15.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡581—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENT—RIGHT OF REDEMPTION—TERMINATION.

The right of redemption from a sale under Street Improvement Act 1909 continues in the owner indefinitely until notice of redemption is given and a deed executed in accordance with the provisions of the statute.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡581—SALE FOR DELINQUENT ASSESSMENT—NOTICE OF REDEMPTION—STATUTE.

Assessments for street improvements, like tax proceedings, are in invitum, and where the statute prescribes the notice of redemption which is to divest the owner of his title, that notice must be given.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡456(1), 575 —STREET IMPROVEMENTS—SEPARATE ASSESSMENT OF INTEREST OF CO-OWNER.

Under Street Improvement Act 1909, the undivided interest of each co-owner is neither assessed nor sold for delinquent taxes separately.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡581—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—DELINQUENT ASSESSMENT—REDEMPTION.

While, under Street Improvement Act 1909, §§ 14, 16, a co-owner as a "party in interest" may redeem, still he must pay the same amount that would be paid by a sole owner, were the land owned in severalty.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡581 — ASSESSMENT FOR IMPROVEMENTS — SALE — REDEMPTION BY COTENANT.

A redemption by a tenant in common is a redemption of the entire estate, and not merely of his undivided interest, though he doubtless would have a claim against his cotenants for reimbursement to the extent of their proportionate shares.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡581 — ASSESSMENTS FOR IMPROVEMENTS — CUTTING OFF RIGHT OF REDEMPTION OF CO-OWNERS.

Purchaser cannot proceed piecemeal to cut off right of redemption of each co-owner.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡581 — DELINQUENT ASSESSMENT—REDEMPTION.

Street Improvement Act 1909 contemplates but one sale for delinquent assessment and but one redemption, so that if the whole estate be owned in common by two or more as cotenants, and if any one of them retains the right to redeem, his right of redemption not having been cut off by sufficient notice, all may redeem.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡581—DELINQUENT ASSESSMENTS—REDEMPTION—NOTICE.

Under Street Improvement Act 1909, a notice of redemption must set forth the time when the purchaser will apply to the tax collector for a deed, and the time fixed must be definite and certain.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Julia P. Warden against the Bittleston Law & Collection Agency and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Catherine A. McKenna and J. Irving McKenna, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Plaintiff sued to quiet title to a parcel of land in the city of Los Angeles, claimed by her by reason of an assessment sale under the Street Improvement Act of 1909. Stats. 1909, p. 1042. Defendants recovered judgment; plaintiff appeals. The appeal presents for our consideration the sufficiency of certain notices of redemption.

[1] Defendants Robert H. Punter and Rebecca Punter were owners of the land as tenants in common. On March 19, 1914, they mortgaged the property to defendant Krug. Pursuant to a decree foreclosing the mortgage, Krug purchased the property at sheriff's sale on July 20, 1915, and on July 27, 1915, recorded the sheriff's certificate of sale. On August 5, 1914, which was subsequent to the mortgage to Krug, but prior to the foreclosure sale thereunder, the city tax and license collector, pursuant to the provisions of the Street Improvement Act, sold the property to plaintiff for a delinquent assessment levied to pay for certain street improvements. Thereupon the tax and license collector delivered to plaintiff a certificate of sale, as provided by the act. On July 7, 1915, which was shortly prior to the expiration of the time allowed by law to the co-owners for redemption from the foreclosure sale to Krug, plaintiff caused to be served upon defendant Rebecca Punter, one of the two co-owners, a notice that—

"On the 7th day of August, 1915, or thereafter, unless sooner redeemed, application will be made * * * to the city tax and license collector * * * for a deed."

This notice was not served on the other co-owner, Robert H. Punter, but thereafter, on July 29, 1915, plaintiff did cause a notice of redemption to be served upon Robert. The notice so served on Robert Punter set forth that—

"On the 31st day of August, 1915, or thereafter, unless sooner redeemed, application will be made * * * to the city tax and license collector * * * for a deed."

Though served upon Robert, this notice was not served upon Rebecca Punter. No notice to redeem from the street assessment sale to plaintiff was served on Krug, the mortgagee and purchaser at the foreclosure sale. On September 1, 1915, the city tax and license collector executed a deed to plaintiff. Claiming to be the owner under this deed, plaintiff brought this action to quiet her title. We think the notices of redemption that plaintiff caused to be served upon Robert and Rebecca were insufficient, and that plaintiff has only that which she acquired under the assessment sale to her on August 5, 1915, i. e., "the lien of the assessment," as provided by section 15 of the act. Stats. 1909, p. 1051.

[2] The right of redemption from a tax sale or from a sale under a Street Improvement Act, such as is here under consideration, continues in the owner indefinitely until notice of redemption is given and a deed executed in accordance with the provisions of the statute. By section 17 of the Street Improvement Act (Stats. 1909, p. 1051), it is provided that—

"At any time after the expiration of twelve months from the date of sale, the tax collector must execute to the purchaser, * * * if such purchaser * * * has complied with the provisions of this section, a deed of the property sold. * * * The purchaser * * * must at least thirty days before he applies for a deed, serve upon the owner of the property, and upon the occupant of such property, if the same is occupied, a written notice, setting forth * * * the time when such purchaser * * * will apply to the tax collector for a deed."

The service of notice upon the owner, as provided by the act, means personal service.

"When a statute requires service on a person it means personal service, unless some other service is specified or indicated." McDermont v. Board of Police, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 647.

[3] Assessments for street improvements, like tax proceedings, are in invitum, and where the statute prescribes the notice which is to divest the owner of his title, that notice must be given. None other will suffice. A court will not be justified in saying that some other kind of notice would be equally effective. The express requirements of the statute cannot be avoided on the ground that they serve no useful purpose. It is never a question whether, by reason of some omission, the owner has been injured or misled; but whether there has been a compliance with everything the law makes a condition precedent to the right to a deed.

[4-6] Under the statute the undivided interest of each co-owner is neither assessed nor sold separately. Each parcel of land is assessed and sold in solido. Each parcel must be sold to the person who will take the least quantity of land and pay the amount of the assessment penalty, and costs due, including fifty cents for the certificate of sale. Stats. 1909, p. 1050, § 14. At any time before the expiration of one year from the date of the sale the parcel sold may be redeemed by "any party in interest." Section 16. The party so redeeming must pay to the tax collector the full amount for which the property was sold, and in addition thereto a penalty of 10 per cent. if redeemed within 6 months, or 25 per cent. if redeemed within 12 months. Section 16. It will thus be seen that though a co-owner, as a "party in interest," may redeem, still he must pay the same amount that would be paid by a sole owner were the land owned in severalty. A redemption by a tenant in common is a redemption of the entire estate, and not merely of his undivided interest, though he doubtless would have a claim against his cotenants for reimbursement to the extent of their proportionate shares.

[7, 8] If a co-owner cannot proceed by "piecemeal" to effect redemption—and he cannot—the converse is equally true, and a purchaser at the tax sale cannot proceed by "piecemeal" to cut off the right of redemption of each part owner. The statute contemplates but one sale of the parcel sold, and but one redemption—a sale of the whole estate in its entirety and a redemption, if any be made, of the estate in its entirety. So that, if the whole estate be owned in common by two or more as cotenants, and if any one of them retains the right to redeem—his right of redemption not having been cut off by a sufficient notice—all may redeem. That is, until the purchaser has complied with the statute as to all the co-owners, the right of redemption remains to all—to those actually served with notice as well as to those not served. White v. Shaw, 150 Mich. 270, 114 N. W. 210.

[9] A notice of redemption must "set forth"—that is, fix—"the time when the purchaser will apply to the tax collector for a deed." The time fixed must be definite and certain. A notice that at an indefinite time the purchaser will apply for a deed fixes no time when the right to redeem will expire. Railroad Company v. Mecartney, 104 Cal. 621, 38 Pac. 448.

Tested by these principles, it must be held that the right of redemption of the co-owners, Robert H. Punter and Rebecca Punter, has not been cut off. If the first notice—the notice served on Rebecca Punter—be regarded as superseded by the second—that served on Robert—then the case stands as though Rebecca Punter had never been served with any notice. And if all co-owners are not served with notice, the time for redemption remains for all. If the first notice be regarded as not superseded by the second, then the two notices must be read together, just as though they were contained in one document. So considered, the notices are in irreconcilable conflict—one giving notice that redemption might be made at any time on or after August 7th, and the other that redemption might be made at any time on or after August 31st. Such a notice does not set forth or fix "the time" when the purchaser will apply for a deed. A notice so indefinite is no notice at all. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider whether notice should have been served upon Krug, the purchaser at the foreclosure sale.

If the foregoing is the only fatal objection to plaintiff's title—and our attention has not been called to any other—then, though appellant has not become the owner of the property, she is, nevertheless, still left with the lien of the assessment. Upon filing the copy of the certificate of sale in the tax collector's office, "the lien of the assessment shall vest in the purchaser, and is only divested by a redemption of the property as in this act provided." Section 15. Had the judgment of the trial court simply adjudged that plaintiff is not the owner, an affirmation of the judgment, under the views above set forth, would be in order. But defendants, in their answer, pray for affirmative relief. In compliance with their prayer for such relief, the judgment adjudges defendant Krug to be the owner by virtue of the sheriff's certificate of sale issued to him upon the foreclosure sale, and defendants Robert and Rebecca Punter to be entitled to redeem from such sale to Krug. In granting affirmative relief to defendants, the trial court should have adjudged that any title that is in Krug, as purchaser at the sheriff's sale, or in Robert and Rebecca Punter, as the original co-owners, is subject and subordinate to plaintiff's lien of assessment, vested in her by reason of the tax collector's sale of the property to her to pay the delinquent street assessment. The findings do not find any fact upon which such a judgment may rest. On the contrary, the court found that "it is not true that plaintiff acquired an interest in said property by reason of a sale by the city tax and license collector." For these reasons the case must be sent back for a new trial.

Judgment reversed.

HIBERNIAN PETROLEUM CO. v. DAVIES.
(Civ. 2883.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 2, 1919.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §103(1)—"MEMORANDUM"—SUFFICIENCY.

Acceptance by defendant of checks with memoranda indorsed thereon to the effect that checks were from plaintiff company on account of first installment of bonus on lease that S. had contracted for and indorsements of defendant "in full settlement of within account," the checks being approved by S. as president and countersigned by secretary, did not constitute a memorandum within the statute of frauds sufficient to evidence a contract to execute a lease to plaintiff company.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Memorandum.]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT §22(4)—AGREEMENT TO EXECUTE LEASE—EVIDENCE.

In action to recover $5,000 paid as a bonus for a lease and costs of improvements made on the premises, held, court was justified in finding that defendant at no time contracted to execute a lease to plaintiff company, and was at no time obligated to do so.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §1071(5)—ERRONEOUS FINDING—HARMLESS ERROR.

A finding that defendant was unaware that the sum of $5,000 received by him from S. was the money of the plaintiff, though erroneous, is without prejudice, since the fact that a third person was paying the obligation did not alter the contractual relations so far as defendant is concerned.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the Hibernian Petroleum Company against J. F. Davies. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Foster and Chas. A. Barnhart, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Geo. E. Whitaker and T. N. Harvey, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The complaint in this action alleges that the plaintiff is a corporation, and that in May, 1911, the defendant entered into a contract in writing with the plaintiff whereby he agreed, that upon the payment to him of a bonus of $10,000, he would execute and deliver to plaintiff a lease of certain land for oil and mineral purposes; that during the said month of May the plaintiff paid defendant $5,000 of this bonus, and that on the 30th day of September, 1911, it tendered to the defendant the remaining $5,000 of the stipulated bonus, and demanded the execution and delivery of the lease; that defendant refused, and has ever since refused, to make such lease; and that plaintiff, relying on the agreement with defendant, entered into possession of the lands in question and expended $20,000 thereon in improvements.

The action is brought to recover the $5,000 paid on the bonus and the cost of the improvements made.

The case was tried on the issues made by the complaint and the denials of the answer, and the court found that it was not true that defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiff in writing, or at all, but that it was true that the defendant was paid by one H. E. Sinclair the sum of $5,000 on account of a bonus for a lease of the premises in question, which sum of $5,000 was the money of plaintiff, but that defendant was not aware that it was plaintiff's money. There are other collateral matters covered by the pleadings and findings, but the facts as stated cover the gist of the action.

Judgment was given for the defendant, and the appeal is taken by plaintiff on the judgment roll, supported by a bill of exceptions, on the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the court.

The only evidence introduced tending to show any privity of contract between the plaintiff and defendant was the checks by which the $5,000 bonus payment was made, and certain memoranda thereon written. There were two checks, one of date of May 15, 1911, for $1,000 and one of May 31, 1911, for $4,000. The first check or order was as follows:

"Bakersfield, Cal., May 15th, 1911. Hibernian Petroleum Company: Pay to the order of J. F. Davies, one thousand dollars ($1,000.00). Approved: Harry E. Sinclair, President, Countersigned: Cecil H. Soltau, Sec'y. To Bank of Bakersfield, Bakersfield, Calif."

This check contained the following memorandum, indorsed upon it at the time it was drawn, or at least before delivery to payee:

"Hibernian Petroleum Company $1,000, to J. F. Davies, Dr. Bakersfield, Cal., May 15th—first installment of bonus on lease in Sunset Field, northwest quarter and west half of northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of Sec. 4, township 11 north, range 23 W., S. B. & M., sixty acres more or less."

Also indorsement:

"In full settlement of within account. [Signed] J. F. Davies" —and further indorsements not relevant to this case. The second check, for $4,000 and indorsements thereon, was in the same form, excepting for the date and amount.

The evidence discloses that the only negotiations which were had with the defendant up to a period some time after the making and delivery of these checks, with regard to this mining property lease, were by one H. E. Sinclair. So far as disclosed, he appeared to the defendant to be acting for himself, though the defendant admitted on the trial that he understood that Sinclair was getting the lease to sell or negotiate. But up to the time of these payments, nothing is shown to have occurred to give the defendant notice that any one but Sinclair was immediately concerned in the transaction. The record discloses that the defendant was not himself the owner of this property, but was acting under an agreement whereby he was obtaining a lease from the owner to a larger tract, including the land in question, subject to a $10,000 bonus on his part; and he proposed to turn over to Sinclair 60 acres of this land, as described in the pleadings, in consideration of Sinclair paying to him the bonus, which he, in turn, was to pay to the owner, and to execute to Sinclair a lease to the 60 acres. Sinclair, in his own name, accepted this proposition, and thereafter made the payments heretofore referred to by orders or checks on the plaintiff company, and a lease was executed to him on the first payment of $1,000, with the knowledge on his part that the lease would not be effective until he had paid all of the stipulated bonus and a like amount had in turn been paid to the owner of the land. Sinclair was, at the time, a stockholder and the president of the plaintiff company, and, as we glean from the rather obscure evidence in the record, had been let in as a stockholder and made president of the company because of his undertaking to secure for the company valuable leases. It is probably true that he was acting as trustee for the corporation in negotiating and obtaining this lease; but the court finds that defendant had no notice or knowledge of this fact at the time the $1,000 and $4,000 bonus payments were made. This finding is supported by the evidence, excepting as to such notice as was given by the checks themselves and the indorsements thereon.

The lease to Sinclair bears date May 12, 1911, and is acknowledged as of date May 16, 1911. The defendant testified that the lease was delivered to Sinclair on May 18, 1911. This was after defendant had received the first bonus check of $1,000 from Sinclair. He will be presumed, therefore, to have had at that time such notice of the connection of the plaintiff corporation with the transaction as this check and its contents imported.

[1] The principal question on this appeal arises on this point: Did the acceptance of these checks, with the recitals therein that they were from the Hibernian Petroleum Company, and on account of bonus on the lease that Sinclair had contracted for, and the fact that they were approved by Sinclair as president and countersigned by the secretary of the company, create any liability on the part of the defendant, Davies, to the plaintiff company?

Plaintiff's counsel contend that these checks, either or both of them, with defendant's indorsement and signature thereon, constitute a memorandum in writing, signed by the party to be charged, sufficient to evidence a contract to execute a lease to the plaintiff company of the lands in question, and within the statute of frauds. No justification in law is shown in support of such a conclusion. The memoranda indorsed on the checks does not indicate to whom the lease was to be executed, and it was not signed by the defendant, the party to be charged. His signature on the back of the check was an acknowledgment of receipt of the payments "in settlement of the account," referring, we must assume, to the installments on the bonus agreement he had entered into with H. E. Sinclair personally. The evidence justifies the conclusion that he accepted these checks as payment of the obligation of Sinclair, and in pursuance of his agreement to execute a lease to Sinclair; but there is nothing in the transaction to indicate that Sinclair, or the defendant, or the plaintiff company itself, understood as intended by this memorandum anything more than a direction of the payment of this money on account of the agreement previously made between Sinclair and the defendant. It is true, as appellant sets forth in its brief, that defendant was notified by the contents of these checks that Sinclair and the secretary of the corporation had drawn them on the Hibernian Petroleum Company, and that they had no implied authority to use the corporation's funds for Sinclair's personal contracts; but he might properly assume, what doubtless is a fact, that the corporation was acquiring an interest in this lease through and in the name of Sinclair, as it legitimately could have done.

[2] In pursuance of the agreement with Sinclair, and on the payment of the first $1,000 of the stipulated bonus, the defendant executed the lease in question to Sinclair. He was under no obligation to make the lease until the entire bonus of $10,000 was paid; but, as he testifies, he made it at this time with notice to Sinclair that it would not be effective until the remaining payments were made, and defendant's obligations to the owner of the property, from whom he in turn was leasing, had thereby been met. Soon after the payment of $4,000 by the second check had been made, Sinclair seems to have severed his connection with the plaintiff corporation, which had, in the meantime, entered into the possession of the leased property, and apparently by virtue of this lease. In any event, the officers of the corporation came into the possession of this lease long before the alleged tender and demand on defendant. There is nothing to indicate that the improvements and development work made by plaintiff on this property were not under and in reliance on this lease. It is not until later, when the corporation had evidently become financially involved and had defaulted in the conditions contained in the lease agreement, and a surrender of the premises had been demanded by defendant, that steps were taken to assert an independent contractual relation with the defendant, and to demand the execution of a new lease directly to the plaintiff corporation. A written offer was made to pay to defendant the remaining $5,000 of the bonus, on condition of the execution of a lease directly to the corporation. This defendant refused to do, on the ground that he had already made the lease to Sinclair in pursuance of his contract. Previous to this time the lease had become effective by the performance by defendant of the conditions of his contract with the owner of the premises; the plaintiff company was in possession under it, and was doubtless entitled to all its benefits, both as against Sinclair and the defendant. There is no reason to doubt, under the facts disclosed by the record, that the plaintiff company authorized the payments made to the defendant out of the company's funds; that in taking the lease in his own name, whether with or without the company's consent, Sinclair was acting as plaintiff's agent, and held the lease in trust for its benefit; and no reason is shown, unless it was financial inability, why the plaintiff did not or could not have secured to itself all the benefits of this lease that it would have been entitled to had it been named therein as lessee, providing it had complied with the terms of the contract with defendant. The court was justified in its findings that the defendant at no time had contracted to execute a lease to plaintiff, and was at no time obligated so to do.

[3] The third finding of the trial court, to the effect that the defendant was unaware that the sum of $5,000 received by him from Sinclair was the money of plaintiff, is probably not justified by the evidence, in view of the fact that it was paid by checks drawn on the plaintiff company by its president and secretary. But a finding in favor of plaintiff as to such knowledge would not alter the liability of the defendant. His contract was with Sinclair, and the fact that a third party was paying the obligation did not alter these contractual relations, so far as defendant was concerned. The finding, if erroneous, was without prejudice.

The same may be said as to other specifications as to unsupported findings. They were all collateral to the main issue of a contractual relation between the plaintiff company and the defendant, and, in the absence of such relation, are not material to the decision.

Judgment affirmed.

DENEHY v. STEWART et al. (Civ. 1966.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 6, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 3, 1919.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨263(2)—CONSTRUCTIVE FRAUD — FRAUDULENT INTENT.

In view of Civ. Code, § 1573, and under section 3442, declaring that any transfer or incumbrance of property made or given voluntarily or without a valuable consideration by party while insolvent shall be fraudulent and void as to existing creditors, it is necessary where constructive fraud is relied on to allege fraudulent intent.

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨273—FRAUDULENT INTENT—PRESUMPTION.

While a transfer of property with intent to delay or defraud creditor is void under Civ. Code, § 3439, as to creditors, intent to delay or defraud will not be presumed from the fact of transfer, for section 3432 allows a debtor to prefer one creditor over others, and under section 3442 it is only where the transfer is made or given voluntarily or without a valuable consideration by a party while insolvent that the transfer is deemed to be fraudulent and void as to creditors.

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨87(1)—“VOLUNTARY TRANSFER.”

Where a mortgagee demanded payment and the mortgagor to satisfy him conveyed his equity of redemption, held that the conveyance cannot be deemed voluntary within Civ. Code, § 3442, declaring that where a transfer is made or given voluntarily or without valuable consideration it shall be void as to existing creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Voluntary Transfer.]

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨76(2)—“VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.”

Within Civ. Code, § 3442, providing that, where transfer is made voluntarily or without valuable consideration by a party while insolvent, it shall be void as to existing creditors, a valuable consideration is such as money or the like, and the adequacy or the inadequacy of the amount or its disproportion to the actual value of the property does not affect the kind of consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Valuable Consideration.]

5. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨273 — ACTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a deed was supported by a valuable consideration, the burden of showing that it was made with fraudulent intent is upon creditors of the grantor attacking it.

6. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨115(1), 156 (1)—VALIDITY—PREFERENTIAL CONVEYANCE.

A conveyance is not open to attack as fraudulent because by means thereof the debtor prefers one creditor over another, and to successfully attack such conveyance it must be shown that the grantee had knowledge of the grantor's insolvency and of his intention to defraud other creditors, or of facts sufficient to put a reasonable man on inquiry.

7. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨74(2)—INADEQUACY OF PRICE.

Proof of inadequacy of price will not alone establish a fraudulent intent on the part of the grantor, participated in by the grantee, which will allow creditors of the grantor to attack the conveyance as fraudulent, unless the inadequacy is so glaring as to stamp the transaction with fraud.

8. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨301(1)—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit by creditors of a grantor to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, where it appeared that he conveyed the equity of redemption to the mortgagee upon demand for payment, and that the land was estimated to be worth $5,000, the mortgage being for about $1,800, evidence held insufficient to establish grantee's knowledge of grantor's insolvency, or to show fraudulent intent on part of the grantee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence A. Raker, Judge.

Action by D. S. Denehy against John Stewart and wife and Mary E. Wyckliffe. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Daly B. Robnett, of Alturas, for appellants.

Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff is a judgment creditor of John Stewart, and brings the action to set aside a deed made by said Stewart and wife to their codefendant, Mary E. Wyckliffe, conveying to her certain land described in the complaint. It is alleged in the complaint that, at the time said deed was executed, to wit, December 22, 1915, defendant Stewart was wholly insolvent, and “the consideration named in said deed was the sum of $10,” and that the land so conveyed was then and is now “reasonably worth the sum of $5,000." It is further alleged, on information and belief, that said deed was executed "for a grossly inadequate consideration, with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the said John Stewart, including this plaintiff, and that the said defendant Mary E. Wyckliffe accepted and received the said deed with knowledge of said fraudulent intent on the part of the said John Stewart, and with the intent upon her part to assist the said John Stewart in his said fraudulent purpose, and to hold the said land as a secret trust for the said John Stewart in order that he might occupy the same and receive benefits therefrom, regardless of his said creditors and their claims, including the claim of this plaintiff as aforesaid"; that the said John Stewart "has no other property, other than the aforesaid lands out of which this plaintiff can realize and collect his said judgments or any part thereof."

Defendants demurred to the complaint on the grounds: (1) Insufficiency of facts; (2) that two causes of action have been improperly united in this that an attempt is made to set forth a cause of action to set aside a deed on the alleged ground that it was given in constructive fraud of creditors, united with an alleged ground of actual fraud of creditors; (3) that the complaint is uncertain, in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether or not the plaintiff (defendant Stewart) executed said deed in constructive fraud of creditors or in actual fraud of creditors; (4) that the complaint is uncertain in this, that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether plaintiff is attempting to set aside said deed on the ground that it was given without consideration and when the grantors were insolvent or on the ground that there was no consideration, and that the deed was given with fraudulent knowledge and intent on the part of the grantors to defraud existing creditors; nor can it be ascertained from said complaint whether or not defendant Wyckliffe had any knowledge of the existence of any other creditors of defendants the Stewarts when she accepted said deed.

The demurrer was overruled. Defendants the Stewarts answered: Admitted the execution of the said deed, but alleged that $10 was not the true and sole consideration therefor; that these defendants executed and delivered said deed "to said Mary E. Wyckliffe at the instance and request of one D. O'Brien, and in satisfaction of a certain note and mortgage held by said D. O'Brien, assignee of Julia O'Brien, on the said property so deeded from these defendants, which said mortgage was for the principal sum of $1,600 and these defendants further alleged that there was at said time due said D. O'Brien from these defendants on account of said note and mortgage the sum of $1,795, and that said deed was given by these defendants in payment and discharge of said note and mortgage and of the amounts so due thereon, to wit, $1,795, and the sum of $5 cash" denied that said lands were reasonably worth the sum of $5,000, or any sum in excess of $1,800; denied specifically the averments of the complaint alleging inadequacy of consideration for said deed, or that it was executed to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors or plaintiff, or that defendant Wyckliffe received said deed with knowledge of any fraudulent intent on the part of the grantors, or that she held said lands as a secret trust.

Defendant Wyckliffe answered, and, among other things, alleged that the consideration for said deed was as stated in the answer of her codefendants; denied that the consideration for said deed was inadequate, or that the deed was executed with fraudulent intent, or to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, or that this defendant had any knowledge of such intent; and denied that when said deed was executed she had any knowledge of the existence of any creditors of said Stewarts or of the claim of plaintiff.

The court made the following findings of fact:

I. That plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant John Stewart on October 28, 1916, as alleged in the complaint, for the sum of $3,232.23;

II. That, prior to December 22, 1915, defendant John Stewart, and wife executed and delivered to Julia O'Brien their note for $1,600, secured by mortgage on said land, and that subsequently, prior to December 22, 1915, she assigned said note and mortgage to her father, Dennis O'Brien.

III. That, on December 22, 1915, defendants Stewart and wife executed and delivered to defendant Mary E. Wyckliffe, daughter of Dennis O'Brien, "their deed to the lands described in the said complaint at and for an alleged consideration of $10."

IV. "That at the time the said deed last aforesaid was executed to the said Mary E. Wyckliffe there was due and owing to the said Dennis O'Brien, upon said note and mortgage the sum of $1,795, and that at or about the time of the execution of said deed the said Dennis O'Brien paid to the said John Stewart the sum of $5 in cash, and released and satisfied the said note and mortgage. And thereupon the said Mary E. Wyckliffe went into the possession of said lands and the whole thereof, and has remained in possession thereof ever since the execution of said deed, receiving the rents and profits thereof, and that the full amount for which said mortgage is a lien upon said property against the said judgments of plaintiff is the said sum of $1,795, with no accrued interest since December 22, 1915."

V. That, at the time the Stewarts executed said deed, "the said John Stewart was indebted to plaintiff in a large sum of money, to wit, the amounts set forth in the aforesaid judgments," and at that time the said John Stewart had no property subject to execution except said lands, but was then and ever since has been, and now is, insolvent.

VI. That said land, at the time of the execution of said deed and ever since, has been of the value of $5,000, and "that the equity of redemption owned by the said defendant John Stewart in the said land at the date of the execution of the said last-named deed was, ever since has been, and now is of the value of $3,200."

VII. "That the only consideration that was paid to the said John Stewart for the conveyance of said land to the said Mary E. Wyckliffe, or ever received by him for said conveyance was the sum of $5 and the said last-named sum was received and accepted by the said John Stewart in full settlement and satisfaction for all his right, title, and interest in said lands over and above said mortgage lien and debt; that is to say, for his equity of redemption in the said lands."

VIII. "That the said conveyance and deed was executed by the said John Stewart and Ida E. Stewart, his wife, to the said Mary E. Wyckliffe for a grossly inadequate consideration, with the intent upon their part to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the said John Stewart, including this plaintiff, and that the said defendant Mary E. Wyckliffe accepted and received the said deed with knowledge of said fraudulent intent, and with the intent upon her part of assisting the said John Stewart and the said Ida E. Stewart, his wife, in such fraudulent purpose, and to hold the said lands in secret trust for the said John Stewart and Ida E. Stewart in order that they might occupy the same and receive benefits therefrom regardless of the creditors of the said John Stewart, including this plaintiff."

As conclusions of law the court found that defendant John Stewart is the owner of the lands in question; that he is now and was, when he and his wife executed the deed referred to, indebted to plaintiff as alleged in the complaint; that Stewart and his wife executed and delivered the aforesaid deed to defendant Wyckliffe, with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, and particularly to defraud this plaintiff, "and that said Mary E. Wyckliffe accepted and received the said deed with the knowledge of the fraudulent intent on the part of the said John Stewart and Ida Stewart, with the intent upon her part to assist the said John Stewart and Ida E. Stewart in said fraudulent purpose, and to hold the said lands as a secret trust for the said John Stewart, in order that he might occupy the same and receive the benefits therefrom, regardless of his creditors and their claims, including the claim of this plaintiff"; that the defendants the Stewarts at the date of the execution of said deed, were, ever since have been, and now are insolvent; that the said deed is fraudulent and void; that plaintiff is entitled to a decree adjudging that said deed is void, "and that the said lands be sold, subject to the said mortgage, and the proceeds thereof applied in satisfaction upon the said judgments, interest, and costs, and that plaintiff have judgment" for costs of this suit. Judgment was accordingly entered, from which defendants appeal.

In presenting his case, plaintiff introduced the judgment roll, showing defendant John Stewart's indebtedness to plaintiff as alleged; also execution issued on said judgment, showing return, judgment wholly unsatisfied; also deed of Stewart and wife to Mary E. Wyckliffe, dated December 22, 1915, referred to in the complaint. Plaintiff testified as a witness in his own behalf that said judgment is wholly unpaid; that defendant John Stewart, at the time said deed was recorded, owned no property other than the land in question, and has had no property since, and has none now out of which said judgment or any part of it could be satisfied; that the land consisted of 80 acres near Cedarville, "worth about $60 an acre," and 80 acres of timber land, worth $10 per acre. Other witnesses testified to the value of the land, placing it at a figure justifying the finding of the court as to value. Upon this evidence the plaintiff rested.

Defendants moved for a nonsuit on the ground "that plaintiff has failed to show any fraud in this transaction, showing the deed was made to defraud any creditor or for the purpose of hindering or delaying any creditor of John Stewart or Ida E. Stewart; and particularly that they have failed to show that Mary E. Wyckliffe had knowledge of any such design to defraud any creditor whatever"; that plaintiff has "failed to show that the deed was given in constructive fraud of creditors as defined by the Civil Code in section 3442, that it is a voluntary transfer without any consideration by the party who contemplates such fraud.

"The Court: I will hear the evidence in this case, and see what you have got. The motion for a nonsuit is denied."

We will not stop to consider the ruling of the court upon the motion for a nonsuit, inasmuch as the subsequent proceedings disclosed the facts as to the transaction in its entirety and furnish a safe basis on which to rest the decision.

It appeared, without conflicting evidence that Stewart had been indebted to O'Brien for some time, and, on August 1, 1912, the note and mortgage were executed to cover the indebtedness, including interest and also taxes paid by O'Brien, amounting in all to $1,600. The note was made payable to Julia O'Brien, daughter of Dennis O'Brien, and by her later transferred to him. The note being past due and no part of the interest having been paid, O'Brien wrote Stewart that a settlement must be made. Stewart went to Alturas and met O'Brien, and it was agreed that Stewart and wife would convey the land to O'Brien in discharge of the note and mortgage and $5 in money. On December 22, 1915, the indebtedness amounted to $1,795. O'Brien paid Stewart $5 in money, surrendered the note to Stewart, and canceled the mortgage of record and by his direction Stewart and wife deeded the property to O'Brien's daughter, defendant, Mrs. Wyckliffe, the consideration being in fact $1,800, although the deed mentioned $10 as the consideration. Both O'Brien and his daughter, Mrs. Wyckliffe, testified that they knew nothing of Stewart's indebtedness to any person other than O'Brien, and that they had no intention of defrauding any creditor of Stewart. Mrs. Wyckliffe testified that she received the deed as a gift of the land from her father, and he testified that in other transactions he had made like gifts to others of his children, stating instances. Stewart testified that he made the transfer because he could not pay the principal or interest, and he wanted to avoid expense of foreclosure, and both he and O'Brien testified that they were acting in good faith, with no intention to hinder or delay or defraud other creditors. O'Brien testified that he believed he was making a fair settlement and allowing a fair value for the land. On his cross-examination, defendant John Stewart was asked the following questions:

"Now, you owed Mr. O'Brien $1,790 on the mortgage, so you sold your right of redemption in that land for $5, didn't you? A. I don't know what you call it, I just gave him the ranch to pay the mortgage, that was the only thing I done, I wanted to pay the mortgage."

O'Brien's testimony was that Stewart and wife conveyed the title to the land in consideration of $5 in money and the surrender of the note given by Stewart and wife and the cancellation of the mortgage. On cross-examination he testified:

"Q. Didn't you agree with John Stewart at the time this deed was made that he should remain in possession of the property a certain length of time? A. No, sir; we had no agreement at all about that."

Stewart testified, on cross-examination:

"Q. What was the arrangement between you and Dennis O'Brien by which you remained in possession of this property? A. There was no arrangement at all, only I turned the deed over to him. Q. You had been living on the property ever since? A. I rented it. Q. Where is your lease, if you rented it? A. Well, I guess it is right here. I think it is."

It appeared that some time after the deed was delivered Mrs. Wyckliffe leased the land to Stewart for the term of five years at the annual rental of $250. The lease contained the following provision:

"The said lessee, as the lessee, has the privilege of buying the above-described property at any time during the duration of this lease."

The testimony of the parties to the transfer of the premises was that the leasing of the property was arranged after the transfer of the title, and that there was no understanding as part of the transaction that Stewart was to have the property back on payment of the debt. Stewart testified that he wanted a place for his family while he was away at work in Nevada, and he turned the place over to his son, who paid the rent. Mrs. Wyckliffe testified that Mr. Stewart's son paid the rental. The testimony was that there was no definite agreement as to what Stewart was to pay in repurchasing the land. The matter seems to have been left as stated in the lease. The deed was acknowledged December 22, 1915, and was recorded December 24, 1915; the present action was commenced January 11, 1917.

The evidence in rebuttal consisted exclusively of testimony of the value of the land. On this question there was a conflict, but, as before remarked, there was sufficient to justify the finding of the court.

It remains to apply the law to the foregoing facts. While the complaint seems to combine charges of constructive fraud and actual fraud, the case was tried and decided, as the findings of fact show, upon the issue of actual fraud.

[1, 2] We had occasion to consider the question of constructive fraud in Hopkins v. White, 20 Cal. App. 234, 246, 128 Pac. 780, 785. We there said:

"In a case where constructive fraud is relied on, it is necessary to allege the fraudulent intent, under section 3442. Schell v. Gamble, 153 Cal. 448, 95 Pac. 870. It is only by reason of the proviso in that section that fraud becomes established constructively or as a matter of law. Cook v. Cockins, 117 Cal. 140, 48 Pac. 1025; Gray v. Brunold, 140 Cal. 615, 74 Pac. 303. Section 1573 of the Civil Code provides that constructive fraud is 'any such act or omission as the law specially declares to be fraudulent. The transfer of property with intent to delay or defraud creditors is declared by section 3439 of the Civil Code to be void as to creditors. But the intent in such a case is a question of fact, and is not to be presumed from the mere fact of the transfer, for section 3432 expressly provides that 'a debtor may pay one creditor in preference to another, or may give to one creditor security for the payment of his demand in preference to another.' McKee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 159 Cal. 206-217, 113 Pac. 140. It is only where the transfer is 'made or given voluntarily, or without a valuable consideration, by a party while insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency,' that the statute declares such transfer to 'be fraudulent and void as to existing creditors.' Civ. Code, § 3442."

[3, 4] In no legal sense can the deed in the instant case be said to have been made voluntarily. And we think it quite clear that it was supported by a valuable consideration. "A valuable consideration is such as money or the like, and the adequacy or inadequacy of the amount, or its disproportion to the actual value of the property, does not affect the * * * kind of consideration. The adequacy of the consideration is an element of the good faith of the transaction, and has no bearing upon whether the consideration is a valuable or good one." Lindley v. Blumberg, 7 Cal. App. 140, 147, 93 Pac. 894, 897, citing cases. Respondent contends that the words "valuable consideration," as found in section 3442 of the Civil Code, "could have but one meaning, and that was, a value commensurate with that of the property conveyed," citing Carter v. Richardson (Ky.) 60 S. W. 397. In that case the sale was for cash of a stock of sample goods for what the court felt authorized to assume was 50 per cent. of their value. The conduct of the vendor, at the time and immediately after receiving the pay check, together with other circumstances mentioned in the opinion, led the court to conclude that the consideration was not a "valuable" one. Among the circumstances, the court stated that the vendee learned of the fraudulent intention of the vendor shortly after delivering his check in payment, and had ample time to stop payment, but did not. A large part of the goods was new; the vendee had the invoices, showing values, before him. It was in view, we think, of the circumstances shown, as well as the fact that the purchase price was but 50 per cent. of the value, which led the court to say that the price was so inadequate as to "cause surprise, or warrant a suspicion of fraud or contrivance, on the part of the purchaser."

[5, 6] The deed being supported by a valuable consideration, the burden of showing that it was made with fraudulent intent was upon the plaintiff. Goldner v. Spencer, 163 Cal. 317, 125 Pac. 347. We are unable to discover sufficient evidence to justify the finding of fraudulent intent upon the part of Stewart and wife in making the deed. And there is not the slightest evidence tending to show that either O'Brien or his daughter, Mrs. Wyckliffe, knew of Stewart's insolvency, or that he was seeking to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors in making the deed. The intent of Stewart to prefer O'Brien as a creditor, if shown, would not be sufficient to justify the findings of the court, for it has frequently been held that a debtor may exercise a preference in the payment of creditors. It was essential to show that O'Brien and Mrs. Wyckliffe had actual knowledge of Stewart's insolvency and of his intention to defraud his creditors (Goldner v. Spencer, supra; Scholle v. Finnell, 167 Cal. 90, 138 Pac. 746), or that they had knowledge of facts sufficient to put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry.

[7] The rule as to inadequacy of consideration is variously stated in the books, but with substantial agreement:

"Proof of inadequacy of price is not alone sufficient to establish fraudulent intent on the part of the vendor, participated in by the vendee, which will invalidate the transaction, unless the inadequacy is so manifest as to shock the moral sense and create on its mere mention a suspicion of fraud. 12 R. C. L. 542. "Inadequacy of price may be evidence of fraud which, however, in order to avoid a deed, must be so glaring as to stamp the transaction with fraud and to shock the commonest sense of honesty, as coupled with such facts as that the vendor was illiterate, weak-minded, or in necessitous circumstances." 8 R. C. L. 963.

In support of the text, Feigley v. Feigley, 7 Md. 537, 61 Am. Dec. 375, 379, is cited. In that case there was no evidence in the record as to the fraudulent participation of the grantee of the deed other than the mere inadequacy of consideration contained in the deed. The consideration on which the deed rested was $200 while the property conveyed was estimated as worth $700 or $800. Said the court:

"It is not such glaring inadequacy as of itself to stamp the transaction with fraud, by shocking the common sense of honesty, and thereby render the deed void."

The rule stated in Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. XIV, p. 516, is as follows:

"Inadequacy of consideration where the vendor is greatly indebted is recognized as a mark of fraud, and while it is not of itself, unless very great, sufficient even as against creditors of an insolvent vendor to authorize the court to find fraud as a conclusion of law, it is one of the circumstances which may be considered by the jury in determining the question of fraud in fact, and may become a controlling force coupled with other circumstances tending to prove fraud."

[8] We do not think the disproportion alone of the price paid in the present case to the value of the property as found by the court is so great as to justify an inference that O'Brien or Mrs. Wyckliffe knew of or was put upon inquiry as to Stewart's insolvency, or that he intended by the conveyance to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors. There was no evidence that O'Brien knew or had reason to believe that he was getting property worth $5,000 for $1,800. His testimony was that he believed he was allowing a fair price for it. It would seem to us that before fraud should be imputed to him it should appear that he knew or had reason to believe that the consideration was grossly inadequate. Nor do we think that any of the circumstances shown attending the transfer were of a character calculated to arouse suspicion that fraud was intended. The circumstance, aside from inadequacy of price, relied upon by respondent is the fact that Stewart remained in possession under the lease above referred to, which is spoken of as a "secret arrangement" because not recorded. If as a condition to passing the title it had been agreed that Stewart was to remain in possession with the right to a reconveyance upon payment of the debt, it would have changed the complexion of the transaction, and would have amounted to no more than a mortgage. But there was no evidence that such was the case. The undisputed testimony was that the agreement to lease with the privilege of purchase was made after the sale, and had nothing to do with the transfer of the title. It is not reasonable, under the circumstances appearing, that O'Brien would have taken a deed which amounted to no more than a mortgage. It was perfectly legitimate for the grantee after absolute title passed to lease the land to Stewart or any one else with the privilege of purchase.

The finding, marked VII, that the only consideration paid Stewart for the conveyance was $5, and that said sum was received by him "for his equity of redemption in the said land," is wholly unsupported. The undisputed evidence was that Stewart received, not only $5 in money, but the discharge of his indebtedness to O'Brien. In the transaction nothing was said or done with reference to any equity of redemption.

We are unable to find in the record support of the findings of fraud, whether considered as constructive or actual.

The judgment is reversed.

MANFORD v. MEMIL SINGH. (Civ. 1910.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 17, 1919.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW § 204, 251—PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF CITIZENS—DUE PROCESS.

Const. art. 1, § 1, relating to inalienable rights, and section 13, relating to due process of law, prescribe nothing not contemplated by the federal Constitution, and in no degree enlarge or abridge the civil immunities of a citizen, nor operate to increase the authority of the legislative department of the state government.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT § 69—WAGES—STATUTORY REGULATION—VALIDITY.

Prompt payment of employes' wages, regulated by St. 1911, p. 1268, as amended by St. 1915, p. 299, is a matter within the police power of the Legislature, and the legislation is valid and applicable to corporations and to individuals who are employers.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by L. V. Manford against Memil Singh. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals on the judgment roll. Affirmed.

Claude F. Purkitt, of Willows, for appellant.

George R. Freeman, of Willows, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is on the judgment roll and involves the construction of "An act providing for the payment of wages," approved May 1, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1268), and the amendment thereof, approved April 28, 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 299). The question was carefully considered by this court in Moore v. Indian Spring Channel Gold Mining Co., 174 Pac. 378, and the legislation was upheld as within the constitutional authority of the lawmaking power. Therein many decisions are reviewed, and the reasons justifying such legislation are clearly stated. Our faith in the legal soundness of that decision has not been shaken, and its authority is of controlling force in the instant case.

[1] Appellant, however, contends that a distinction exists between a corporation and a natural person as to the operation of the law, which was not urged or considered in the Moore Case, and that, while the statute may be and is valid as to the former, it must fail when challenged by an individual as violative of his fundamental rights expressed in section 1, art 1 of our state Constitution as follows: "All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness"—and also section 13 of said article, " * * * nor be deprived of life, liberty of property without due process of law." It is claimed that due consideration of these primary maxims in connection with the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution will furnish protection to the individual employer against the application of the drastic penalty of said law. It is manifest, though, that as far as any substantial right or privilege of the citizen is concerned and the protection which must be accorded to it by the law, said provision of the state Constitution prescribes nothing that is not comprehended by said section of the federal Constitution. Of course, the sonorous phrasing of the inalienable rights of the individual in said section is felicitous and impressive, but it effects in no degree an enlargement or abridgment of the civil immunities of the citizen, nor does it operate to limit or increase the authority of the legislative department of the state government. And said section 13 is manifestly in scope and purpose identical with said provision of the federal Constitution. It may be said, therefore, that the principle of constitutional law invoked by appellant was the subject of earnest attention in the Moore Case, supra.

In support of his contention that such legislation may be upheld as against a corporation, but not against an individual, appellant cites the case of Leep v. St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern R. Co., 58 Ark. 407, 25 S. W. 75, 23 L. R. A. 264, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109, wherein the Supreme Court of Arkansas held that such legislation was valid as to a corporation by reason of the fact that under the act or charter of incorporation there was reserved the power in the Legislature to amend the corporate charter. It was concluded that in the case of a railroad company the Legislature in its wisdom, finding that "better servants and service could be secured by the prompt payment of their wages on the termination of their employment," and that thereby the legitimate purpose of the corporation would be promoted, might require the company to pay its employes at the termination of their employment, although such legislation might interfere with contracts purely and exclusively private. As against the railroad corporation the statute involved in that case was upheld for the reason stated, while it was declared to be unconstitutional as applied to the individual for the reason that it was an unwarranted interference with the constitutional right to make contracts.

The opinion discusses interestingly and persuasively the essential principles involved in such inquiry, and it is well worth careful consideration, although, manifestly, it is not of authority here. Moreover, there is to be said of the decision that the discussion as to the effect of the law upon natural persons was somewhat gratuitous, since the action was against a corporation solely. Besides, the statute therein construed differed materially from our law on the subject, in that it penalized the employer for discharging the employe either with or without cause, and by implication at least it denied the employer the ordinary defenses for the misconduct of the employe or his failure to comply with the terms of his contract. Under the peculiar terms of the statute of Arkansas it would not be surprising if the Supreme Court had declared it to be invalid even as against a corporation.

[2] But appellant concedes that our statute is within the sanction of the Constitution if it can be reasonably held that the prompt payment of employe's wages is a matter that affects the public generally and is within the police power of the Legislature. That suggests the very reason why such legislation is permissible, imposing, as it does, a certain limitation upon the right to contract.

This consideration is fully set forth in the Moore decision, supra, and there is no necessity for further specific attention to it.

We may add that, manifestly, the statute should have reasonable construction. Its design is to protect the employe and to promote the welfare of the community. Without defeating that purpose, it should be construed so as to hamper as little as possible the valuable right and privilege of making contracts. But it is to be observed that the most formidable objection to the statute derives its principal force from the supposed hardships of a hypothetical case wherein the employer is without fault or the employe is guilty of culpable conduct. The statute is not subject to such reproach. It contemplates that the penalty shall be enforced against an employer who is at fault. It must be shown that he owes the debt and refuses to pay it. He is not denied any legal defense to the validity of the claim. Indeed, the fullest right to contract as to payment is but slightly restricted, and an employer can easily provide in advance for the contingencies that may arise under the statute. If he refuses to pay what is due as therein provided, it is not unjust that he should be subjected to a penalty.

The judgment is affirmed.

CRAWFORD v. MEADOWS. (Civ. 2884.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 29, 1919. On Petition for Rehears, May 28, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court June 26, 1919.)

1. SALES ~~644~~480(4) — CONDITIONAL SALE — EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to establish conditional sale of automobile sought to be recovered by seller in claim and delivery.

2. SALES ~~644~~480(1)—CLAIM AND DELIVERY—CONDITIONAL SALES CONTRACT—DEFAULT.

Where automobile was delivered on express condition that title was not to pass until payment of at least $100, and default was made in payment, and automobile removed from county without seller's consent, seller could recover automobile in an action of claim and delivery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Harry J. Crawford against Rebecca Meadows, administratrix of the estate of Mobley Meadows, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Alfred M. MacDonald, Samuel J. Crawford, and John S. Cooper, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thomas A. Sanson and Duke Stone, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action in claim and delivery. Plaintiff alleged ownership of a certain automobile and the right of possession thereof in himself. This was denied by defendant. After trial judgment went for defendant. From that judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Appellant claims that "the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision" and that "the findings of fact do not justify the conclusions reached." The last contention need not be considered if the first is established. Primarily, at least, therefore, there is only one point made, viz., insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings.

Counsel admit and recognize the rule that, when there is any evidence to support the findings, this court will not disturb the judgment thereon. In this case, however, there is no conflict in the evidence as to the ownership and the right of possession to the said automobile at the time this action was commenced. Plaintiff's testimony shows clearly the ownership of the property and the right of possession thereof in himself at the time this action was commenced. Respondent has not pointed out to us any testimony which in the least conflicts therewith. Lest, however, an injustice might be done by respondent's failure to point out such testimony, if the record contained it, every member of this court has, regardless of the rule which makes such labor on our part unnecessary, read the entire record. It wholly fails to disclose anything derogatory to plaintiff's proven ownership and right of possession.

It was stipulated that plaintiff was the owner of the automobile in question on the 17th day of June, 1914. Plaintiff also testified, among other things, as follows:

"At the time this lease contract was signed, which bears date July 22d, the car belonged to me. It also belonged to me when it was changed from $100 to $800 in September, 1914. At the time the lease contract was changed in September, I had not received the purchase price."

There is absolutely nothing in the record which contradicts this, or which is in any way in conflict therewith.

We are satisfied that the findings are not supported by the evidence. In view of that fact, therefore, it is unnecessary to discuss the second proposition referred to above.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; SLOANE, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Respondent has petitioned for a rehearing on this appeal, and suggests that we have overlooked the contention of her counsel that there had been a completed sale and delivery by plaintiff of the automobile in question. This is precisely what we think the evidence failed to show.

The only evidence before the court as to the contract under which, if at all, respondent has any claim, was the written instrument itself and the testimony of plaintiff and his brother. It is admitted that, at the time the contract was entered into, plaintiff was the owner of the automobile. The contract in itself, which is in the form of a memorandum of lease, acknowledges that one Williams, under whom respondent claims, has hired the automobile from plaintiff; that Williams was to pay rental as follows: "$—— in advance this day 7—22—1914, and the further sum of $100.00, on the 22d day of each month thereafter, during the said term, until the full sum of $800.00 is paid;" that in case of default of any payment or removal of the property from Los Angeles county without written consent of the plaintiff, the latter would be entitled to retake possession of the machine; and "that under no conditions shall any title vest in the hirer." The uncontradicted testimony of both witnesses was that the consideration for this transaction was the transfer to plaintiff of certain equities in real estate and the payment of $100 for tires, and certain advances in money to meet required expenditures on or concerning the automobile; that all of this occurred before the delivery to Williams of the automobile, and on the express condition that no title was to pass until the $100 was paid, and until plaintiff had satisfied himself that the liabilities against the real property did not exceed a certain sum; that on the discovery, as claimed, that there were $700 of liabilities beyond the amount represented, this $700, by agreement with Williams, was added to the original $100 still owing, and the total amount named in the contract was raised from $100 to $800.

[1, 2] All the evidence as to the terms of the contract was to this effect. It clearly establishes a conditional sale contract. Even conceding that the alteration of the lease memorandum, by including the extra $700, was unwarranted, the original $100 still remains. Eliminating the $700, we have this situation: A conditional sale contract for a consideration, of which full payment was acknowledged, excepting $100, which the lessee agreed to pay, and the payment of which was a condition precedent to his obtaining title. There seems to be no question, under the evidence, that the automobile was delivered to Williams on the express condition that the title was not to pass until he paid, at least, this $100. The undisputed testimony is that this payment was never made, that defendant was in default, and that he had removed the property without plaintiff's consent from Los Angeles county. This gave to plaintiff his right of action to recover possession of the automobile.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MEYER et al. v. SULLIVAN et al.
(Civ. 2647.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 19, 1919. Rehearing Denied May 19, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court June 16, 1919.)

1. CUSTOMS AND USAGES ⇨15(1)—ACTION FOR FAILURE TO DELIVER—EXPLANATION OF CONTRACT.

In an action for failure to deliver wheat sold, evidence of usage and custom was properly considered by the trial court in determining the place of delivery of the wheat contemplated by the parties under the f. o. b. steamship clauses of the contracts.

2. SALES ⇨88—INTERPRETATION OF CONTRACT—PROVINCE OF COURT.

It was the province of the court to apply its knowledge, gained from the testimony of witnesses as to the meaning of "f. o. b." steamship, used in the contract of sale, breach of which was sued for, to the surrounding circumstances in which the parties were placed, and to find and determine what the term as used in the contract implied.

3. SALES ⇨79—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—F. O. B.

Generally, if the agreement is to sell goods "f. o. b." at a designated place, such place will ordinarily be regarded as the place of delivery, but the effect of the "f. o. b." depends on the connection in which it is used, and, if used in connection with words fixing price only, it will not be construed in fixing place of delivery.

4. SALES ⇨87(3)—CONTRACT—TERM AS REFERRING TO PRICE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for failure to deliver wheat sold, evidence held to support the trial court's finding that the term "$1.43½ per 100 lbs. f. o. b. Kosmos steamer at Seattle" referred to the price of the wheat and not to the place of delivery.

5. SALES ⇨87(1)—OBLIGATION OF SELLERS—TRANSFER OF GOODS—WAIVER.

The buyers of wheat free on board a steamship, if the sellers were obligated to transfer the wheat from the dock to the deck of the steamship, could waive such covenant for their benefit.

6. SALES ⇨172—IMPOSSIBILITY OF PERFORMANCE—WAR.

The sellers of wheat at a price f. o. b. the steamer of a certain line at a specified port were not released from liability to the buyers, nor the buyers from liability to them, because war conditions rendered it impossible to furnish a steamer of the line specified.

7. SALES ⇨418(2)—FAILURE TO DELIVER—DAMAGES—STATUTE.

In arriving at the amount of damages suffered by the buyers of wheat from the sellers' failure to deliver, the court properly considered the difference between the price agreed to be paid by the buyers and the market price, which might be taken as the value of the same wheat in the contemplated port of delivery during the month when delivery was called for; the excess of the value of the wheat to the buyers during such time over what would have been due to the sellers as the price being the detriment, under Civ. Code, § 3308, caused to the buyers by the sellers' breach.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by George H. C. Meyer and others against F. J. Sullivan and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment in the sum of $2,613.30, entered in favor of plaintiffs for damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of the breach of defendants to deliver a cargo of wheat to plaintiffs at Seattle during the month of September, 1914.

After negotiations between the parties looking to the purchase and sale of a quantity of wheat, the plaintiffs wrote to defendants two letters, which were as follows:

Friday.

Sept. Shipt. Received June 27, 1914.

Answered
Messrs. F. J. Sullivan & Co., 310 California St., City—Dear Sirs: It is hereby confirmed that you have sold us and that we have bought from you, two hundred and fifty (250) long tons of No. 1 white Walla Walla wheat, for shipment in September, doubtless early in September, from Seattle, in double bags, at one dollar forty-three and one-third cents ($1.43⅓) per 100 lbs. f. o. b. Kosmos steamer at Seattle, with the usual official certificate of the grain inspector to accompany the draft on us from the north.
We send you this in duplicate. Kindly return one copy to us with your signature.

The letters were duly received by the defendants, who thereupon indorsed their approval upon each of the letters as above appears, and each of the letters, containing the approval of the defendants indorsed thereon, was returned to, and duly received by, plaintiffs. On the respective dates of the letters, plaintiffs engaged space from the management of the Kosmos line, for the shipment of the wheat referred to, in the steamer of that company, leaving Seattle in September. This fact was not communicated to defendants by plaintiffs, but on July 20th defendants were directly informed by the Kosmos line that the wheat was to be taken on board the steamer Karnak; leaving Seattle in September, 1914. Plaintiffs at no time furnished, or designated, or named, any vessel or vessels, or any Kosmos steamer, at Seattle or elsewhere, on board which the wheat would be placed, loaded, or shipped, or to which said wheat should be delivered.

Subsequently, owing to the war conditions then prevailing, the Kosmos Line canceled their sailing schedule. On August 13th defendants notified plaintiffs of that fact and requested to know their position with regard to the two contracts for purchase of the wheat. Not receiving a reply to their communication, defendants wrote to plaintiffs again on August 22d, making similar request. In the meantime, wheat had advanced in price. On August 26th, not having replied to these letters, plaintiffs informed defendants that the wheat bought from them had been sold, on a c. i. f. basis, to a firm in Valparaiso, not at all desirous of canceling, but, on the contrary, desirous of more business, and requested that defendants make a proposition as favorable as the then higher market would permit, which plaintiffs might cable to its Valparaiso correspondent. This proposition was stated to be "a merely tentative idea advanced without prejudice, and not to be regarded as in any way affecting our (plaintiffs') rights in the premises." Defendants made no counter proposition for either compromise, or cancellation, in the matter, and on September 5th plaintiffs wrote defendants, stating they would require defendants to deliver the wheat, "in the manner customary on Puget Sound, viz., in warehouse there." Further details of the delivery were referred to in the letter. This communication was followed by another letter on September 8th, in which plaintiffs demanded that defendants deliver "the said 500 long tons in warehouse at Seattle." On September 16th defendants replied, and, referring to the previous letters from plaintiffs relative to delivery of the wheat, stated that, on account of the circumstances mentioned in the correspondence, they must decline to make delivery of the same. The receipt of this letter from the defendants was followed by two letters from plaintiffs, which were personally handed to defendants, demanding, respectively, the fulfillment of each of the contracts for sale of the wheat and suggesting that the delivery might be made to plaintiffs at the warehouse on Arlington dock, Seattle, as that was the usual pier at which the Kosmos steamer loaded, or, if more convenient to defendants, delivery might be made to plaintiffs at any other warehouse in Seattle harbor, where grain was customarily received and loaded on steamers. At the time of handing these letters to defendants, plaintiffs produced and tendered to defendants in gold coin the purchase price of the wheat referred to in the contracts, which tender the defendants declined and refused, basing their action in so doing solely upon the ground that no Kosmos steamer was available at Seattle upon which said wheat could be loaded. The refusal of the tender was followed by a letter dated the last day of September, delivered to plaintiffs, which was as follows:

September 30, 1914.

Messrs. Meyer, Wilson & Co., San Francisco, Calif.—Gentlemen: Referring to your letters of September 22, 1914, and your demand for a fulfillment of the contracts mentioned therein, we are now in a position to state positively that, owing to the fact that no Kosmos steamer has been available for shipment in September, we consider the said contracts as canceled.

Yours very truly,

F. J. Sullivan & Co.,

By F. J. S.

After notifying defendants that plaintiffs would hold them responsible in damages for failure to carry out the contracts, plaintiffs brought this action.

The sole issue on this appeal narrows down to an examination of the question: Were the defendants justified in refusing to deliver the wheat, solely upon the ground that no Kosmos steamer was available at Seattle during the month of September, upon which the wheat could be loaded? The answer to the question appears to depend upon the interpretation that shall be placed upon the language in the two contracts, "f. o. b. Kosmos steamer at Seattle."

Appellants contend that these words (the term, f. o. b., meaning "free on board") implied a condition as to the place of delivery of the wheat, and limited such delivery to the deck of a Kosmos steamer, and nowhere else; that, the limitation and condition being impossible of fulfillment, they were absolved from the contract. The trial court took the counter view of the respondents, and found that the f. o. b. clauses were used in connection with the price of the wheat, and not the place of delivery; that, in view of the established custom of the trade, prevailing on the Pacific Coast, and which was and is well known to the parties, the place of delivery contemplated by them was the Arlington dock in Seattle, the dock at which the Kosmos steamers customarily loaded, and not the deck of the vessel itself; that therefore plaintiffs' offer to receive the wheat at the dock, coupled with the tender of, and ability to make, full payment of the contract price, was sufficient and full compliance, on their part, of the contract. The court further found that, if the said clauses of the contracts implied any covenant on the part of the defendants to transfer the wheat from the dock to the deck of the vessel, such covenant was solely for the benefit of the plaintiffs, and could be waived by them.

In order to determine whether or not delivery was to be made on the deck of the Kosmos steamer, as contended for by defendants, or merely on the Arlington dock, in Seattle, as claimed by plaintiffs, the trial court admitted evidence of the nature of the transaction, and the usages and custom of the trade in such matters. Appellants vigorously attack the findings and conclusions of the court, and particularly its action in admitting testimony in proof of the custom of the trade.

[1] We are satisfied of the correctness of the trial court's findings in these matters. The fact that the parties to this action have come to such a vigorous disagreement over the meaning of the terms of the contracts is some indication that the court might be compelled to look to other sources of information than the contracts themselves in order to arrive at a proper interpretation of the disputed point. That the evidence of usage and custom was properly considered by the trial court in determining the place of delivery of the wheat contemplated by the parties under the f. o. b. clauses of the contracts is borne out by the authorities. Cowas-Jee v. Thompson, 5 Moore P. C. 165, 13 Eng. Reps. 454; Stock v. Inglis, 5 Asp. M. C. 294; George v. Glass, 14 U. Can. Q. B. 514; Marshall v. Jamieson, 42 U. Can. Q. B. 115.

The admitted evidence fully supports the court's finding that it was and is a general custom, among buyers, sellers, and shippers of wheat in the city of Seattle, and in the city of San Francisco, and, generally, in Pacific Coast ports, "under contracts for the sale of wheat f. o. b. steamer, or f. o. b. designated steamer, for the seller to deliver, and for the buyer to receive and accept, the wheat upon the dock alongside of ship's tackle."

R. D. Girvin, a grain merchant on the Pacific Coast for 35 years testified that, by sale of grain "f. o. b. steamer," the obligation of the seller is to deliver the grain to the buyer, free of cost, at the ship's tackle, that is, delivery at ship's side ready to be hoisted into the vessel, and not that the seller has to put it on board the vessel. Otto Hillefeld, shipping agent and grain broker on the Pacific Coast for 16 years, testified that, under a contract of sale "f. o. b. steamer," the custom is for the seller to deliver the goods to the dock, and that neither the buyer nor the seller delivers the goods on the steamer; that the steamship company issues a receipt therefor, and the cost of taking the goods from the ship's tackle, or from the dock, into the steamer is borne by the steamship company, and the dock is the point at which the buyer receives the goods from the seller. R. D. Bird, freight agent, engaged in the business of shipping and the operation of steamers on the Pacific Coast for many years, testified that it is a universal rule, and the custom, to take delivery on the dock. Other witnesses, including a general agent of the Kosmos Line, testified that the shipper had nothing whatever to do with loading the cargo from the dock into the vessel; that work being done by the vessel, or the vessel's agents.

The witnesses on the part of the defendants testified as to the use of the terms f. o. b. and "f. a. s." (free-along-side) in contracts. The evidence discloses that contracts might be made, between buyer and seller, using either of these terms, although sales f. a. s. seem to be of infrequent occurrence, and not readily made in the community. In both f. a. s. sales and f. o. b. sales, however, the seller of the goods pays the cost of all handling on the dock; and the cost of stevedoring, or transferring the cargo from the dock to the ship, is paid and absorbed by the shipowner from the freight, which in turn is paid by the buyer. The only distinction between the two kinds of sales appears to be as to the time when the responsibility of the seller ends. In the case of f. a. s. sales, it seems to end with delivery on the dock. In the case of f. o. b. sales, the responsibility of the seller appears to end when the commodity is on board ship. The element of cost, to either buyer or seller, does not appear to enter into the matter at all.

[2-4] It was the province of the trial court to apply the knowledge, gained from the testimony of these witnesses, to the surrounding circumstances in which the parties were placed, and to find and determine what the term "f. o. b. Kosmos steamer at Seattle," as used in the contracts, implied. It duly determined that it was used therein in connection with the price of the grain only, and not as fixing the exact place at which it should be delivered. In arriving at this conclusion, the trial court was assisted by the position of the clause in the contracts, used, as it was, in connection with the words fixing the price of the wheat sold. The general rule seems to be that—

"If the agreement is to sell goods 'f. o. b.' at a designated place, such place will ordinarily be regarded as the place of delivery; but the effect of the 'f. o. b.' depends on the connection in which it is used and if used in connection with the words fixing the price only it will not be construed as fixing the place of delivery." 35 Cyc. 174; Neimeyer Lumber Co. v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 54 Neb. 321, 74 N. W. 670, 40 L. R. A. 534; Burton et al. v. Nacogdoches Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 161 S. W. 25.

In Dannemiller v. Kirkpatrick, 201 Pa. 218, 50 Atl. 928, the contract read: "Bill the cargo of coffee 'at the same price, f. o. b. Pittsburgh.'" It was held that whether or not delivery was to be made at Pittsburgh was a question of fact. To like effect are Consolidated Coal Co. v. Schneider, 163 Ill. 393, 45 N. E. 126; Davis v. Alpha Portland Cement Co. (C. C.) 134 Fed. 274; U. S. Smelting Co. v. American Galvanizing Co. (D. C.) 236 Fed. 596. These authorities seem to firmly establish the rule that the f. o. b. clause may be used solely with reference to the price. The finding of the court that the term "$1.43½ per 100 lbs. f. o. b. Kosmos steamer, Seattle," in one contract, and the like clause in the other, as between plaintiffs and defendants, must be held to refer to the price and not to the place of delivery, seems to us to be fully supported by the testimony.

[5] Appellants attack the court's finding on the second point, which is that even if it be assumed that defendants had agreed and were obligated by the contracts, to transfer the wheat from the dock in Seattle to the deck of the Kosmos vessel, that this provision was in the nature of a covenant for the benefit of the plaintiffs, which they could, and did, waive. This finding, we believe, should also be upheld. Neill v. Whitworth, 18 C. B. (N. S.) 435, 144 Eng. Reps. 513. Paraphrasing the language of the case just cited, we cannot see how it can be of any importance to the defendants whether they delivered the wheat on the Arlington, or some other dock in Seattle, as directed by plaintiffs, or on board a Kosmos steamer, provided such delivery did not impose on them any additional expense or undue delay. It seems to be clear to us that, even if the contracts so implied, it was a stipulation inserted for the benefit of the vendees, which they could, and under the facts of this case did, waive. That a party to a contract may waive a provision intended for his benefit, see Ellsworth v. Knowles, 8 Cal. App. 630, 97 Pac. 690. Counsel for both sides discuss in their briefs a recent case bearing upon the subject of the waiver of a covenant similar to the one under consideration here, to wit: Comyn & Mackel v. Douglas Fir Exploitation & Export Co., in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, October 21, 1918. In that case the contract was for the sale of four cargoes of lumber. The vessels on which the cargoes were to be shipped were designated, and the further stipulation of the contract was:

"Delivery f. o. b. mill wharf, Knappton, within reach of vessel's tackles and/or on barges A. S. T. (at ship's tackles), mill wharf, Knappton, Washington."

One of the vessels, the W. H. Marston, never came to Knappton. The seller claimed that this was a breach of condition precedent, and that the buyer could not claim the right of delivery on barges, or at the dock, as the contract contemplated the presence of the vessel, W. H. Marston, ready to receive the lumber, in order to bind the seller to the obligation to deliver. Mr. Justice Van Fleet held that the provision, as to the lumber being delivered convenient to the ship's tackle was for the benefit of the purchaser, which he could waive, and was not one on which the defendant might rely.

[6] Defendants contend that both buyers and sellers were excused from performance of the contracts, by reason of the fact that war conditions rendered the contemplated means of performance unavailable; that is, because it was impossible to furnish a Kosmos steamer, both parties were released from all liability in the matter. We cannot agree with such contention. It is admitted that the plaintiffs were at all times ready, willing, and able, and attempted, to perform their part of the contract. There is no showing but that defendants were fully able to deliver the wheat contracted for, and as directed by the plaintiffs, at the place designated.

[7] In arriving at the amount of damages suffered by the plaintiffs, by reason of the breach of the contract, it was proper for the court to take into consideration the difference between the contract price agreed to be paid for the wheat by plaintiffs, and the market price, which may be taken as the value, of the same wheat in Seattle, during the month of September, 1914. The excess of the value of said wheat to the plaintiffs during that time, over and above the amount which would have been due to the defendants under the contract as the purchase price thereof, if it had been fulfilled, was the detriment caused by the breach of the defendants' agreement to deliver. Section 3308, Civ. Code.

We have considered the other points made by the appellants and have examined many cases cited in their briefs. We see no merit in the points presented on this appeal. Neither do we feel justified in attempting to distinguish the many cases cited by appellants. They are not sufficient, in our judgment, to overturn the legal conclusions arrived at by the trial court on the facts of this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KEIRIGAN, J.

BAKERSFIELD IMPROVEMENT CO. v. BAKERSFIELD THEATER CO. et al.
(Civ. 2760.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 18, 1919.)

1. PROCESS ☞59 — PARTIES NOT SERVED WITH PROCESS.

In action against corporation and two individuals, sureties on its bond, on their joint and several liability, where corporation was never served with summons and did not appear, Code Civ. Proc. § 414, providing that, where summons is served on one or more, plaintiff may proceed against the defendants served as if they were the only defendants, applies.

2. JUDGMENT ☞240 — SEVERAL LIABILITY —SEVERAL JUDGMENT.

Where there is a several liability, the court may render a several judgment against any defendant without regard to the liability of any other defendant.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ☞184(1)—SURETY BOND FOR PAYMENT OF RENT—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR EXECUTING BOND.

Where plaintiff's lease to defendant corporation, dated August 7, 1913, was not to begin until July 1, 1914, and required a bond to secure rent to be executed on or before January 1, 1914, and made a bond a condition precedent to taking effect of lease, a bond executed March 27, 1914, was good, as lessor might enlarge time for giving bond.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ☞184(1)—SURETY BOND TO SECURE RENT—CONSIDERATION.

Consideration for such bond was execution and delivery of lease.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ☞184(1)—OPERATION OF LEASE—"CONDITION PRECEDENT."

The parties did not intend that such lease should go into effect when it was signed, but it was not to go into effect until all conditions precedent were performed by lessee; a "condition precedent" being one which must be performed in order to have any rights vest.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Condition Precedent.]

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ☞184(1)—CONDITIONS OF LEASE—CONSTRUCTION.

The provision did not limit or enlarge rights of lessor or lessee, as, regardless of such provision, the agreement to provide security was a condition and not a covenant, permitting lessor to insist upon performance of condition or to waive it.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the Bakersfield Improvement Company against the Bakersfield Theater Company and F. A. Giese and Irving C. Ackerman as its sureties. Judgment for plaintiff against defendants Giese and Ackerman, and Ackerman appeals. Affirmed.

Leon E. Morris, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Purcell Rowe, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant Irving C. Ackerman from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $3,000 against him and the defendant F. A. Giese, as sureties for the payment of rent under a lease in which the defendant corporation was the lessee.

[1, 2] Appellant contends, first, that, as the corporation defendant was never served with summons and did not appear, the action was never at issue and a trial was improper. The action was prosecuted against the several defendants upon their joint and several liability. Section 414, Code of Civil Procedure, applies to such a situation, and provides that, when summons is served on one or more, the plaintiff may proceed against the defendants served in the same manner as if they were the only defendants. Where there is a several liability, the court has a right to render a several judgment against any defendant, without regard to the liability of any other defendant. Anderson v. Nawa, 25 Cal. App. 151, 156, 157, 143 Pac. 555.

[3, 4] The appellant next presents the argument that the bond was given without consideration, and relies for this contention upon the following facts: The lease between the plaintiff and the corporation defendant was dated August 7, 1913. It provided that a bond should be executed on or before January 1, 1914, guaranteeing the payment of the rent thereunder. The term of the lease was not to begin until July 1, 1914. It was provided in the lease that the execution and delivery of the bond should, at the option of the lessor, be a condition precedent to the taking effect of the lease. The bond was not executed on January 1st. The bond in suit, in accordance with the requirements of the lease and in terms referring to the lease and guaranteeing its performance, was executed on March 27, 1914. The appellant insists that, as the bond was not executed contemporaneously with the lease, it required an independent consideration. Counsel for appellant admits that under the rule laid down in the case of Stroud v. Thomas, 139 Cal. 275, 72 Pac. 1008, 96 Am. St. Rep. 111, the execution of the lease would furnish a good consideration for the bond, even though they were not executed contemporaneously, where the lease itself, as in this case, provides for the execution of the bond at some future time. In order, however, to escape the operation of this rule, counsel urges that there was a special time limit placed upon the lessee within which to give the bond, and that, if it was not executed within that time, the privilege of exacting the bond came to an end, and the lessor was compelled either to avoid the lease under its option or to permit it to become effective without the giving of the bond. And this places counsel in a position where he must insist—as indeed he does—that the lessor could not enlarge the time for the giving of the bond, and could not indulge the lessee in further time without sacrificing his substantial rights.

The provision requiring a bond was clearly for the benefit of the lessor; the lessee was not to be given possession under the lease until six months after the time originally provided for the giving of the bond, and we know of no rule of law which would prevent the lessor from extending the time for the giving of the bond. It appears this was what was done in the present case. Under the lease, the Bakersfield Theater Company went into possession of the premises on July 1, 1914; the bond guaranteeing the payment of the rent having been executed and delivered prior thereto, to wit, March 27, 1914. This was the bond required by the lease, and the consideration therefor was the execution and delivery of the lease. While it is true that the lease provides that the bond shall be given on or before January 1, 1914, time was not made of the essence of the contract, and the lease does not provide at what date the option of the lessor to make the giving of the bond a condition precedent to the taking effect of the lease must be exercised. No time being provided within which this option might be exercised, it will be presumed that it was to be exercised within a reasonable time. Therefore it would seem that the lessor might be indulgent with the lessee in the matter of extending his time without waiving the option reserved to the lessor. The trial court found that the bond was executed and delivered for a good and valuable consideration, to wit, the execution and delivery of the lease, and that the plaintiff did not, prior to the execution and delivery of the bond to it, waive any of its rights or any option secured to it under said lease, and that said lease did not become binding and effective as an agreement between the parties until the execution and delivery of the bond. We think these findings are sustained by the evidence.

[5] Furthermore, and approaching the matter from another angle: It appears to us, from an examination of the entire lease, that the lease was never intended by the parties to go into effect until the various conditions precedent provided therein had either been fulfilled by the lessee or waived by the lessor. There was no oral evidence offered in the trial court, and we have before us for consideration merely the written instruments involved in the controversy. The lease provides that the execution of the bond shall be a condition precedent, at the option of the lessor, to the lease taking effect. It also provides that the expenditure of a certain sum of money by the lessee upon the premises for lights, display signs, etc., shall at the option of the lessor be a condition precedent to the lease taking effect. These provisions indicate to our minds that the parties did not intend the lease to go into effect at the time it was signed. A condition precedent is one which must be performed in order to have any rights vest. The lease, then, did not go into effect, and the lessee had no rights in the premises, until all conditions precedent to be performed by it had been performed or waived.

[6] The condition in the lease regarding the bond is as follows:

"It is further agreed that the second party will execute and deliver to the first party on or before the 1st day of January, 1914, a good and sufficient undertaking, with two or more sureties satisfactory to the first party, in the sum of three thousand dollars, conditioned for the payment of the rent hereinbefore reserved, and for the performance of the other covenants in this lease specified to be performed by said second party."

However, the appellant contends that the words which follow the above-quoted condition, and which read:

"The executing and delivery of said bond as is herein provided for, shall at the option of the first party be a condition precedent to this lease taking effect" —limit and restrict the rights of the lessor in some way so as to put upon said lessor the duty of taking some affirmative action, failing in which he must give up the right to insist upon the condition. We think that this last-quoted sentence neither limited nor enlarged the rights of the lessor or the lessee, for even without the express stipulation that this agreement should be a condition precedent, such an agreement to provide security for the payment of the rent stipulated in the lease is a condition and not a covenant. Knight v. Black, 19 Cal. App. 518, 126 Pac. 512.

"There is a decided distinction between the creation and effect of a condition and a covenant. * * * A breach of a condition upon which an estate is granted works a forfeiture of the estate, while a breach of a covenant is merely ground for a recovery of damages." Knight v. Black, supra.

In view of the right given by the law to insist upon the performance of the condition, and in view of the further right given by the law to the lessor to waive this condition if he so desired, this sentence expresses nothing more than what the law would imply, viz., that the lessor might insist upon the performance of the condition, but that he might waive that condition if he wished. This being true, the burden is upon the defendant and appellant here to show such waiver. He has not shown it. On the contrary, it appears that the defendant executed and delivered a bond to secure the payment of the rent to become due under the lease, and that the lease went into effect at the commencement of the term thereof. This bond is the one originally provided for, and has the same force and effect as if given at the time originally contemplated by the parties. This being true, the bond relates back to and takes effect in pursuance of the original agreement, and is supported by the original consideration. Stroud v. Thomas, 139 Cal. 274, 72 Pac. 1008, 96 Am. St. Rep. 111.

The judgment is affirmed.
